incorporates judicial decisions also. The present Act is only a consolidating Act as it purports to be. So common law rights are not affected.

The Act does not contemplate applications by the father at all, see section 19.

[WALLIS, C. J.—The power of the Court under the Act must be taken to prevail over the rights of any decree-holder in a suit in the Munsif's Court.]

No Court will appoint any one else as guardian when there is a father, unless the father is not eligible.

Suits for the custody of a minor are recognised and exempted from the operation of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. See Exempted Suits, Article 37.

See also Trevelyan on Minors, p. 189.

Section 25 makes no mention of the father.

[Mr. Krishna Iyer.—Dayabhai Raghunathdas v. Bai Parvati (6), says that the father can apply.]

The Act applies only to persons appointed by Court.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Sections 20, 21, etc., seem to apply equally to a natural guardian.]

The scheme of the Act indicates that the father's power is absolute and cannot be inquired into.

Even assuming that the Act applies to the father, the common law right of suit is not taken away by it. In England the action of trespass still subsists even though a writ of habeas corpus is the easier remedy and more resorted to: Queen v. Clarke (17), Dominus Rex v. Smith (18). Sharifa v. Mune Khan (7) follows these two cases. Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas(8) followed in Mathuraban v. Tewary (19). Bacon, Volume III, page 405.

See section 52 of the Act.

See also section 1 of the Act of 1861.

A father cannot get any relief under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act, which imposes certain conditions on the guardian. For a father will not be asked to submit to such conditions merely because a Court intervenes.

[WALLIS, C. J.—We must take it that the Act which applies to all guardians applies also to the chief guardian of all, the father.]

At most that is only a cumulative right and a suit to recover custody is different from a suit for declaration as in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2). See at page 822.* Compare Order XXI, rule 100, and the independent right of suit.

Mr. F. G. Krishna Aiyar, in reply.—Guardians in the Act include a de facto guardian like the father, see Wallace Sitha Boi v. Wallace Radha Boi (20). The procedure under the Act is not strictly summary except that it is by petition. If a suit is allowed, then a deadlock is likely to ensue by a possible conflict of decisions. The suit in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) was for the recovery of custody of children. Act IX of 1887 was passed while the enabling Act of 1861 was in force. Act VIII of 1890 consolidates all the Statute Law on the subject and so Act IX of 1887 cannot be read so as to conflict with Act VIII of 1890. It may be that section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act does not refer to a father as it speaks of appointment, but section 25 clearly refers to a father as well.

The procedure under section 25 is far from being summary, see the elaborate details set out in the rest of the Act; so the comparison with the face of an application under Order XXI, rule 100, is not appropriate.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—British Courts in India appear from the outset to have considered the right of the father or other persons entitled to the custody of a minor to be a civil right and enforceable as such by suit in a Civil Court. That this was a well-known kind of suit appears from the Guardians and Wards Act, IX of 1861, which recited that it was expedient to amend the law for hearing suits relative to the custody and guardianship of minors, and provided that applications might be made by petition to the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the District by which such application, if preferred in the form of a regular suit, would be cognizable.

It was first held in Calcutta that the right of civil suit was taken away by this Act, Huro Soondaree Boistobee v. Joy Doorga Boistobee (12). No reasons were given for the decision, and the case was not followed in Brohmomoyee v. Kashi Chunder Sen (21). In Krishna v. Reade (11) this Court also held that the right of suit was not taken away by the Act of 1861, and this view is supported to some extent by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, which included in the schedule of suits excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court—"Article 37. A suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, for the recovery of a wife, for the custody of a minor or for a divorce." Act IX of 1861 and a large number of enactments relating to the guardianship of minors' property were repealed and re-enacted with modifications by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. It did not purport to be a codifying but a consolidating Act, which is a very different thing, and did not, as far as I can see, make any very material alterations in the provisions of Act IX of 1861 as to the guardianship of the person. It was held, however, in Sham Lal v. Bindo (3) to have been a codifying Act and to have taken away the right of proceeding by regular suit in Civil Courts to recover the custody of minors. A different view was taken in Sharifa v. Mune Khan (7), where, however, the point was not considered to be free from doubt. Then came the decision of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2). The plaintiff in that case had filed a suit in the District Court of Chingleput against the defendant, Mrs. Besant, who resided within that jurisdiction, for declarations that he was entitled to the guardianship and custody of his two minor sons, and that the defendant was not entitled and was in any case unfit to have the charge and guardianship of the minors, and for a direction to the defendant to hand them over to him or to such person as the Court might think fit. The minors, one of whom was nearly eighteen, were residing and being educated in England at the date of the suit.

The Privy Council held that the suit, which was a suit to recover the custody of the infants, did not lie in the District Court, and observed: "The District Court in which the suit was instituted had no jurisdiction over the infants except such jurisdiction as was conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890". The question for decision was whether a civil suit not under the Guardians and Wards Act would lie in the Civil Court. The Privy Council held that it would not, and assigned as the sole but sufficient reason for so holding the fact that the District Court had no jurisdiction in the case except under the Guardians and Wards Act. This I feel bound to construe as a ruling that the jurisdiction conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act was exclusive, and that the right of proceeding independently by civil suit no longer existed. The suit having been held incompetent, their Lordships proceeded to consider whether the proceedings could be supported if treated as proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act, and held they could not, because the minors were not resident in the district where the proceedings were instituted. If the jurisdiction of the District Court to entertain suits of this character not governed by the Guardians and Wards Act had been recognised as still existing to any extent, it would have been necessary to assign reasons for holding that it was inapplicable in the circumstances of the case. The judgment did not do so, but dismissed the suit simply on the ground that the Court had now no jurisdiction except under the Act. If this is the position of the District Court, the position of the District Munsif's Court must be the same. In Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chinanlal Parbhudas (8) it was no doubt held that the judgment of the Privy Council has not this effect, but no reasons were given for that decision, and I have been unable to find any which are satisfactory to my mind. I would answer the question in the negative.

AYLING, J.—I agree. The judgment of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) appears to me to be open to no other construction.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree and for the same reasons.

Answered in the negative.

UMAR BAKHSH v. SOHNE KHAN.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 152 OF 1915.

February 27, 1919.

Present—Mr. Justice Shadi Lal and
Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

UMAR BAKHSH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

SOHNE KHAN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Adoption—Daughter's son, whether can be adopted—Ghorewaha Rajputs of Garhshankar Tahsil, Hoshiarpur District—Riwaj-i-am, entry in, value of.

A Ghorewaha Rajput of the Garhshankar Tahsil in the Hoshiarpur District is authorised by custom to adopt his daughter's son.

The entry in the riwaj-i-am of the Hoshiarpur District prepared at the last Settlement stating that there is no custom of adoption among the Rajputs of the Garhshankar Tahsil, is not a correct statement of the custom on the subject.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 26th October 1914.

Dr. Shuja-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Sohne Khan, a Ghorewaha Rajput of the Garhshankar Tahsil in the Hoshiarpur District, adopted his daughter's son Ghulam Rasul, who is himself a Ghorewaha Rajput. The learned District Judge, concurring with the Subordinate Judge, has decided in favour of the factum and the validity of the adoption; and the sole question, which arises upon the certificate granted by him, is whether a Ghorewaha Rajput is authorized by custom to adopt his daughter's son. The appellants, who are the first cousins of Sohne Khan, place their sole reliance upon an entry in the riwaj i-am prepared at the last Settlement, when the Rajputs of Tahsil Garhshankar stated that among them there was no custom authorising adoption. The Settlement Officer, who compiled the riwaj-i am, however, expressed his opinion that the denial by the Rajputs of the Garhshankar Tahsil as to the custom of adoption was not borne out by the exceptions quoted, and we find that there were, at any rate, two instances of the adoption of daughter's sons among the Muhammadan Rajputs of Mauza Kathgarh of Tahsil Garhshankar; vide Humphrey's Customary Law of the Hoshiarpur District, pages 147 and 186. It is to be observed that a Division Bench of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 1229 of 1910 [Rahmat Khan v. Bisan (1)], while dealing with an entry in the riwaj i-am of Garhshankar Tahsil excluding daughter and daughter's son from inheritance to ancestral estate in the presence of collaterals more distantly related than the 7th degree, expressed an opinion that the riwaj-i-am was not entitled to any weight.

So far as the question of the existence of the custom of adoption among the Ghorewaha Rajputs is concerned, we have a direct authority to the effect that such a custom does exist. In Ajhey Khan v. Bhambu Khan (2) this Court after an exhaustive enquiry came to the conclusion that a Ghorewaha Rajput of Garhshankar Tahsil was authorized by custom to make a gift of his ancestral estate to his sister's grandson whom he had brought up as a son. The judgment refers to instances of adoption among the members of the tribe, and the same remark applies to the judgment in Moula Baksh v. Hame Khan (3), which relates to the custom of adoption among the Ghorewaha Rajputs of the Jullundur District. These two judgments have never been dissented from; indeed they have been cited with approval in Karim Bakhsh v. Fatta (4) and Sultan Bakhsh v. Musammat Mahian (5).

The learned Counsel for the appellants is unable to cite a single instance, judicial or otherwise, in support of the contention that the custom of adoption does not exist among the Ghorewaha Rajputs. In view of the previous rulings of this Court and the instances referred to above, we are unable to accept the entry in the riwaj-i-am as a correct statement of the custom on the subject. We accordingly endorse the decision of the Courts below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 54—Appeal to High Court from award—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 156, scope of—"Appeal under Code of Civil Procedure," meaning of.

Article 156 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to appeals preferred to the High Court under section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act. [p. 407, col. 2.]

The expression 'an appeal under the Civil Procedure Code' is not restricted to an appeal the right to prefer which is conferred by the Code of Civil Procedure. It means an appeal the procedure with respect to which from its inception is governed by the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 406, col. 2.]

Scope of Article 156 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act explained. [p. 406, col. 2; p. 407, col. 1.]

Appeal against the award of the District Court, Madura dated the 31st December 1915, in Original Petitions Nos. 353 of 1914 and 211 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar (with him Messrs. M. S. Mohidin, K. S. Jayarama Aiyar and B. Panchapagesa Sastri), for the Appellants.—The right of appeal in the present case is one conferred by section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act and not otherwise. See Rangoon Botatoung Company Limited v. Collector, Rangoon (1), Special Officer, Salsette Building Sites v. Dasabhai Bezanji (2), Mulambath Kunhammad v. Acharath Parakat (3), Manavikraman Tirumalpad v. Collector of Nilgiris (4) Article 156 applies only to appeals "under" the Civil Procedure Code, that is, where the right of appeal is conferred by the Code. Section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code confers rights of appeals from "decrees." The adjudication in question in this appeal is only an award and not "a decree or judgment or order." See Secretary of State for India v. Chelikani Rama Rao (5). Section 54 incorporates certain provisions only of the Code. See Manavikraman Tirumalpad v. Collector of Nilgiris (4). The word "under" means "conferred by." Compare Articles 1, 34, 33, 35 and 179 of the Limitation Act.

As regards rights of appeal under various Acts of the Legislature, compare Provincial Insolvency Act, section 46; Madras Estates Land Act, sections 191, 192; Probate and Administration Act, sections 86, 83; Indian Companies Act, section 202; Divorce Act, section 55; Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, section 8; Bombay Act IV of 1888, section 3; Bengal Act XVIII of 1911, section 6.

The Advocate General, Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him the Government Pleader), for the Respondent.—The word "under" means only "preferred under." The right of appeal is a substantive right and may be conferred by various enactments, but the procedure regulating such appeals when preferred is what is referred to in Article 156. The conditions of Order XLI, rule 1, are all satisfied in the present case and the procedure in appeal has been held to be that given in the Code and in the rules to be framed by the High Court under the Code.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—Section 55 of the Land Acquisition Act gives rule-making powers which are perhaps intended to be utilised for the purposes.]

That is obviously for a different purpose. The section refers to officers, etc. Section 54 has been fully construed in Manavikraman Tirumalpad v. Collector of Nilgiris (4). For the purpose of an appeal to the High Court, that decision concedes a regular appeal governed by the Code, but not for any further litigation.

Article 156, therefore, applies. See Aga Mahomed Hamadani v. Cohen (6). Compare section 3 of the Limitation Act which speaks of "appeals preferred." See also section 29.

Under the Probate and Administration Act a right of appeal is given, but the procedure regulating the appeal is that given in the Code. See also the Indian Succession Act.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, in rely.—The terms of section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act are sufficiently comprehensive and must be carried into effect. A decision under the Act is not a decree nor is it executable as a decree. It must be executed in conformity with section 54 alone. The Bombay Improvement Act contains express provisions.

Under the Probate and Administration Act as also under the Indian Succession Act, every matter that is contested is a suit and every adjudication is a decree within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. So there is a difference.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an award of the District Judge of Madura in certain land acquisition proceedings, and the preliminary question is whether Article 156 of the Limitation Act applies. The Court-fees were paid on the memo. of appeal one year and 149 days out of time, and if Article 156 applies, the appeal would be barred. The question is of first impression and cannot be said to be quite free from difficulty. The Land Acquisition Act gives a right to appeal by section 54, which lays down, "subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals from original decrees, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the award or from any part of the award of the Court in any proceedings under that Act." There is no special period of limitation provided in the Land Acquisition Act, nor is there any allusion, unless it be by implication of this very section, to the Limitation Act. Article 156 of the Limitation Act provides a period of 90 days for 'appeal under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to a High Court, except in the cases provided for by Article 151 and Article 153,' the time to run from 'the date of decree or order appealed from.' The argument on behalf of the appellant is that you must read the 1st column of the article as meaning that the appeals provided for here are those the right to which is conferred by the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is contended that this interpretation is strengthened by the language of column 3. There is no direct authority on the point. There is, however, a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Aga Mahomed Hamadani v. Cohen (6), the reasoning of the decision in which seems to apply to the present question. There the objection was raised with reference to an appeal provided for under the Burma Courts Act, XVII of 1875. Section 49 of that Act provided for an appeal to the High Court of Calcutta in cases where the amount of value of the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 3,000 and was less than Rs. 10,000. Wilson and Porter, JJ., interpreted the words 'appeals under the Code of Civil Procedure' in Article 156 of the Limitation Act, as meaning appeals the procedure in respect of which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code. They say: "The Limitation Act, Schedule II, Article 156, when it speaks of the Civil Procedure Code, is, on the face of it, speaking of a Code which relates to procedure and does not ordinarily deal with substantive rights; and the natural meaning of an appeal under the Civil Procedure Code appears to us to be an appeal governed by the Code of Civil Procedure so far as procedure is concerned." It seems to us that this is the correct interpretation of Article 156. There seems to be no good reason for saying that an appeal under the Civil Procedure Code means only an appeal the right to prefer which is conferred by the Code itself. On the other hand, it would not be straining the language of the article too much to hold that an appeal the procedure with respect to which from its inception to its disposal is governed by the Civil Procedure Code, may rightly be spoken of as an appeal under the Code: this interpretation seems to us to be strengthened by the reference in Article 156 itself to Article 151 of the same Schedule. Article 151 provides for appeals from a decree or order of the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction. Now though the right to appeal from such decrees or orders is not given by the Code of Civil Procedure, but by the Letters Patent, yet Article 156 speaks of such appeals as appeals under the Civil Procedure Code. That also tends to show that what is meant by the Legislature is appeals the hearing and disposal of which is governed by the rules of procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code,

As regards column 3 there can be no doubt, after the decision of the Privy Council in Rangoon Botatoung Company Limited v. Collector, Rangoon (1), that an award under the Land Acquisition Act is not a decree passed in the ordinary jurisdiction of a Civil Court. But their Lordships themselves point out in that case that appeals from awards as provided for in section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act are governed as to their procedure from the date of the filing of the appeal to its disposal by the rules provided for in the Civil Procedure Code, and in a Letters Patent Appeal in this Court in Manavikraman Tirumalpad v. Collector of Nilgiris (4) it has been held that section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code applies. Though the award of the Land Acquisition Judge is not a decree or order for purposes of further appeal from the decision of the High Court in appeal, nevertheless the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code with reference to appeals from original decrees which is also made applicable to appeals from orders by rule 2 of Order XLIII, Civil Procedure Code, governs appeals under section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, although in the rules the word "decree" is used. It is to be pointed out that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code regarding procedure to be followed in appeals from original decrees are incorporated in the Land Acquisition Act by virtue of section 54. If the 1st column of Article 156 includes, as we hold, appeals provided for by section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, there is really no difficulty created by the use of the words "decree or order" in the 3rd column. Then we think it is rightly pointed out in Dropadi v. Hira Lal (7) that there are several Acts, for example, the Succession Act, the Probate and Administration Act and the Land Acquisition Act, which make the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to the proceedings under the Act, and give a right of appeal to the High Court, but do not prescribe any period of limitation for the appeal. It has always been assumed, probably rightly, that such appeals are under the Code of Civil Procedure governed by what is now Article 156 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and by the general provisions of the Act also.

(7) 16 Ind. Cas. 149; 34 A. 496; 10 A. L. J. 3.

Our attention has been drawn by Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar to certain especial Acts, such as the Calcutta Improvement Act and the Bombay Improvement Act, in which special rules of limitation are provided for. That, to our mind, does not affect the question. It might have been perhaps better if the Legislature enacting the Land Acquisition Act had also provided some special provision or made an express and direct reference to the provisions of the Limitation Act. But that is another question.

We hold upon a proper construction of Article 156 that it applies to appeals provided for by section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 819 OF 1918.

February 18, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

JIWANA—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

MALAK CHAND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Money paid under agreement opposed to public policy, whether can be recovered.

A person who has paid money under an agreement which is void as opposed to public policy may recover back the money so paid while the agreement is still unperformed. [p. 408, cols. 1 & 2.]

Defendant promised to marry his daughter to the plaintiff and on the faith of that promise the plaintiff paid a sum of money to the defendant. Subsequently the defendant refused to carry out the agreement and the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the amount paid by him to the defendant:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum advanced by him inasmuch as the agreement, although void under section 23 of the Contract Act, had not been performed. [p. 408, col. 2.]

Revision from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 13th May 1918.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. L. Gulati, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of Rs. 300, with interest, on the allegation that on the 14th December 1911 the defendant borrowed the sum under his signature in the plaintiff's bahi. Various pleas were raised by the defendant by way of defence to the suit. It has been found by both the Courts below that the defendant had promised to marry his daughter to the plaintiff and the plaintiff had made an advance of Rs. 300 on the faith of that promise. The Court of first instance passed a decree for the principal sum Rs. 300 only and did not allow any interest or costs to the plaintiff. Both the parties appealed to the lower Appellate Court. Defendant's appeal was dismissed and the plaintiff's appeal was partly decreed, the Appellate Court holding that the plaintiff was entitled to costs also. The present petition for revision has been filed by the defendant, and it has been argued that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as the contract to give the daughter in marriage was an illegal contract, and no suit could be based upon that contract. Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act is relied upon. The suit on the face of it is not one for the enforcement of any illegal agreement. It is a suit merely for the non-performance of the promise on the part of the defendant. In support of his argument the learned Counsel for the appellant relied upon Hira v. Jowala Das (1) and contended that inasmuch as the contract was illegal, the present suit was not maintainable. That was not what was held in that case. The learned Judge who decided that case based his judgment on the finding that a betrothal had taken place and that the promised girl had died before she could be married. He was of opinion that the agreement had partly been performed. The concluding words of his judgment are:—

"Holding then that plaintiff advanced the money claimed to defendant as consideration for an illegal promise which was performed either in whole or in part, according to the view taken, I decide that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief and dismiss the appeal."

This decision was in full accord with the observation made by Plowden, J., in the case of Kahna v. Kahn Singh (2). That eminent Judge observed thus at page 295:—

"I have no difficulty, however, in holding that a person who has paid money under an agreement which is void as opposed to public policy, may recover back the money so paid while the agreement is still unperformed; although he cannot do so afterwards."

The decision of Mr. LeRossignol is in full accord with this opinion of Mr. Justice Plowden.

In the present case the defendant admitted that he had married his daughter to another man, and, therefore, he had disabled himself from performing the contract altogether. The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to sue for the money advanced The judgment of the Court below is, therefore, correct. The learned Counsel has, however, argued that the suit was barred by three years' limitation. There is no force in this contention. In the first place, the point does not appear to have been pressed in the lower Appellate Court. A plea to this effect was taken in the memorandum of appeal filed in the Court below, but it was evidently never pressed. There is no indication in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that any argument was addressed on the plea of limitation before that Court. I find that there was good reason for the plea not being pressed. The defendant was examined in this case and he deposed that he married his daughter to another man on the 16th Maghar Sambat 1972. This date corresponded to the 1st December 1915. The present suit was filed on the 7th October 1916. It was, therefore, within time from the date of the breach of the contract.

The application for revision must be dismissed and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 42, 102

DATTADA BHIMARAJU v. KASIBOTLA SREERAMA SASTRULU.

—Execution of decree—Decree of Small Cause Court transferred to ordinary Court, effect of—Order in execution, whether appealable—Appeal, second, whether lies.

Where a decree made by a Court exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction is transferred for execution to a Court exercising ordinary original jurisdiction, the decree by force of its transmission acquires, for the purposes of execution, all the rights which a decree passed by a Court of ordinary original jurisdiction would have. An order made in execution of such a decree is appealable, but there is no second appeal [p. 410, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal and petition against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, dated the 5th August 1918, in Appeal Suit No. 683 of 1917, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Ellore, dated the 26th September 1917, in Execution Petition No. 361 of 1917, in Small Cause Suit No. 245 of 1904, on the file of the Cocanada Sub-Court.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.—The order was not appealable, as the order was passed in execution of a small cause decree.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.—Though the decree was a small cause decree, the Court executing the decree can use all the powers it possesses otherwise than as a Small Cause Court. The question whether a regular appeal will lie depends upon the character of the tribunal, and not upon the nature of the claim. Perumal v. Venkatarama (1). Further, section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code allows the executing Court all the powers which it would have had if it had itself passed the decree, which would necessarily have been an original decree in the present case. In any case, execution can issue as from an original decree. Perumal v. Venkatarama (1). See also Lareti v. Hazarilal (2) which follows Peary Lal Singh v. Radha Nath Singh (3) and Adhar Chandra Gope v. Pulin Behary Saha (4). Also see Atwari v. Maiku Lal (5) and Adhar Chandra Gope v. Pulin Behary Saha (4).

Mr. P. Somasundaram, in reply.—Section 20 of Act XI of 1865, on which Perumal v. Venkatarama (1) is based, is omitted in Act IX of 1887. So Perumal v. Venkatarama (1) is no longer authority under the present Act.

Section 42, Civil Procedure Code, must be read with the provisions of the Small Cause Courts Act. The certificate is granted only in respect of what the Small Cause Court cannot do. The order of arrest is one within the competence of the Small Cause Court. And, therefore, it should not be assumed that the District Munsif's Court at Ellore was acting in any larger capacity in passing the order than was permissible to the Subordinate Judge who passed the decree. The right to appeal is a substantive right. Such a right cannot be implied when the transfer is obviously not inclusive of execution by arrest.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This matter arises in execution. The Subordinate Judge of Cocanada exercising Small Cause Court Jurisdiction passed a decree on the 14th of July 1905. It was transferred for execution to the District Munsif of Ellore on the Regular Side. This was on the 20th of October 1908. The last application was on the 24th of April 1917. On it an order to attach immoveable property was made on the 16th of August 1917 ex parte by the District Munsif. It was set aside on the application of the judgment-debtor on the 26th of September 1917. On the very same day, an oral application was made to arrest the judgment-debtor. The District Munsif was asked to allow the decree-holder to amend the execution application by inserting the prayer for arrest. He declined to accede to the request and dismissed the petition altogether. An appeal was made to the Sub-Court against that order. The Subordinate Judge considered that the amendment should have been allowed. He, therefore, set aside the order and remanded the petition for disposal on the merits. The judgment-debtor has preferred this second appeal. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that no second appeal lies. I think the contention is well founded.

I felt some doubts during the course of the hearing whether any appeal lay to the Sub-Court from the order of the District Munsif refusing to issue the warrant of arrest. On further consideration I have come to the conclusion that the first appeal was properly presented, and that no second appeal lies. It is clear that under section 7 (a) (iii) of the Code of Civil Procedure a Court of Small Causes can have no power to execute decrees against immoveable property. Its power to issue a warrant of arrest or to attach moveable properties is not affected by this sub clause. The decree-holder in this case, as he was desirous of getting the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor attached, had the decree transferred to the Court of the District Munsif of Ellore. By section 42 of the Civil Procedure Code, in consequence of the transfer, the decree, though passed by a Judge exercising Small Cause Court Jurisdiction, becomes impressed with rights incident to a decree passed by the District Munsif. The words "as if it had been passed by itself" in the first sentence of the section show that the decree by force of its transmission acquires all the rights which a decree passed by the District Munsif exercising original jurisdiction would have for purposes of execution. The 3rd sentence of section 42 makes it clear that the orders in execution are subject to the same right of appeal as orders passed by the District Munsif exercising original jurisdiction. Mr. Somasundaram for the appellant suggested that the clause "shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal" only refers to the procedure to be adopted and does not confer a right of appeal. This construction would make the sentence meaningless. I am clear that by virtue of the fact that the Munsif passed orders in execution in respect of a decree passed by the Small Cause Court, his orders became subject to appeal. The only difficulty which I find in giving full effect to this view relates to section 104, clause (h), of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section enumerates the various orders which are appealable under the Code. Clause (1) (h) says: "an order under any of the provisions of this Code imposing a fine or directing the arrest or detention in the civil prison of any person except where such arrest or detention is in execution of a decree." Reading it literally this clause would mean that no appeal is provided against an order in execution directing arrest or detention of a judgment debtor. But I do not think that is the true construction of the clause. The exemption of order of arrest or detention in execution of a decree is due to the fact that such orders are covered by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under section 2, clause (2) the expression "decree" includes the determination of any question within section 47. Therefore, inasmuch as the order exempted by clause (h) acquires the superior force of a decree, it was thought desirable by the Legislature to exempt it in section 104. Moreover, clause (2) of section 104 provides that there shall not be a second appeal against the orders made appealable under clause (1). If the exemption in favour of arrest or detention in execution of a decree were not in clause (1) (h), it would follow that even where such orders are passed in execution of a decree of a regular Court for more than Rs. 500, no second appeal would lie from such an order. This would make section 104 inconsistent with section 47, and section 2 (2). Therefore, the object of exemption in section 104, clause (1) (h) is not to make such orders unappealable but only to point attention to the fact that they are not orders of the same class mentioned in the other sub clauses. I am, therefore, of opinion that an appeal lies to the Sub-Court against the order of the District Munsif. This view is supported by a decision of this Court in Perumal v. Venkataraman (1). Although that case was decided with reference to the old Small Cause Courts Act, it seems to me that the conclusion is equally applicable to proceedings under Act IX of 1887. In Peary Lal Singh v. Radha Nath Singh (3) the same view was taken.

If an appeal lies, then the question is whether a second appeal is competent. That must be answered in the negative, having regard to section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the old Code it was held in Lala Khandha Pershad v. Lala Lal Behary Lal (6), Harakh v. Ram Sarup (7) and Peary Lal Singh v. Radha Nath Singh (3) that no second appeal lies in execution proceedings relating to Small Cause Court decrees. The language of section 102 is an exact reproduction of section 586 of the old Code. See also Mavula Ammal v. Mavula Maracior (8). For these reasons I am of opinion that the preliminary objection must be allowed and the appeal should be dismissed with costs. I agree as to the order passed by my learned brother in the Civil Revision Petition.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with my learned brother's judgment; but I desire to add that the argument based on section 42, Civil Procedure Code, depends on the interpretation of the word "rules" therein as not conferring any substantive right of appeal, but referring only to the rules mentioned in sections 121—128. It is a sufficient answer to this that section 42 merely reproduces section 228 of the former Code, in which no such rules could have been in question.

The appeal against order must be dismissed with costs. The civil revision petition, which is also before us, must be dismissed, because no question under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure is shown to arise. No order as to costs in the Civil Revision Petition.

Custom—Mortgage by father—Son, whether has interest in redemption—Mortgage, suit for sale on—Son, whether entitled to be impleaded—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1.

Under Hindu Law a son is a co-parcener, an owner of the ancestral property along with his father and other members of the family. Under Customary Law a son has no right of ownership in his father's lifetime. He has only a reversionary interest in the property and a right to protect that interest by interfering to prevent unnecessary alienations. This limited interest that he possesses is not such an interest as is contemplated by Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, where a mortgagee brings a suit to enforce the mortgage, the mortgagor's son is not entitled to be made a party to the suit.

Revision from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, dated the 18th July 1918.

Mr. Sewa Ram Singh, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has brought a suit for the sale of property mortgaged by the defendant. The latter's son applies to this Court for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to make him a party to the suit.

Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, requires that all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage, and it is contended for the applicant that he has an interest in the mortgage security.

Rulings based on Hindu Law are not in point, as the applicant is admittedly governed by custom. Under the Hindu Law the son is a co parcener, an owner of the ancestral property along with his father and other members of the joint family. Under the Customary Law the son has no right of ownership in his father's lifetime. He has only a reversionary interest in the property, and a right to protect that interest by interfering to prevent unnecessary alienations. I do not think that the limited interest that he possesses is such an interest as is contemplated by Order XXXIV, rule 1, and I hold, therefore, that the applicant is not a necessary party in the suit.

I dismiss this application with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 105—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Order assessing fair and equitable rent—Jurisdiction—Revision—High Court, interference by.

Where a Court has jurisdiction under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to assess fair and equitable rent, the High Court will not interfere in revision with an order made by the Court fixing a fair and equitable rent on the ground that the rent fixed is not fair or equitable.

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Jalpaiguri, dated the 18th November 1916, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that place, dated the 23rd August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta (with him Babu Jitendra Nath Sen Gupta), for the Appellant. —This appeal is on behalf of the defendant in a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The point is that without recording any evidence the learned Settlement Officer settled the rent ex parte what he thought to be fair and equitable. In the absence of any evidence to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the Record of Rights, the Settlement Officer has no jurisdiction to settle any rent which in his opinion appears to be fair and equitable. Refers to section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the rules framed by the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam under section 189 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the guidance of Settlement Officers in settling fair and equitable rent. When no evidence was given by the plaintiff to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the finally published Record of Rights, the entry should be taken as correct. As the existing rent should, under the Statute, be presumed to be fair and equitable unless the contrary is shown, the Settlement Officer is bound to record evidence.

[NEWBOULD, J.—Can I interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code?]

If your Lordship thinks that the appeal is incompetent your Lordship can interfere under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, when the decree is passed without jurisdiction. Refers to Bissessur Dass v. Johann Smidt (1).

Babu Nagendro Nath Ghose, for the Respondents.—The defendant in his written statement does not dispute the figures on which the fair and equitable rent was claimed. So under Order VIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, the defendant practically admits the plaintiff's case and the Court was competent to decide upon the admission made in the pleadings without any further evidence. Upon the provisions of section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and upon the statements made in the plaint which were not denied by the defendant in his written statement, the Settlement Officer had jurisdiction to settle fair and equitable rent. There is no question of error of jurisdiction involved in this case which would justify your Lordship's interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. Even if a wrong view of law has been taken by the Appellate Court, that cannot be revised under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal and also a Rule against an order under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act fixing a fair and equitable rent. The only point urged is that the lower Courts acted without jurisdiction in assessing the fair and equitable rent without taking any evidence. It appears, however, that the defendants, although they did not appear at the hearing, filed a statement in which the figures on which fair and equitable rent was assessed were not disputed. These figures were sufficient material for the Assistant Settlement Officer and the Special Judge to come to a finding. Whether that finding is correct and whether the rent assessed is fair and equitable, is a question into which this Court cannot go, if the lower Courts have jurisdiction; and I hold that they had jurisdiction.

Accordingly this appeal must be dismissed and this Rule discharged with costs. No separate Pleader's fee is allowed in the Rule.

Appeal dismissed;
Rule discharged.

Under the Hindu Law the female natural guardian of a minor is not justified in disposing of the property of the minor merely because she wishes to live with her relatives so as to obtain their help in managing the ancestral properties. The fact that her relatives and those of the minor advise her to do this would not make any difference. [p. 413, col. 2; p. 414, col. 1.]

Where the guardian ad litem of a minor is guilty of negligence in conducting the defence on behalf of the minor, a decree obtained by the plaintiff would not bind the minor, nor would it operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought by the minor. [p. 415, col. 1.]

Although in matters of pure contract or transfer of property a minor cannot be held to be estopped by his conduct within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act, yet when he enters into possession of property on a lease obtained on his behalf by his guardian, he cannot be allowed to set up his title to the property as a bar to a suit in ejectment on the expiry of the lease. [p. 415, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 94 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The suit is to set aside a sale of the plaintiffs' properties by their guardians during their minority. The 2nd plaintiff is still a minor and is represented in the suit by the 1st plaintiff as next friend. They are cousins, being sons of two brothers, the survivor of whom, Ayyavu Pillai, died sometime in 1908. The mothers of the plaintiffs acted as their guardians and sold all the ancestral properties, including their dwelling house, for Rs. 11,000 odd by Exhibit X (a) to the 1st defendant, the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who are the appellants before us.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, the learned Pleader for the appellants, contended that though he could not prove that there was absolute necessity for the sale of the lands in the ordinary sense of the word, still the sale was justified as this was the most prudent thing to do in the circumstances in which the plaintiffs and the mothers were placed. The mothers' relations lived in a different village and they had no male relation in the village of their deceased husbands to help them in managing the property. Therefore, the sale which was effected in consultation and in accordance with the advice of their relations should, in the light of these facts, be upheld as a prudent transaction for the benefit of the minors.

The sale could not be upheld on the ground of necessity as out of the Rs. 11,000 odd, Rs. 500, alleged to have been paid on the date of the agreement, was never paid and Rs. 6,000 was allowed to remain with the vendee on the security of the properties sold; that is to say, only Rs. 5,000 odd out of the entire amount was required, if the case of the appellants is true on this point, to pay certain ancestral debts. Of this sum Rs. 2,725, was paid by the vendee to a mortgagee under Exhibit III. That is not disputed, but the payment of the balance, i.e., of a sum of Rs. 2,425, alleged to have been paid by the purchaser to the vendors for discharge of the decree-debt in Original Suit No. 352 of 1900 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Valangiman, is disputed except to the extent of Rs. 400, which the plaintiffs admit having been received and paid in satisfaction of what was due under the decree above mentioned. But, as pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge, the income of the property was more than sufficient to pay off the entire liabilities after meeting the necessary household expenses. The debt under the mortgage was not immediately payable and there could not be said to have existed any pressing necessity, or any necessity at all, for the sale of the properties. At the most, it would have been sufficient to sell a portion of the properties in order to meet the liabilities. Mr. T. Rangachariar very fairly in face of these facts was not prepared to contend that the sale was justified by any necessity.

And I do not think that, in the absence of necessity, the sale would be valid under the Hindu Law. It is not clear on the evidence, as the Subordinate Judge points out, that the mothers of the plaintiffs were really anxious or felt themselves obliged to migrate from the village For after the sale they took a lease of the dwelling house from the vendees. There is no authority for saying that, under the Hindu Law, if the female natural guardian of a minor wishes to live with her relatives so as to obtain their help in managing the ancestral properties, she would be justified in disposing of them and the fact that her or the minor's relatives advised her to that effect would not make any difference. The decision in Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa Iyenngar (1) relied upon by Mr. T. Rangachariar does not lay down any such proposition.

The next point argued relates to the payment of Rs. 2,425, and the finding of the Subordinate Judge that of this sum only Rs. 400 was in fact proved to have been paid to the guardians of the plaintiffs has been challenged. The decree in the suit of 1900 was for Rs. 1,800 odd and the case of the defendants is that, while they undertook to discharge the mortgage under which Rs. 2,725 was due, they paid the amount now in question to the vendors themselves to pay the decree debt. On carefully considering the evidence one must say that the matter cannot be said to be free from obscurity. The onus, however, of proving the payment lies on the defendants. The deed of sale, Exhibit X (a), recites that the money was paid to the vendors at the time of the sale. But the 1st defendant himself admits that nothing was paid at the date of sale but that the payment was made afterwards. The evidence of the 1st defendant is that he paid the money to one Govinda Padayachi asking him to go and settle everything. Govinda Padayachi says that he never received this money but that the money was paid by the 1st defendant's Kanukupillai, one Ramachandra Rao, not to the vendors but to Ramalingam Pillai, a relation of the vendors, who was acting for them in the negotiations for sale. Neither Ramachandra Rao nor Ramalingam Pillai is examined, and Govinda Padayachi says that he does not know if Ramalinga Pillai actually paid the morey to the ladies. The payment to Ramalinga Pillai, even if true, would not be a good discharge, for it is not alleged that he held any power-of-attorney from the plaintiffs' guardians and the sale deed was executed under the signatures of the guardians themselves. The decree-holder is the 1st witness on the defendants' side; and he supports entirely the case of the plaintiffs on this point, which is to the effect that on Ayyavu Pillai's death only Rs. 900 was due to him and that out of this sum Rs. 500 was paid by the plaintiffs' guardians before the execution of the sale and that the balance of Rs. 400 was paid after the sale and that on receiving that amount he passed the receipt, Exhibit I, on 7th June 1909. The receipt, however, purports to be for Rs. 2,735, as having been received on that date. Ponnambala Pillai has to say that that recital is not true, but he is not able to give any satisfactory explanation why this false recital was made in Exhibit I. At the same time it is to be noted that the receipt is for Rs. 2,735, while the sum mentioned as payable in the deed of sale, which was executed only 3 days previously, was Rs. 2,425 not merely for the decree debt but also for debts due on some promissory notes. We do not know what amount, if any, was due on promissory notes and no such promissory notes have been adduced in evidence. The defendants also rely on Exhibit II, a certified copy of an execution petition, filed by Ponnambala Pillai on the 11th September 1908. That was the 1st petition in execution, and it states that no payment has been made towards the decree amount which with interest amounted on that day to Rs. 2,800 odd. The petition was presented on the very last day before the expiry of the time allowed by law, but was returned and never presented again. The Subordinate Judge rightly suggests that this was not likely to have happened if considerable payments had not been made towards the decree amount although not certified to the executing Court. Exhibit A, which is a post card written by the decree-holder to his Vakil's clerk, distinctly states that payments had been made. The plaintiffs have also produced Exhibit E, which purports to be a draft of the execution petition as at first made and it sets out a number of payments. The Vakil's Gumasta who wrote both Exhibit E and the original of Exhibit II has been examined to explain how in Exhibit II no mention was made of any payments and why it was returned. The explanation shortly is that, as his master was not sure of the dates and the details of all the payments, he asked him not to enter any payment at all, and Ponnambala Pillai supports this story. It is difficult to say that this explanation is quite convincing. On the other hand, the evidence on the defendants' side as to the payment of Rs. 2,425 to the guardians of the plaintiffs is extremely unsatisfactory. It is possible, as surmised by the Subordinate Judge, that some of the men who hung about these females received more than Rs. 400 from the vendee ostensibly for the payment of Ponnambala Pillai's decree. But I am unable to hold that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that only Rs. 400 was actually received by the plaintiffs' guardians is not on the whole justified by the evidence as it stands.

The next point argued on behalf of the appellants is with reference to the dwelling house. The house is one of the properties sold under Exhibit X (a). But after the sale, as already mentioned, the plaintiffs' guardians took a lease of the house from the 1st defendant. On the expiry of the lease the defendants instituted a suit for ejectment, Original Suit No. 100 of 1911 in the District Munsif's Court of Valangiman, obtained a decree and in execution recovered the house from the plaintiffs. The question is, does that decree operate as res judicata so far as the house is concerned? The minors were represented in that suit by a guardian ad litem appointed by Court, and the guardian was satisfied with putting the plaintiffs to the proof of their case and did not plead that the sale was not binding on the minors as it was not for a necessary purpose. If the guardian ad litem had taken the least trouble to ascertain the facts relating to the sale, the deed of sale itself would have shown that the sale could not have been justified. In that sense the guardian ad litem was clearly guilty of negligence in conducting the defence on behalf of the minors and the decree, therefore, does not bind them. Further I think there is force in the argument of Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the respondents, that no question of title to the property could arise in that suit. The guardians of the minors having been admitted into possession of the house on a lease granted by the 1st defendant, it was not open to them or to the minors to impeach the title of their lessor. It may be a sound general proposition that a minor cannot, in matters of pure contract or transfer of property, be held to be estopped by his conduct within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act, as for instance when he has made a misrepresentation as regards his age. But I do not see how minors who entered into possession of certain property on a lease obtained on their behalf by their guardians can be allowed to set up their title to the property as a bar to a suit in ejectment on the expiry of the lease. I am not prepared to hold without authority and none has been cited that to such cases, section 116 of the Evidence Act has no application. I, therefore, hold that the decree in the suit for ejectment does not operate as res judicata.

The last question argued by the appellants' Vakil relates to that portion of the judgment which provides that the plaintiffs are entitled to mesne profits from the defendants from the date of the sale. The learned Subordinate Judge holds that as there was no legal necessity for the sale, the 1st defendant must be taken to have acted without good faith in buying the property. And in this connection we have been referred to a recent decision of the Privy Council in Banwari Lal v. Mahesh (2), in which it may be mentioned, no one appeared before their Lordships on behalf of the respondents. That was a suit to set aside a sale by a Hindu father, while in the present case the alienation was made by guardians of minors. Their Lordships held in the above case that the decree for possession being conditional on payment of a certain sum of money by the minors, no mesne profits could be claimed from the vendee although the sale was set aside. The whole question is dealt with in one sentence from which I do not gather that their Lordships meant to lay down a universal or absolute proposition that in every case in which a sale is set aside and the plaintiff is directed to refund any portion of the consideration money, the vendee is not liable to account for mesne profits irrespective of the nature of the transaction and however large the profits which he may have received compared with the interest on the amount which was actually paid by him as consideration for the sale. In Bhirgee Nath v. Narsingh Tewari (3), also relied on by the appellants, all that the learned Judge really meant to lay down was that where a sale was set aside on equitable ground or on grounds of a similar nature, it is in the discretion of the Court whether to direct the vendee to account for the mesne profits or not and that is how the ruling is understood in the case in Ganesa Aiyar v. Amirthasami Odayar (4). That, however, is a very different proposition from the hard and fast rule contended for by the appellants.

In the result the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2757 OF 1918.

March 10, 1919.

BHAG MAL-SADDU RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

WALIA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 45, scope of - Debt due to several persons—Decree obtained by one creditor in respect of his share—Suit by others for balance, maintainability of.

Section 45 of the Contract Act does not provide that when one of several joint creditors has been paid his share of the debt and has thus ceased to be a creditor, the remaining creditors cannot maintain a suit for the balance of the debt. [p. 417, col. 1.]

The words "as between him and them" in section 45 of the Contract Act signify that as between the debtor and the original body of creditors the right to claim payment would rest with that body, but if by part payment the number of creditors is reduced, the right to claim payment will be a right arising as between the debtor and the remaining creditors. [p. 417, col. 1.]

On dissolution of a partnership one-fifth of a debt due to the partnership from the defendant fell to the share of one of the partners, K. The latter sued the defendant for recovery of his share of the debt, impleading also as defendants his former partners who refused to join as plaintiffs, and obtained a decree. Subsequently the other partners sued the defendant for recovery of the remaining four-fifths of the debt:

Held, that the suit was not barred under the provisions of section 45 of the Contract Act. [p. 417, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 13th May 1918.

Mr. Badri Nath Kapur, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant Walia owed money to the firm of Bhag Mal-Saddu Ram. The partnership was dissolved, and in the partition 1/5th of the debt due from Walia fell to the share of one of the partners, Khan Chand. The latter sued Walia for 1/5th of the debt, impleading also as defendants his former partners, who refused to join as plaintiffs. Walia pleaded that a suit by one of the partners for 1/5th of the debt was not maintainable, but the Court decided against him and gave Khan Chand a decree. The present suit has been brought by Khan Chand's former partners for the remaining 4/5ths of the debt. The Munsif passed a decree in their favour, but the District Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit, holding that under section 45 of the Contract Act the right to claim performance of the contract rests with all the persons who were members of the firm jointly, and that a partner cannot after dissolution sue to recover a part of the debt as individually due to him.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

In the memorandum of appeal the ground taken is that the District Judge has erred in holding that section 45 of the Contract Act bars the suit, because the respondent waived his right to raise the objection by not raising it in the former suit. The reason given is wrong, as the respondent did as a matter of fact object in the former suit that the claim for a portion of the debt was not maintainable. The appeal should not, however, fail if the learned District Judge's view is in fact erroneous, even though the appellants have given a wrong reason for contending that it is erroneous.

The respondent's case is that as there was only one debt due to the firm, the members of the firm cannot, after the firm has been dissolved, split up the cause of action and bring separate suits for their shares of the debt. The answer to this contention is that the appellants are not seeking to split up the cause of action, but that it has already been split up by the decree given in Khan Chand's suit, for which they are not responsible. The Court having decided in that case, rightly or wrongly, that Khan Chand was entitled to a decree for 1/5th of the debt the appellants had no option but to sue for 4/5ths or lose their money altogether. It would clearly be inequitable that their claim should be dismissed, not for any fault of theirs, but on account of the action taken by Khan Chand. It is true that they might have availed themselves of the opportunity of joining Khan Chand as plaintiffs in the former suit, but if the respondent's contention were correct, the present suit would not have been maintainable even if the appellants had not been impleaded as defendants in the former case. One of several joint creditors might collude with the debtor and obtain a decree against him for a small portion of the debt on his admission, with the result, if the argument now advanced were sound, that the other creditors would be absolutely debarred from recovering the balance. Section 45 of the Contract Act does not enable a debtor to evade his liability in this manner. It provides that when a person has made a promise to two or more persons jointly, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract, the right to claim performance rests, as between him and them, with them during their joint lives. Assuming that this section makes it necessary that where a debt is due to several persons jointly all should join in a suit brought for its recovery, it is nevertheless not a legitimate inference that when one of the original creditors has been paid his share and thus ceased to be a creditor, the remaining creditors cannot maintain a suit for the balance of the debt. The words "as between him and them" are not without significance. As between the debtor and the original body of creditors the right to claim payment would rest with that body, but if by part payment the number of creditors is reduced, the right to claim payment will be a right arising as between the debtor and the remaining creditors. The decree obtained by Khan Chand puts the parties in the same position in which they would have been if the defendant had entered into a fresh contract, paying 1/5th of the debt to Khan Chand and agreeing that the plaintiffs should become his creditors for the remainder.

The suit is, therefore, maintainable, and I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court, under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for disposal on the merits. Stamp on the appeal in this Court to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the case.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLI, r. 23—Inherent power, nature and scope of—Appeal Appellate Court, powers of—Remand, when can be ordered—"Preliminary point," meaning of.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates the exercise of powers ex debito justitiæ which are not conferred by the rules of the Code. But where a power is given expressly, the inherent power of the Court ought to be very cautiously indented upon. [p. 419, col. 1.]

An Appellate Court has inherent power to make a remand under conditions other than those mentioned in Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code [p. 419, col.].

The words "preliminary point" in Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code, connote a determination not affecting the merits of the case. [p. 419, col. .]

The reversal of a judgment with a direction to admit evidence improperly excluded, is not a disposal on a preliminary point [p. 419, col. 2.]

Sivaganga, and of the District Court, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suits Nos. 1 of 1918, 275 and 277 of 1917 respectively, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 504 of 1913, and that of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suits No. 72 of 1915, and No. 15 of 1916 and appeal and civil revision petition preferred against the order of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 110 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Ellore, in Original Suit No. 784 of 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The Code of Civil Procedure is exhaustive on what it specifically deals with. Order XLI, rule 23, regulates remands, and so every order of remand must necessarily fall within its scope and is appealable. The words "preliminary point" have, therefore, been construed by the Courts to be very comprehensive; not in the sense of some point collateral to the merits, but of some point preliminary to a general investigation of the merits. See Vemula Jambulaya v. Iskala Rayamma (1), Ramachandra Joishi v. Hazi Kassim (2), Kuppelan v. Kunjuvalli (3).

Section 107, Civil Procedure Code, is merely enumerative of the general powers of the Appellate Court as "prescribed" i.e., "prescribed by rules." It does not, therefore, confer any power of remand outside Order XLI, rule 23. There must be a disposal on a preliminary point, which again must have relation to the merits of the case.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—No qualification appears to have been placed on section 562 of the old Code as construed in Ramachandra Joishi v. Hazi Kassim (2) and other cases.]

In all such cases, the Courts have always enlarged the meaning of "preliminary point." The construction of section 107 in Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan Ghaznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (4) is not warranted by the language of the Code.

See also Muthiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (5), Susibhushan Mookerjee v. Radhanath Bose (6).

In the face of the specific provision in Order XL, a power inherent in the Court ought not to be inferred from the general language of section 107, Civil Procedure Code.

Even assuming that there is such an inherent power of remand, it cannot be assumed, in the absence of express words in the order, that the Court has resorted to it. For the Court must explain why that extreme course is resorted to.

See Baseemati Debi v. Tarit Basani Dassi (7).

Finally, in the present case the disposal was on a preliminary point which precluded an investigation of the merits, the plea having been a settlement of accounts.

Mr. V. Kothandaramayya, for the Respondents, replied generally.

JUDGMENT.—This and two other appeals were argued this morning at some length. Most of the points arising for decision are common to all the three appeals and have been very elaborately argued by Mr. A. Krishnasawmi Aiyar for the appellant in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 170 of 1918. The lower Appellate Court remands each of the appeals for re-trial and appeals purporting to be under Order XLIII, rule 1 (a), have been preferred to this Court. It was held in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 243 of 1918 that, where the order of remand was made not on a preliminary point, no appeal lies against it. Mr. A Krishnasawmi Aiyer conceded that, if an order can be predicated as not falling within Order XLI, rule 23, and if it is to be held that the Court has inherent power of remand apart from the said rule, there is no right of appeal. Further, this point is concluded by authority.

The main argument of the learned Vakil related to the inherent power of the Court to make a remand other than under the conditions mentioned in rule 23 of Order XLI. We are prepared to agree with him that section 107 of the Code in terms only refers to Order XLI, rule 23.

CHHAJJU v. DALLU.

But section 107 of the Code does not contain any provision, as was found in the Code of 1882, section 564, limiting the right of remand only to conditions prescribed by the Code. The enactment of section 151 suggests that the Legislature contemplated the exercise of powers ex debito justitiæ which were not specifically conferred by the rules. This is the view taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court consisting of five Judges Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan Ghaznavi v. Allahabad Bank Limited (4)]. The same view was taken in Vemula Jambalaya v. Iskala Rajamma (1) and in Kuppelan v. Kunjuvalli (3). We see no reason for not following these decisions. It is true that where a power is given expressly, Courts should not exercise their inherent power, which ought to be very cautiously indented upon. But this argument is not against possessing the power but is only against its improper use; we must overrule this contention.

Mr. A Krishnasawmi Aiyer next contended that, if nothing more appears on the face of the judgment than a bare order of remand, the lower Court must be taken to have acted wrongly in exercising the power under Order XLI, rule 23, rather than attribute to it the intention to exercise its inherent power. As a corollary to this argument he contended that if a wrong order is passed under the section, the right of appeal is not taken away. The corollary will be right only if the original contention is sound. Rightly or wrongly for some years, Courts in this Presidency have been informed by the High Court that they have an inherent power of remand. Vide Ramachandra Joishi v. Hasi Kassim (2) Kuppelan v. Kunjuvalli (3) and Vemula Jambalaya v. Iskala Rajamma (1). There is no reason for imputing to the lower Courts ignorance of these decisions and for suggesting that the power was wrongly exercised under Order XLI, rule 23.

Another argument of the learned Vakil is that the word "preliminary" in Order XLI, rule 23, should receive a liberal construction. We agree with the definition of that word given by Muthuswami Aiyar, J., in Ramachandra Joishi v. Hasi Kassim (2). Prima facie the expression connotes a determination not affecting the merits of the case. This view is strengthened by the enumeration of cases relating to preliminary points in pages 416 and 417 of the Annual Practice, 19 9.

The last argument was that the view of the lower Appellate Court that a settlement of accounts as agent is not binding on the party as a partner is a preliminary point; we do not agree with this proposition. It is a piece of evidence, the admissibility of which was decided by the Appellate Court in a particular manner. It cannot be said that this point is collateral to the merits of the case.

In the next appeal No. 272 of 1918 there is much to be said in favour of Mr. K. V. Krishnasawmi Aiyer's argument that the remand was wholly unnecessary. If we were hearing the appeal, we would not have applied the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court, but it cannot be said that a reversal of the judgment with direction to admit evidence said to have been improperly excluded is a disposal on a preliminary point.

Mr Ramadoss's appeal No. 370 of 1917 is clearly not one in which there has been a remand on a preliminary point. Civil Revision Petition No. 1211 of 1917 is dismissed without costs.

For these reasons, we must dismiss all the three appeals with costs.

Where certain persons sue for a declaration that a partition of common land in a village effected by the Revenue Authorities should be declared inoperative so far as their interests are concerned, and the claim is based on the ground that the measure of right adopted by the Revenue Authorities was inaccurate, the question of the measure of right is one of title within the meaning of sections 116, 117 and 158, clause (xviii), of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, and the suit is, therefore, cognisable by a Civil Court.

Second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 3rd May 1915.

Messrs. Beni Pershad Khosla and Gobind Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the plaintiffs respondents, and in it they sought for a declaration that a certain partition of common land in village Gianpura, which had been effected by the Revenue Authorities, should be declared inoperative so far as their interests were concerned. The primary Court held that the suit was one cognizable by the Revenue Courts alone and for that reason dismissed it. On appeal the lower Appellate Court in a very short order held that the suit was one cognizable by the Civil Courts and directed that the suit should proceed and be disposed of on its merits. Against this order of the learned District Judge the defendants appellants have preferred this appeal, and we have heard Mr. Beni Pershad Khosla on their behalf and Mr. Gullu Ram for the plaintiffs respondents.

The point for determination is whether the Civil or Revenue Courts have jurisdiction to try the suit. Partition has been effected in accordance with the khewat of the Settlement of 1880, and the plaintiffs-respondents' claim is that the partition should have been according to the khewat of the Settlement of 1909. The khewats in question are different and the measure of right in each case varies. The question of the measure of right is clearly one of title within the meaning of sections 116 and 117 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, as was held in Fazaldad Khan v. Ata Muhammad (1). The suit was, therefore, cognizable by and within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Mr. Beni Pershad urged, however, that the fact that the partition had actually been completed ousted the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. We are unable to accede to this contention, which is opposed to Bachan Singh v. Madhan Singh (2) and Anwar v. Allah Yar (3).

In our opinion the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

A heba-bil-ewaz, which is a gift for consideration, has incidents very different from those of a simple gift heba). Therefore, if a party claiming under a deed of heba-bil-ewaz fails to prove the passing of consideration for the heba, the heba cannot be treated as valid as a simple gift without consideration and accompanied by delivery of possession. Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Mymensingh, dated the 6th May 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Netrakona, dated the 3rd September 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendro Kumar De, for the Appellant.—The Court of appeal below has erred in allowing the plaintiff respondent to plead for the first time in appeal that the document is a hebab-il ewaz, and that it is invalid for want of consideration. In the pleadings, issues and judgment of the Court of first instance the document was treated as a heba, pure and simple. When the plaintiff did not adduce any evidence to show that there was no passing of consideration, the lower Appellate Court was not justified in treating the document as a heba-bil-ewaz. My submission is that when the point was not raised in the primary Court, the case should be sent back to the lower Court for a finding on the point after taking evidence.

My next point is, that even assuming that it is not a gift for consideration, it would still operate as a valid gift, pure and simple, for although a deed may purport to be a heba-bil-ewaz, it may still operate as a heba, pure and simple. Rahimjan Bibi v. Imanjan Bibi (1).

Babu Annadi Charan Karkun, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The defendant No. 1 is the appellant before us. The appeal is confined to the properties referred to in the schedules Nos. 1 and 3 in the plaint. The plaintiffs claimed a share in these properties as the residuary heirs of one Azim. The defendant No. 1 is the widow of Azim, and she contested the plaintiffs' claim by alleging that Azim had executed a deed of heba-bil ewaz in her favour in lieu of dower and a tasbi. The first Court considered that the consideration alleged in the heba-bil-ewaz did actually pass On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a different view of the facts. He holds that the claim for dower, which was one of the considerations for the heba as well as the giving of the tasbi in exchange have not been proved and has accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' suit. It has been urged before us on the authority of the case of Rahimjan Bibi v. Imanjan Bibi (1) that, even if the passing of the consideration is not proved, the heba is still valid as a simple gift without consideration. I do not think that that case is in point. There the pleadings were not clear and the case was remanded for a distinct finding as to whether the consideration had passed or whether possession was given. In this case, the defendant No. 1 explicitly relied upon the document as a gift for a consideration which has incidents very different from those of a simple gift. That was the case that was tried in the first Court and that was the case that was tried in the lower Appellate Court. I do not think the defendant No. 1 can be allowed to change her case at this stage and to claim a decree on the basis of a simple heba accompanied by delivery of possession. So far as the claim on the basis of the heba-bil-ewaz is concerned, on the findings the document must be held to be invalid. A question was also raised that the plaintiffs did not attack the heba-bil ewaz on the ground that no consideration had passed. There seems to be no basis for this contention. The plaint clearly states, amongst others, that the document is collusive, illegal and void of consideration; and it is clear from the judgment of the first Court that the attention of that Court was drawn to this question, namely, whether the consideration had or had not passed. It cannot be said that the defendants were taken by surprise.

The appeal, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 37—Fraudulent preference, what is—Payment made to creditor on eve of bankruptcy—Presumption—Burden of proof.

An Insolvency Court is justified in holding that a payment to a creditor made by a person, who at the time of such payment is unable to pay his debts, must be taken as a payment with a view to prefer that creditor, if it is established that the payment is made of the debtor's own accord not in the ordinary course of business, and without any sort of pressure being brought to bear upon him [p. 423, col. 1.]

In any event if a man on the eve of bankruptcy makes a payment to a particular creditor, the presumption immediately arises that he makes that payment with the dominant view of giving a preference to that creditor over his other creditors. [p. 423, col. 1.]

The fact that the debtor was insolvent when he made the payment, and knew that he was insolvent, causes the onus of proof to shift, and it is for the creditor to whom the payment has been made to show that the payment was not made with a view to prefer him. [p. 423, cols. 1 & 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 19th June 1918.

Mr. Amin Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jaggan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question which I have to decide is whether a payment of Rs. 500 made to the appellant Labbu Ram on the 11th of December 1916 by Umrao Singh was "a payment by a person unable to pay his debts" in favour of a creditor with a view of giving that creditor a preference over other creditors, and as such void and fraudulent within the meaning of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907? The payment was (as stated) made on the 11th of December 1916 and on the 17th January 1917 Rai Sahib Lala Murli Dhar, a creditor, presented an application under section 6 of the Act for the adjudication of Umrao Singh as an insolvent. The payment was thus made within three months of the date on which the petition was presented, and on the 28th of May 1917 Umrao Singh was adjudged an insolvent upon the said petition. It is abundantly clear from the evidence on the record that Umrao Singh was in very straitened and embarrassed circumstances for some considerable time prior to December 1916 and unable to pay his creditors in full. It is also established that he owes a very large sum of money to numerous creditors. In these circumstances the Receiver appointed by the Court has applied for the avoidance of the payment to Labbu Ram and prays that the latter should be ordered to refund the money paid to him to the Receiver. This application is made under section 37 of the Act, and the District Judge has held that the payment amounted to a clear case of fraudulent preference, and he accordingly directed Labbu Ram to refund the sum of Rs. 500 to the Receiver for pro rata distribution among all the creditors including himself. From this order Labbu Ram has appealed to this Court and I have heard arguments at length by Counsel on his behalf and on behalf of the respondent Receiver.

The law upon the question before me is stated as follows in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 2, paragraph 471:—

"In order that a transaction may be set aside as a fraudulent preference, it is necessary to prove that it was carried out with the substantial or dominant view of giving the creditor a preference over the other creditors. This need not be the primary result aimed at. It is sufficient that it should be the object aimed at in bringing about the primary result. If the transaction can properly be referred to some other motive than that of giving the creditor paid a preference over the other creditors, the payment is not fraudulent and void, for it is from the intention on the part of the debtor to act in fraud of the law, that is, to prevent the distribution of the bankrupt's property rateably among all his creditors, that the invalidity of the transaction arises.

"In ascertaining whether the giving of a preference, that is, putting the creditor in a better position relatively to the other creditors than that in which he would be placed by the bankruptcy law, was the dominant view in the debtor's mind, the proper test to be applied is—Was the act done voluntarily?—a question, the solution of which depends primarily on the inquiry, From which party did the proposition originate? A voluntary disposition is an act moving from the debtor; a voluntary payment is a payment simply by the act and will of the party making it; if there is anything to interfere with or control this will, then it is not a voluntary payment. The question always is, did the thing move from the debtor or from the creditor? If it moves entirely from the debtor in the sense that it was his spontaneous act, uninfluenced by any circumstances which tend to rebut the presumption that the bankrupt made a distinction among his creditors, then the transaction will be held to be a fraudulent preference. On the other hand, if the proposal for the payment or disposition of the property comes entirely from the creditor and is not collusive, the transaction will stand.

"That the transaction was not the spontaneous act of the debtor can be established by proving that it was the result of pressure brought to bear on the debtor, either by a creditor in the ordinary sense or by a surety. The pressure must be real; the debtor must have been under some genuine apprehension; it must have been operative on his mind, and the dominant influence affecting it: the transaction must have been entered into by reason of it, and it must not have been fraudulent. * * * * * * * * * *

"In every case the state of mind of the debtor is the paramount consideration. The intention or view to prefer the creditor as the causa causans of the debtor's conduct is the cardinal point round which the whole question turns; if that intention be shown not to have existed, it is of no importance that the creditor had knowledge of the debtor's insolvency or that the debt was not due; nor for this purpose is it true that the debtor must be taken to have intended the natural consequences of his act."

Speaking generally, I think the authorities support the view that the words "with a view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors" bear the same meaning that the word "voluntarily" was construed to have in the old Bankruptcy Act in England see as to this Mellish, L. J. in Bolland, Ex parte, Cherry, In re (1)] and that a Court is justified in holding that the payment to a creditor made by a person, who at the time of such payment is unable to pay his debts, must be taken as a payment with a view to prefer that creditor, if it is established that the payment is made of the debtor's own accord not in the ordinary course of business, and without any sort of pressure being brought to bear upon him. And in any event, as observed by Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Lake, In re, Dyer, Ex parte (2), "if a man on the eve of bankruptcy makes a payment to a particular creditor, the presumption immediately arises that he makes that payment with the dominant view of giving a preference to that creditor over his other creditors." The same learned Lord Justice remarked in another case [Eaton & Co., In re, Viney, Ex parte (3)] that "the fact" that the debtors were insolvent when "they made the payment, and knew that they were insolvent, causes the onus of proof to shift, and it is for the respondent to show that the payment was not made with a view to prefer him"

The law on the subject being as stated above, the question arises whether in the present case the payment to Labhu Ram was fraudulent and void within the meaning of section 37 of the Act. As I have already pointed out, Umrao Singh was at the time hopelessly bankrupt, and according to Labhu Ram himself the payment was made by Umrao Singh of his own accord and without any sort of pressure being put upon him. In these circumstances it was for Labhu Ram to prove that the payment did not fall within the purview of section 37 of the Act, and this, I must hold, he has failed to establish.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Marriage—Asura form—Presumption —Parisam, whether bride price—Custom of community.

The payment of parisam at the time of marriage as between Hindus does not necessarily constitute it as bride price or render the marriage one in the Asura form. The real test is whether in the community or among the parties the payment of parisam is tacitly understood as being substantially a payment for taking the girl in marriage [p. 424, col.]

If any money paid by the bridegroom is utilised for the benefit of the bride, it should not be treated as bride price [p. 424, col .]

Ordinarily, the presumption is, whatever may be the caste to which the parties belong, that a marriage should be regarded as being in the Brahma form, unless it can be shown that it was in the Asura form. [p. 424, col. 2.]

GABRIELNATHASWAMI v. VALLIAMMAL AMMAL.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 555 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Additional District Munsif, Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 147 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. A. Krishaswami Aiyar and E. Vinyaka Row, for the Appellant.—The lower Court has erred in holding that because there was a payment of parisam at the time of marriage, it was a bride price and the marriage was of necessity in the asura form. The parisam is an ordinary present. There is no evidence that, in this case, it was a bride price. See Authikesavulu Chetty v. Ramanujam Chetty (1).

Ordinarily, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption, under Hindu Law, is that a marriage was in the brahma form.

Mr. N. Kunjithapatham Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The finding of the lower Courts is correct. Parisam ordinarily denotes bride price

JUDGMENT.—The suit is by the widow and daughter of the brother's son of two sisters to recover the property of their aunts. The defendant claims to have obtained a conveyance of it from the reversioner of the husband of one of the aunts. The District Munsif was of opinion that the defendant's vendor was not a reversioner. He also came to the conclusion that the two aunts were married in the Asura form of marriage and that the plaintiff was the preferential heir. The two Courts have assumed that if the bride's parents received what is known as parisu panam, it must be deemed that the girls were married in the Asura form and not in the Brahma form. Apparently the Pleaders who appeared in the case as well as the two judicial officers took it for granted that the parisu panam meant bride price. There is nothing in the evidence adduced in the case to show that the money paid to the parents at the time of the marriage as parisu panam was the consideration for giving the girl in marriage. There is no authoritative definition of the term "parisam". In Winslow's Dictionary it is translated as "donation, fee, present, etc., by the bridegroom to the bride before proceeding to the house, for marriage, as jewels, apparel, money, rice, fruits, etc." It may be that parisam is a relic of what in the old days was regarded as the price for the bride. The evidence of the caste men or of the community has not been taken to ascertain the origin of this custom or the reason for its prevalence in the community. It was held in Authikesavulu Chetty v. Ramanujam Chetty (1) that a small present given to the bride's parents should not be regarded as bride's price. The real test is whether in the community or among the parties the payment of parisam was tacitly understood as being substantially a payment for taking the girl in marriage. That will depend generally upon the evidence in the case. Unfortunately, in this case having regard to the attitude of all parties the real question has not been considered. We may draw attention to certain well understood principles of Hindu Law on this subject. In Manu Chapter 3, section 44 it is indicated that the payment of bride price is opposed to all Shastras; further on we read that if any money paid by the bridegroom is utilised for the benefit of the bride, that should not be regarded as bride price.

Ordinarily the presumption is that whatever may be the caste to which the parties belong, a marriage should be regarded as being in the Brahma form unless it can be shown that it was in the Asura form. Authikesavulu Chetty v. Ramanujam Chetty (1), Ohuni Lal v Suraj Ram (2), Hira v. Hansji Pema (3) and Muthu Aiyar v. Chidambara Aiyar (4) lay down this proposition. In this state of the authorities we think it desirable that further evidence should be taken on the question. Having regard to the circumstance that in the Courts below the 1st defendant did not ask for a specific issue on the question, we would have refused to start this enquiry but for the fact that our decision on this question may be regarded as laying down that wherever parisam is paid the marriage should be regarded as being in the Asura form. This is a serious proposition which, if it is to be laid down, must be done after taking the evidence of the community to which the parties belong. At the same time we are of opinion that as this enquiry has been necessitated by the failure of the defendant to get the proper issues settled, he must pay the costs of this enqiry in any event as well as the costs in the lower Appellate Court. We shall, therefore, ask the lower Appellate Court to return findings upon the following questions: (a). In the community to which the parties belong is the payment of pirisam equivalent to the payment of bride price? (b). Did the parties in the particular case regard the payment of pirisam as bride price? The lower Court can take fresh evidence and should come to a conclusion on it in the light of the observations we have above made. It is also necessary to ask for a finding on the evidence already on record upon two questions which have not been decided by the District Judge, namely, (c). Whether the 1st defendant's vendor was the nearest reversioner to the husbands of the two sisters? and (d) Are there any reversioners nearer than the plaintiffs?

Finding should be submitted in three months, seven days will be allowed for objections.

Issues remitted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment, whether must be express—Bond making mention of other bond, whether acknowledgment.

An acknowledgment of liability under section 19 of the Limitation Act need not be express, but may be implied.

A bond executed by the defendant made mention of there being a separate bond for a certain sum executed by him in favour of the plaintiff:

Held, that this statement implied that money was due to the plaintiff separately on the other bond and that, therefore, it amounted to an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. [p. 426, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 6th May 1918.

Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for money due on two bonds, dated the 2nd November 1908 and the 23rd July 1914, and have been given a decree. The questions are only whether the suit on the first bond is within time by reason of an acknowledgment contained in the second one and whether consideration passed for the first bond.

The bond of 1914 makes mention of there being a separate bond for Rs. 430 15 0 (i. e., the bond of the 2nd November 1908). This clearly implies that money was due to the plaintiff separately on the other bond. The learned District Judge holds that an acknowledgment of liability need not be express, but may be implied, and this view is supported by the statement of the law given on page 104 of Rustomji's Law of Limitation, 2nd Edition, by Gopalrao v. Harilal (1) and by Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (2), in which it was held by the Privy Council (on page 1057) that an acknowledgment of liability by one of the parties to pay his debt to a certain person might be deduced from his written admission of having had open and current accounts with that person. I agree, therefore, with the lower Appellate Court that the suit is within time.

As regards consideration it is argued for the appellants that the statement made by Sant Singh, the original plaintiff, on which reliance has been placed by the lower Appellate Court, cannot be treated as evidence as the deponent died before he could be cross-examined, and that the diary referred to in his statement must also be left out of account. Assuming that this is so, still it appears from the judgment of the learned District Judge that he regarded the remaining evidence alone as sufficient proof of the passing of considera-

He said that the admission of the debt contained in the bond of 1914 was good evidence that consideration had passed, and that the evidence of Dial Singh and other persons, coinciding with the admission, could not be swept aside. The exclusion of Sant Singh's statement and of his diary would not, therefore, be a sufficient reason for interfering with the lower Appellate Court's decision.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 27th November 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Bajitpur, dated the 27th November 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Annada Charan Karkun, for the Appellants.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiffs and it arises out of a suit for recovery of certain lands on declaration of plaintiff's right thereto. The Court of first instance decreed the suit, and the decision has been reversed by the lower Appellate Court.

The question for decision is, what is the nature of the interest acquired by the mother under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law in property obtained by her on partition amongst her sons, i. e., whether she gets an absolute interest or a mere life-interest therein? It is now well-settled that under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, on partition between the sons the mother is entitled to take a share in lieu of her maintenance, and she gets only a life interest therein. See Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 8th Edition, section 621, at page 866. The principle laid down in Hridoy Kant Bhattacherjee v. Behari Lal Mookerjee (1) also supports my contention. So the share which the mother in this case got on partition between the sons must revert to the sons on the death of the mother. The defence was that the land was acquired with funds of the joint family consisting of the mother and the sons. But under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law the mother cannot be a member of a joint family. The learned Subordinate Judge, in reversing the decision of the primary Court, has come to no finding as to whether the property in suit was acquired with funds belonging to the brothers or with the funds belonging to the mother and the brothers and unless the latter is proved, the mother cannot have an absolute interest in it. The mere fact that the property was acquired when the sons and the mother were living jointly does not give the mother an absolute interest in the property, because the mother is no member of the joint family in the sense in which the expression is used in the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Respondents.—The proposition of law that the mother is entitled to a life-interest in the share obtained by her on partition between the sons is no doubt well settled. But that proposition will not have any application in this case. It appears that plaintiff No. 1 claims by right of inheritance from his mother, and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 claim by right of inheritance from their grandmother, and they rely mainly upon the arrangement or contract made between the mother and the sons. Here what was partitioned was not the ancestral property of the sons but property acquired by the mother and the sons jointly, so that the mother got an absolute interest in the share received by her Refers to Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition page 868. Even the mother can by agreement of the parties get an absolute interest in her share. See Debi Mangal Prosad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2). The lower Appellate Court has decided rightly that the mother in this case got an absolute interest in her share. The question before your Lordships is one of fact, viz., whether the mother had a mere life estate or an absolute interest, and it has been found that the mother got an absolute interest in her share, and that finding is conclusive.

The appellants before your Lordship are the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3 and not the other plaintiffs, and the appeal should be limited to the extent of their shares only.

Babu Annada Charan Karkun briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of a two thirds share in a certain land on the declaration of the plaintiffs' jote right thereto. The plaintiff No. 1, defendant No. 2 and the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 5 are three brothers, sons of Ram Manikya and his widow Kishori. The plaintiffs claim the land on the allegation that Kishori had only a Hindu woman's interest in that land, which would devolve on the three brothers on her death. The defendants Nos. 1 and 3 claim as purchasers of Kishori's interest, alleging that she had absolute interest in that land. It appears that the three brothers, who were formerly joint, divided their property and the property in suit was given to Kishori. The plaintiffs, who are appellants before me, rely on the principle of Hindu Law that the property obtained by a widow on partition of the family estate would devolve on her death on the next heirs of her husband. This proposition of Hindu Law is not disputed on behalf of the respondents. What is contended is, firstly, that it does not apply to the present case, where admittedly the property in suit is no part of the ancestral estate and never belonged to Kishori's husband. Secondly, it is contended that even if this proposition applies, a special agreement can be made with the heirs to give the widow an absolute right, and it is found by the lower Appellate Court that on partition the widow did get an absolute right. That by agreement a widow on partition with her sons can get an absolute right appears from the Privy Council case of Debi Mangal Prosad Singh v. Mahadeo Prasad Singh (2). Also the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is "I do not believe the plaintiffs' evidence which says that she got a fourth share for her maintenance," and then relating certain circumstances he goes on to say "under the circumstances I believe that the said Kishori had absolute right to the land and that the plaintiffs' case that she had only a life estate has not been established." These findings are equivalent to a finding that there was an arrangement by which the widow got an absolute right. Having regard to the pleadings of the parties under the circumstances referred to in the judgment, there were materials on which the lower Appellate Court could come to this finding. I can see no reason which would justify me in reversing this finding on second appeal.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a Court calls on a plaintiff to make up the Court-fee on his plaint and the plaintiff contends that the fee already paid is sufficient, the High Court will not interfere with the order in revision. It is for the plaintiff to make up his mind whether he will comply with the Court's order or not If he does not comply, his plaint will be rejected. Then unless the trial Court's order is final under section 12 of the Court Fees Act, the plaintiff will have a right of appeal If the order is final, neither an appeal nor revision will be competent.

Revision from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, dated the 18th June 1918.

Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order calling on plaintiff to make up Court-fee on his plaint. Plaintiff's contention is that the fee already filed is sufficient.

I do not consider that I should interfere on revision. It is for plaintiff to make up his mind whether he will comply with the Court's order or not If he does not comply, then his plaint will be rejected. Then, unless it is a case of the first Court's order as to the amount of stamp required being final by virtue of section 12 of the Court Fees Act, the plaintiff will have a right of appeal. If the first Court's decision on the point is final, then of course no Appellate Court can upset it, and I do not consider that a decision which is declared by law to be final should be attacked in revision any more than in appeal.

CHERLA SUBBA REDDI (DIED) AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 882), s 52—Lis pendens, doctrine of, scope of—Appeal—Alienation pending appeal—Alienee, joinder of, as party—Compromise between original parties, whether binds alienee—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 10, 11, O. XXIII, r 3.

Under Order XXII, rules 10 and 11, of the Civil Procedure Code a transferee pendente lite is entitled to come on record and to conduct all proceedings from the date he is added as a party, though he is bound by all orders passed up to that date and cannot raise defences not open to his transferer. A mortgagee pendente lite is within the rules. [p. 430, col. 2; p. 433, col. 1: p. 434, col. 2.]

An alienee pendente lite is not bound by a compromise between the original parties to which he is not a party. The moment he is impleaded, the only detraction of rights to which he subjects himself is the result of the litigation which has been openly and in his presence tried and decided upon, and what could have been done by way of adjustment or compromise, if he is not before the Court, should not be allowed to interfere with his claim for a fair trial and a decision on the merits [p. 433, col. 1; p. 434, col. 2; p. 434, col. 2; p 435, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J - The principle of lis pendens enunciated in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act owes its origin to the maxim that, where the subject in dispute owing to contest passes into the custody of the judiciary, parties to it are under an obligation not to withdraw it from the protection of the Judge. [p. 432, col 1.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the decision of the Honourable the Chief Justice, in C. M. P. No. 2734 of 1915, reported as 43 Ind. Cas. 502, in Appeal No. 201 of 1910, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the District Court, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 6 of 1907.

FACTS.—The mortgagee of the suit properties brought the present suit on his mortgage, pending which the mortgagor alienated the properties to the present appellant by way of mortgage. Subsequently, the parties to the suit compromised the matter. At this stage, the alienee applied to be made a party and the existing parties thereafter applied to have the compromise made a rule of Court. Their Lordships the Chief Justice and Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., differed as to whether the alienee could be allowed to question the compromise. The learned Chief Justice held that he could not. Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., held contra. Hence this Letters Patent Appeal.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—There is a distinction between a compromise as a mere act of parties and one which has been converted into a decree of Court. The former cannot bind, and the latter binds an alienee pendente lite except that where the compromise is registered, a question of priority may arise. So when an alienee makes himself a party before the compromise is made a rule of Court, section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply and he can rightly impugn the compromise and continue proceedings in his own behalf. See, as to an assignee's right of appeal, Sitaramaswamy v. Dulla Lakshmi Narasamma (1) and Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal (2).

[OLDFIELD, J.—To allow your plea amounts to a permission to evade the doctrine of lis pendens.]

But there is no injustice to anybody. On the other hand, if the alienee does not make himself a party and a decree is passed, the decree will bind him. The principle is enunciated in Tarakant Bunnerjee v. Puddomoney Dossee (3).

The English law is not different except on the question of notice. See Bellamy v. Sabine (4)

[KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—Section 52 does not compel the Court to pass a decree.]

That is so. "Any decree that may be passed" are the words.

See also Haradhun Chuckerbutty v. Protap Narain Chowdhry (5) and Manpal v. Sahib Ram (6). (The latter case does not apply). Section 52 does not introduce any new law of lis pendens. See Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Prag Narain (7) and Bishop of Winchester v. Paine (8). It is only the parties to a suit that are bound by the decree therein.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—In England a purchaser pendente lite will not be entitled to redeem. Section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act does not provide expressly.]

See also 47 American Cyclopedia 349.

Mr. A. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Though the document of compromise was executed only after the alienation, the actual compromise was arrived at long before the alienation. The decree was on the compromise as between the parties to the suit and hence did not include the 4th defendant (the alienee).

The alienee has not got an independent right of hearing. For that would amount to going beyond the decree and the compromise.

[KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The alienee is interested in impugning the compromise, why should he not be allowed to do so?]

Section 52 does not make any such concession, and the section applies in the absence of fraud, or collusion or of want of bona fides.

[KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—But every litigant has an inherent right to be heard on the merits of his case.]

Only provided that those merits are not traceable to or dependent upon the merits of another's case.

There is no distinction in principle between compromises and decrees in so far as both determine the litigation. See Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9).

[Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar.—A decree is nonetheless a decree though it originates in a compromise. That is Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9).]

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Suppose the present plaintiff makes the alienee a party, can the latter impugn the compromise?]

But he is only a purchaser pendente lite. How can his character as such be altered?

[OLDFIELD, J.—Order XXII, rule 10, makes him an interested party.]

But that rule applies only where one man walks out and another comes in. A purchaser pendente lite takes subject to the result of the suit, however it may end. See Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9).

JUDGMENT.

appeal, two mortgages on the property in suit were given by 1st defendant to 4th respondent, the present appellant, in June and November 1914. Meanwhile negotiations for a compromise had gone on between 1st defendant and plaintiff; but it is sufficient without reference to the exact stage they had reached, when the mortgages were given, to say that they resulted in a compromise on 22nd December 1914, which was reported to the Court on 16th September 1915, and which awarded to plaintiff as against 1st defendant the full relief asked for. Fourth respondent had, however, in consequence of his acquisition of an interest in the suit properties been made a party to the appeal on 11th February 1915. The question we have to decide is whether he is concluded by 1st defendant's action or is entitled to contest the appeal on its merits.

There are no English or Indian decisions, which can be applied to these facts directly. For in Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9), although a Full Bench of this Court held that the doctrine of lis pendens was not the less applicable, because the litigation ended, as it must do here between plaintiff and 1st defendant, in a compromise, the present case differs, because in it the alienee has been made a party, whilst the litigation is still pending; and Manpal v. Sahib Ram (6) was decided in favour of the alienee pendente lite on the ground that he was impleaded at the plaintiff's instance and an issue was raised between them at the trial, whereas here the joinder of 4th respondent was opposed by plaintiff and there have been no proceedings since it.

The case most closely in point is Tarakant Banerjee v. Pudomoney Dossee (3), in which it was held that a person, who acquired title pending the litigation and whose application to be impleaded was refused on the objection of a party, was not concluded by the decision reached before he could appeal against that refusal or institute a suit as supplemental to the one, in which he sought to intervene. The learned Chief Justice has distinguished the principle then applied by the Judicial Committee on the grounds that the alienee claimed, not as 4th respondent here has done, to be added as a party, but to be substituted for his alienors and that section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act had not then been enacted. But with all respect, although 4th respondent no doubt in terms applied to be added as a party, his application was in substance to be substituted as one for 1st defendant in respect of the portion of the latter's interest, which had devolved upon him; and as regards section 52 the decision of the Judicial Committee is in point, not with direct reference to the general doctrine of lis pendens enunciated in it, but as indicating the effect on the application of that doctrine, which an order, such as 4th respondent has obtained in the present case and such as would have been passed in England even before the English Order XVII, rule 3, was enacted, would have had. It is on the meaning and legal consequences of such an order that our decision must depend.

The order in 4th respondent's favour was passed by Tyabji, J., in the exercise of his discretion in the usual course under Order XXII, rule 10. It was not appealed against or, so far as appears, attacked before the Division Bench; and, although some objection to it has been mooted in argument before us, we have no reason, in the absence of any ground of appeal relating to it, for refusing to give it effect. As regards the effect, which it should receive, plaintiff's position is not clear. For his argument is, as I understand it, that 4th respondent, having been impleaded, is nevertheless not to be heard on the merits of the appeal. If so, the order he has obtained will be deprived of meaning. For an order under Order XXII, rule 10, is statedly one permitting the continuance of the proceeding against the person in question, subject presumably to his enjoyment of the rights of procedure, ordinarily available to a person in his position. The doctrine of lis pendens is, as explained in Bellamy v. Sabine (4), founded, not on any implied notice to the world of the pending litigation or other substantive consideration, but on the practical ground that in the absence of such a doctrine there would be no certainty that the litigation would ever come to an end; and there is, therefore, no objection to reading Order XXII, rule 10, as enabling the Court in the exercise of its discretion to exclude from the operation of the doctrine cases, in which that mischief need not be apprehended. In Chunni Lal v. Abdul Ali Khan (10) Bannerjee, J., no doubt said with reference to the position of a respondent impleaded under the provision formerly corresponding with Order XXII, rule 10, that "as he took the assignment pendente lite the doctrine of lis pendens applied to his case." But his meaning appears from the immediately succeeding sentence, "section 372 was consequently applicable and appellant was not competent to raise any plea which his assignors could not have put forward," to have been that he would be restricted to such pleas, not that he could not plead at all or that his right to plead was still to be determined. In Ahmedbhoy v. Vulleebhoy (11) the facts were similar to those before us except that a suit, not an appeal, was in question, and that in applying to be made a party the alienee relied, not like 4th respondent here, on his alienor's intention to compromise, but on facts indicating his intention to collude with the plaintiff; and the alienee was, after an exhaustive review of the English and Indian Law, made a party, statedly in order that he might put forward the defences open to his alienor. No case consistent with plaintiff's contentions had been shown us; and in these circumstances I concur with Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., and direct that the appeal be posted for further hearing on the merits.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Both the learned Judges who heard the appeal have agreed upon the facts and although it is open to us to go behind their judgments, I am satisfied that the findings come to by them are amply borne out by the evidence given in the case. Therefore, the facts on which the question of law has to be decided may be stated as follows. The 1st defendant executed to the 4th respondent two mortgages in June and November 1914. The plaintiff's mortgage was long anterior to the 4th respondent's mortgage. It was on the 28th of February 1895. The suit was brought upon this mortgage in February 1907. The judgment of the lower Court was given in March 1910. An appeal was preferred to this Court in August of the same year. During the pendency of the appeal the mortgages to the 4th respondent were executed. Thereupon he applied to the High Court to be made a party respondent to the appeal; and this application was granted in February 1915. The plaintiff presented an application on the 16th of September 1915 that a compromise entered into between him and the 1st defendant in December 1914 should be accepted and that a decree should be passed in terms of it. This was resisted by the 4th respondent on various grounds. Issues were sent down by the learned Judges for finding whether the alleged deed of compromise was in fact executed, whether the terms were settled prior to the alienation in favour of the 4th respondent, and whether the compromise was the result of fraud or collusion intended to defeat the rights of the 4th respondent. The District Judge found that the Razinamah was executed on 22nd December 1914, that although there were negotiations for the compromise for some time the final terms were settled only on that date, and that there was no fraud or collusion between the 1st defendant and the 4th respondent. These findings were accepted by the learned Chief Justice and Srinivasa Aiyangar, J. But they differed on the question whether the 4th respondent was bound by the terms of the compromise.

In the arguments before us on behalf of the respondent there was unconsciously a confusion of ideas. The main contention was that, as, if the 4th respondent were not a party to the appeal, he would have been bound by the result of the litigation, it follows that he must be deemed to have accepted the mortgages subject to the possibility of the 1st defendant and the 4th respondent entering into a compromise, and that, therefore, although he may have been a party to the litigation, he was bound by the terms of the compromise in the same way as if he had not been made a party at all. As I said before, there are two ideas involved in this contention which should be kept distinct. In the first place, there is the protection of law or the disability arising therefrom owing to the fact that a property which is the subject of litigation has been privately dealt with. That protection or disability is provided for by section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is a distinct right which is independent of the theory of lis pendens which a party to a suit has. That right is that where a party is before the Court and is interested in the subject matter of the litigation, his rights should not be affected by any adjustment or compromise to which he is not a party. If these two distinct principles are borne in mind, the solution of the problem may not be difficult. I will first deal with section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. I do not wish to embark upon any lengthy historical review of the principle of lis pendens. But I may be permitted to point out that the rules owes its origin to the maxim of Roman Law "Rem de qua controversia prohib mur in acrum dedicare, which I understand to mean that where the subject in dispute owing to contest passes into the custody of the judiciary, parties to it are under an obligation not to withdraw it from the protection of the Judge. From this initial principle the law of lis pendens has been developed in the jurisprudence of the various countries.

In England by 28 Edw. I, Ch. II, a purchase pendente lite was declared champertous and was held void. Subsequently it was held mostly by the intervention of the Equity Courts that the transaction, however repugnant to law, was not void altogether, but was enforceable subject to the result of the litigation pending in the Court. The historical judgment in Bellamy v Sabine (4) is now the basis of the principle of lis pendens in England. Lord Cranworth, the Lord Chancellor, said in that case: "It affects him not because it amounts to notice, but because the law does not allow litigant parties to give to others pending the litigation rights to the property in dispute so as to prejudice the opposite party . . . . . The necessities of mankind require that the decision of the Court...shall be binding, not only on the litigating parties but also on those who derive title under them by alienations made pending the suit, whether such alienees had or had not notice of pending proceedings." In order to avoid the possibility of fraud it was held that to attract the principle of lis pendens there must be active controversy in the litigation that is pending. This principle has been recognised in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. The meaning of the expression "contentious proceeding" has given rise to a conflict of views. It was ultimately held in Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9) that if the suit was contentious in its inception, this character of contentiousness was not taken away by the fact that the parties subsequently entered into a compromise. This must be treated as an exception to the general rule. The result of the legislation and of the authorities is that if the purchaser is not a party to the suit, he will be bound by a litigation which was in its inception contentious, whatever may be the process by which the ultimate conclusion is reached, whether by obtaining after active contest a decision by the Judge or by a compromise outside Court and its recognition by the Judge. That is all that is implied in or expressed by section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act and by Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9).

Now comes the question how far this principle is to be modified where the purchaser is a party to the litigation. In Bennett on Lis Pendens all the authorities relating to the impleading of the purchaser as a party have been fully considered. He has come to the conclusion that a purchaser is not a necessary party. He goes further and says that Courts should not allow the purchaser to be made a party to the pending suit. This pronouncement appears to me to go too far. There are some cases in which it was held the suit will be defective for want of proper parties if after notice of a purchase pendente lite the plaintiff does not make the purchaser a party. However that may be, in this country the matter is set at rest by Order XXII, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that rule "in cases of an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved." It was held in Muhammad Musihullah Khan v. Jarao Bai (12) that a mortgage pendente lite is within this rule. It has also been held in this Court [vide Sitaramaswamy v. Dulla Lakshmi Narasimma (1)] that the purchaser pendente lite has the right of preferring an appeal against a decision adverse to his assignor. No doubt Courts should exercise great caution in permitting a purchaser of this kind to become a party. Unless it is satisfied that the transferor is likely to act in violation of the rights of the transferee, the records of the Court should not be burdened by the pleadings of the purchaser, and the proceedings should not be lengthened by enabling such a purchaser to intermeddle with the suit already pending. But when once the order has been made permitting the purchaser to come in, it seems to me that the subject matter of the dispute in which he is interested should not be decided upon to his prejudice without hearing him. That is a right which as suitor he possesses by virtue of his being a party to the litigation. Order XXIII, rule 3, provides for the compromise of a suit It presupposes that all the parties interested have entered into the compromise. If any one of them stands out, it is a well recognised principle of jurisprudence that the compromise between the other parties should not in the least derogate from his rights. It follows from these provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure that although a purchaser pendente lite takes the transfer subject to the result of the litigation, and if he is not impleaded as a party he will be bound by any lawful compromise or adjustment which may be entered into between the plaintiff and his transferor, the moment that he becomes a defendant, the only detraction of right to which he subjects himself is the result of the litigation which has been openly and in his presence tried and decided upon. Once he is in the array of parties, what could have been done by way of compromise or adjustment if he is not before the Court should not be allowed to interfere with his claim for a fair trial and a decision on the merits.

It was not seriously disputed that if there was a private adjustment outside the Court which is not reported to it, that would not bind the purchaser pendente lite. Therefore, what gives force to the adjustment is the sanction of the Court, and the question, therefore, resolves itself into this. Can a Court sanction a compromise so as to affect the rights of one of the parties before it, although it may be a lawful agreement between the other parties? My answer is in the negative. It was said that the finding that there was no fraud or collusion is conclusive against the rights of the 4th respondent. I am unable to follow this reasoning. If there was fraud or collusion, even though the purchaser is not a party, he can impeach the compromise in a fresh suit, and how is his position bettered by intervening at an earlier stage to protest his rights? Further, the prejudice to the purchaser would not necessarily be consequent upon fraud or collusion. The transferor and the plaintiff may honestly believe that a certain amount is due. They may not embark upon a complicated enquiry into the question of limitation. They may not desire to go behind what is apparent on the face of the record and may agree honestly to fix the amount that is payable by one party to other. But the purchaser pendente lite has a larger right. He can litigate the question whether the amount claimed in the suit was really due, whether it was barred by limitation and whether it is a binding debt. Therefore, the mere fact that there has been no fraud or collusion does not settle the rights of the purchaser pendente lite. There are observations in Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal(2)to the effect that the purchaser would be affected only if he does not choose to make himself a party. Haradhun Chuckerbutty v. Protap Narain Chowdhry (5) is to the same effect. In Tarakant Bannerjee v. Puadomony Dossee (3) there are dicta at page 457 which very strongly support the view that the rights of a person who can and does intervene should not be affected by any adjustment or agreement between the other parties. I am, therefore, of opinion that the compromise, although it may be binding upon the 1st defendant, cannot affect the right of the 4th respondent to claim a judicial decision on the question.

It was said that this would lead to inconsistent decrees being passed in respect of the same subject matter. I feel no difficulty on this point. Any decree to which the 1st defendant subjects himself will prima facie be personal and would affect property only in so far as the 4th respondent's interests are not prejudiced. I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother regarding re-hearing.

POLICHERLA VEERARAGHAVA REDDI v. CHERLA SUBBA REDDI.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—This appeal arises out of a difference of opinion between the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Sreenivasa Iyengar as to the right of an alienee pendente lite who has been brought on record as a party under the provisions of Order XXII, rules 10 and 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, to object to the recording of a compromise entered into between the original parties to the suit after the alienation in his favour and to the passing of a decree in terms thereof. The facts are fully set out in the judgment of Sreenivasa Aiyangar, J., and the appeal has been argued on the basis of the findings arrived at by the District Judge and accepted by the learned Judges who first heard the appeal.

A Full Bench of this Court in Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (9) has held that an alienee pendente lite who is not brought on record will be bound by a decree passed on a bona fide compromise arrived at between the parties, but there is, so far as I am aware, no decision where the rights of an alienee pendente lite who is a party to the suit to object to the compromise have been decided.

Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, which codifies the law as to lis pendens, enacts that immoveable property, the right to which is directly and specifically in question in a suit or proceeding, cannot during its active prosecution be transferred or otherwise dealt with by a party, so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein except with the leave of the Court.

To bring into operation section 52 there should be a decree. A compromise arrived at between the parties to a suit is like any other contract or agreement only binding and enforceable as between the parties thereto or their privies. Ordinarily a person who has parted with his interest in property cannot by any contract or by any dealing with the interest he has parted with affect the right of the alienee. If the compromise is not embodied in a decree, it cannot be said that an alienee pendente lite is bound by it. Is he entitled, if on record, to object to the Court passing a decree which would confer validity on a transaction not otherwise binding on him? I think the answer to the question must be sought, not with reference to the doctrine of lis pendens which assumes a decree to attract to itself the provisions of section 52, but to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as regards the right of parties to a suit.

There can be little doubt that a transferee pendente lite is entitled to come on record and to conduct all proceedings from the date he is added as a party, though he would be bound by all orders passed up to that date and could not raise a defence not open to his transferor. Order XXII, rules 10 and 11, are based on the principle that a person having an interest in the suit should be a party, so that he may have an opportunity of proving his case and supporting his title and also to prevent any chances of fraud or collusion on the part of his transferor, who often after the alienation in his favour retains little or no interest in the subject-matter of the litigation. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tarakant Banerjee v. Puddomoney Dossee (3), "the law allows a party interested to intervene in the suit that right should not be rigorously dealt with." The danger of secret collusion referred to by their Lordships is as real to-day as it was when the case was decided in 1866. Ahmedbhoy v. Vulleebhoy (1) is also an authority in point. It is no answer to the request of the alienee to be added to say that the alienation was pending suit as Order XXII, rule 10, expressly refers to acquisition of interest pendente lite. Except under special circumstances, I do not think the Court ought to refuse to join an alienee as a party under Order XXII, rule 10.

When an alienee has been so added, he gets all the rights of a party to a suit. I can see nothing in the Code which reduces him to a mere figurehead bound by all the acts of the original parties because his alienation was pending the suit. If for example his transferee remains ex parte, can it be said that he cannot let in evidence or prosecute or defend the suit because it has been held that an alienee pendente lite is bound by an ex parte decree passed in the suit? Order XXIII, rule 3, contemplates a compromise or adjustment between all the parties to the suit, and it is difficult to see how the Court can pass a decree on a compromise to which a party to the suit was not a party without such person's consent, unless it can be held that a compromise as a compromise between the original parties is binding on an alienee pending suit. To do so would be to extend the doctrine of lis pendens to agreements between the original parties to a suit which may at some future date enable them to get a decree in terms thereof. I can find no authority for doing so.

There may be cases where the other party has had no notice of the alienation pendente lite and has bona fide compromised the suit and put himself in a disadvantageous position, owing to the alienee not having taken steps either to give him notice of his alienation or to bring himself on record with due diligence. In such cases the alienee may be estopped or prevented from objecting to a decree being passed. These cases are outside any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as Order XXIII, rule 2, does not prevent a Court from passing a decree in terms of a compromise to which one of the parties to the suit is not a party, if such a compromise will be otherwise binding or if the party objecting has estopped himself from disputing its binding nature on him. No such pleas have been raised by the respondent. There is, therefore, no apparent hardship in his being required to prove his case.

I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brothers Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., and concur in the order passed by them.

*Custom—Guardianship—Alienation—Brother, adult, whether authorised to alienate minor brother's property—Muhammadans of Muzaffargarh District—*Riwaj-i-am, entry in, value of.

Among Muhammadans of Muzaffargarh District, on the death of a father the guardianship of the person and property of his minor children devolves on his eldest son, if adult. Such guardian is entitled to alienate the property of the minor for payment of the debts of the minor's father, for the marriage or maintenance of the minor or for an object directly advantageous to the minor [p. 436, col 1.]

A riwaj-i-am is a public record prepared by a public officer in discharge of his duties and under Government rules, and, therefore, statements contained in a riwaj-i-am, which is not imperfectly compiled, form a strong piece of evidence in support of the custom affirmed therein, even when they are unsupported by instances, provided they are not opposed to the general custom of the country. [p. 436, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 20th July 1916.

Mr. Govind Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present appeal arises the plaintiffs sued for possession of certain land alienated by their brother Ghulam Muhammad during their minority for Rs. 638, on the ground that the vendor was not a legal guardian and that the alienation was not for their benefit. The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that Ghulam Muhammad was a lawful guardian and that the alienation was for valid necessity. In arriving at this conclusion it relied upon an entry in the riwaj i am applicable to all Mussulmans of the district, to the effect that on the death of the father guardianship of the person and property of the minor children devolves on the eldest brother, if adult, and upon a further provision in the same riwaj i am that a guardian may sell or mortgage property for the benefit of his ward. Sheikh Amir Ali, who heard the appeal, was of opinion that the entry in the riwaj-i-am, which was unsupported by instances, was insufficient to prove the existence of the custom put forward by the defendants and accepting the appeal, decreed the plaintiffs' claim with costs throughout. He did not give any finding as to whether there was any necessity for the alienation or whether the minors had derived any benefit therefrom.

The present appeal has been filed upon a certificate granted by the present District Judge, and the question for decision is whether any custom exists contrary to the plaintiffs' personal law in virtue of which their brother as the lawful guardian of the minors had authority to alienate their land for a necessary purpose. Bhagat Govind Das in arguing the case for the appellants relies upon the Customary Law of the Muzaffargarh District compiled by Pandit Hari Kishen Kaul, Settlement Collector, in 1903. The section dealing with guardianship and minority and with the powers of guardians will be found at pages 24 to 25 of the compilation. The answer to question 2 given at page 25 is as follows: "All Mussalmans state: On the death of the father, the guardianship of the person and the property of the minor children devolves on the eldest brother, if adult." The answer to question 4 given at page 26 is: "A guardian may mortgage or sell the moveable or immoveable property for payment of debts of his ward's father, for the marriage or maintenance of the ward or for an object directly advantageous to the ward." There is no exception given in respect of either of these answers, all tribes concurring in them. The author's preface shows that this volume of Customary Law was compiled with great care and the author himself states that the Code may be taken as an authoritative statement of the customs of the various tribes in the Muzaffargarh District. No doubt, there are certain rulings of this Court which lay down that any entry in a riwaj-i-am unsupported by instances is not of itself very strong evidence in proof of a custom. Counsel for the appellants, however, refers to Beg v. Allah Ditta (1) in which their Lordships held that the entry in the riwaj i-am in favour of the succession of a daughter's son whose father was a khana damad, in preference to collaterals was a strong piece of evidence in support of such custom which it lay upon the plaintiff's collaterals to rebut. The entry in the riwaj-i-am produced in that case was also unsupported by instances, but their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that it was a public record prepared by a public officer in discharge of his duties and under Government rules, and that the statements contained in it formed a strong piece of evidence in support of custom. This judgment was considered by a Division Bench of this Court in the case reported as Wazira v. Maryan (2), wherein it was held, following Chhuttan v. Hazari Lal (3), that statements in a riwaj-i-am when opposed to general custom can carry very little weight unless supported by instances and that consequently the entries in the riwaj i am of the Gujranwala District in favour of the special custom relied on by the plaintiff's collaterals unsupported by instances were insufficient to establish that custom, such riwaj-i-am having, moreover, been imperfectly compiled. Now in the present case it cannot be said that the riwaj-i-am was imperfectly compiled. Moreover, according to custom generally prevailing in the Punjab a guardian in the case of Hindus and Sikhs can alienate his ward's property for a necessary purpose. It can hardly be said that the custom alleged in the present case is one contrary to the ideas as generally prevalent amongst agriculturists in this province. The custom is certainly contrary to the personal law of Muhammadans, but following the Privy Council ruling Beg v. Allah Ditta (1) I must hold that the entries in the Muzaffargarh riwaj-i-am set forth above are strong evidence in proof of the existence of the alleged custom and are quite sufficient to shift the onus on to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have no doubt produced a judicial decision dated the 25th of June 1912 which is in their favour, but it is only one by a Munsif in which it was held that it had not been proved to the effect that a brother was guardian by custom. The Munsif in that case referred to the fact that the entry in the riwaj-i-am was unsupported by instances. The oral evidence produced by the parties is not of much importance, and I hold that the onus has been shifted on to the plaintiffs and that they have not discharged it.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court remand the case thereto for re-decision of the appeal. It will be necessary for it to come to a finding on the question of necessity. Stamp in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Appeal accepted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 165, 181 —Application by judgment-debtor for restoration of property in excess of that decreed—Limitation.

An application by a judgment-debtor for the restoration of immoveable property in excess of what has been decreed is governed by Article 181 and not by Article 165 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 440, col. 2.]

Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss, 21 M. 494; 8 M. L. J. 75; 7 Ind Dec. (N. S.) 706, overruled.

Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi, 34 Ind. Cas. 231; 14 A. L. J. 401; 38 A. 339, followed.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, dated the 5th March 1917, in Appeal Suit No. 596 of 19 6, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Nadapuram, dated the 9th August 1915, in Revision Execution Petition No. 516 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 392 of 1913.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 23rd October 1918, upon perusing the petition of appeal, the orders of the lower Courts and the material papers in the case, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellants, and of Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for 1st to 6th and 8th Respondents, and the 9th and 10th Respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 31st of October 1918, the Court (Ayling and Krishnan, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

AYLING, J. - This is of the nature of a second appeal against an order of the District Munsif of Nadapuram directing restoration to respondents Nos. 1 to 8 of certain property, which he held to have been wrongly delivered to appellant under a decree of his Court.

The sole question before us now is whether respondents' application was time-barred: and this turns on whether Article 165 of Schedule I, Limitation Act, is applicable to the case.

Respondents were defendants in the original suit and judgment-debtors under the decree, and we are asked by their Counsel to hold that Article 165 only applies to applications by other persons under Order XXI, rule 100, and not to petitions by judgment debtors under section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

On this point there is a conflict of rulings. In Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1) the learned Judges held in a carefully considered judgment that applications of this kind by judgment-debtors were governed by Article 181, and not Article 165. In this view I fully concur: as also in the reasoning which supports it. On the other hand a Bench of this Court has held in Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) that Article 165 applies; the judgment is, in this respect, of the briefest and assigns no reasons.

With all respect I think this view is wrong: but as it has never been overruled and is reported in the regular series, I do not feel justified in refusing to follow it without a reference to a Full Bench.

I would, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the question of whether Article 165 of Schedule I, Limitation Act, is applicable to applications by a judgment debtor for restoration of immoveable property in excess of what has been decreed.

KRISHNAN, J.—This appeal against appellate order arises from an application by 1 to 8 respondents against the appellant, under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for recovering, with mesne profits, possession of certain properties alleged to have been wrongfully taken possession of by him in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 762 of 1909 from their lessee, the 9th respondent who was the 15th defendant in the case. Respondents Nos. 1 to 8 are the legal representatives of one Ahmed Kutti who was the 10th defendant in the suit. They had first put forward their present claim as a suit, Original Suit No. 392 of 1913, but on objection being taken by the appellant it was converted into an application under section 47, as they are the representatives of the 10th defendant in Original Suit No. 762 of 1909.

Both the lower Courts have held that they are entitled to the reliefs claimed by them, as the decree in Original Suit No. 762 of 1909 did not include the properties in question, and have directed the properties to be re delivered to them with mesne profits at Rs. 20 a year. Appellant's plea that the respondents' application was time-barred under Article 165 of the Limitation Act, having been made nearly 2 years and 11 months after possession was taken by him, was overruled; the lower Courts holding that the 3 years' rule of limitation applied, apparently under Article 181, though they do not say so expressly.

The appellant has again raised before us the same question of limitation. His learned Counsel contends that Article 165 applies and relies upon the observation in the case in Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2), where the learned Judges say: "There can be no doubt, as held by the lower Appellate Court, that Article 165, Schedule II, Indian Limitation Act, is applicable to a case where the applicant is a party bound by the decree as well as where he is a stranger [see Vythilinga Muppanar v. Seethalakshmi Ammal (3), Appeal against. Appellate OrderNo.25 of 1839 (unreported)]." That observation is no doubt directly in the appellants' favour, but the question was recently considered by the Allahabad High Court in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1) where the learned Judges held, dissenting from the view taken in the Madras case, that Article 165 did not apply to an application by a judgment debtor for restoration of immoveable property seized by the decree holder in excess of what had been decreed; but Article 181 applied.

With all respect to the learned Judges in the Madras cases I am inclined to think that the view expressed in the Allahabad case is correct and should be adopted. I fully agree with the reasons given by the learned Judges in that case and I need not repeat them. I would, however, add that if Article 165 should be read as applicable to an application like the present one under section 47, it would be equally justifiable to apply it to a defendant who claims to recover by way of restitution proceedings immoveable property taken by the decree-holder from him; for he would also be a person dispossessed of immoveable property applying under the Code of Civil Procedure, and disputing the right of the decree holder to be put into possession. It has, however, always been held that Article 181 is applicable to such a case. Furthermore, as Article 165 cannot by its terms apply to the recovery of moveable property or of money taken by the decree-holder in excess of what he is entitled to under the decree, the application of Article 165 to the recovery of immoveable property so taken, will lead to the extraordinary position that in the case of the latter the judgment debtor will only have 30 days, whereas in the case of the former he will have 3 years, a result that the Legislature can hardly have intended.

The wording of Article 165 and its position in conjunction with Articles 166 and 167 would seem to indicate that it is properly applicable only to applications under Order XXI, rule 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I may also observe that when, as in the present case, a person dispossesses another of property not included in the decree, it seems doubtful if the latter can be considered to be "a decree-holder" qua that property within the meaning of the article.

In Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) there is no discussion of the question before us, as the learned Judges merely follow the unreported case. It would also seem, as pointed out in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1), that the observation in it is in reality an obiter dictum, as the Judges were dealing with the case of a minor, to whom they held no limitation applied. On examining the unreported case in Appeal Against Appellate Order No. 25 of 1889 [Vythilinga Muppanar v. Seethalakshmi Ammal (3)] I find it is no doubt a decision in point. But the judgment in it is based entirely on the absence of the words "other than a judgment debtor" in the article. This is no doubt at first sight an important point, but I am inclined to think that it does not affect the consideration in favour of the opposite view. It is only if the article can be applied to the case of a judgment-debtor, that the omission will be material. But, if, as I think, the article applies only to applications under rule 100, it was unnecessary and even incorrect to introduce an exception in favour of judgment-debtors into it when the rule is sufficient to exclude them as it does. The form of the article is thus quite consistent with my view.

I, therefore, agree to the reference to the Full Bench proposed by my learned brother.

This appeal came on for hearing on the 7th April 1919 in pursuance of the above order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellants.—Article 165, Limitation Act, applies. See Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2). The time limit is 30 days. See also Vythilinga Muppanar v. Seethalakshmi Ammal (3). The Allahabad High Court takes a different view and holds Article 181 applicable. See Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1). But Tej Singh v. Chabeli Ram (4) follows Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) and so is overruled by Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1).

See also Muthiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (5), Pasumarti Payidanna v. Ganti Lakshminarasamma (6) and Mahomed Hossin v. Kokil Singh (7), where the principle is reiterated.

[WALLIS, C. J.—The wording of Order XXI, rule 100, is such as would restrict it to only properties covered by the decree. Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1) necessitates a suit in the place of an application.]

Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) has been followed here recently in Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 65 of 1918.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.—Article 165 refers to applications under the rules and so does not refer to applications which fall within the purview of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The application in question is essentially one under section 47, as between the parties to the suit and so Article 165 cannot cover the case. Further, this article was appended to the section corresponding to Order XXI, rule 100, in the Code of 1859, whence it has been transposed to the Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877. What is said in Vythilinga Muppanar v. Seethalakshmi Ammal (3) is that unless the Articles 165 and 167 are made specifically to refer to the judgment debtor, there will seem to be some tautology in their framing. So that decision only puts it that the judgment-debtor is not within the purview of these articles as at present worded.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, in reply.—The Limitation Act was re-enacted in 1908 and if the Legislature was of opinion that Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) gave out wrong law, that would have been remedied. The Legislature has deliberately omitted to do so. Compare the wording of Article 166 which has been held to have a very wide application.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The period of limitation prescribed by Articles 165 and 168 may be traced back to sections 230 and 269 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, which dealt only with obstructions by, and dispossessions of, persons other than the defendant. The provision in section 230 was re-enacted as Article 158 (now 165) of the Limitation Act of 1871, as follows: "Under the Code of Civil Procedure by a person dispossessed of immoveable property and disputing the right of the decree holder to be put into possession." This, in my opinion, must be read as meaning "disputing the right of the decree-holder to be put into possession under the decree." That question had been decided against the defendant in the suit itself, and it was not open to him to raise it again in execution. This shows that Article 158 was intended to apply only to a case covered by section 230 of the Code, where a person other than the defendant had been dispossessed, and that is in accordance with the ordinary presumption that no substantial alteration is intended when a particular provision is transferred from one Statute to another. Article 158 of the Act of 1871 did not provide for applications by a decree-holder who had been resisted by third persons in taking possession under the decree, whereas Article 160 (now 167) dealt with complaints in the case of Court sales both by the purchaser and by persons dispossessed by him (section 269 of the Code of 1859). In the Act of 1877, Article 158 was reproduced as Article 165 and amended by inserting after decree-holder the words "or purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree," and Article 167 was amended by extending it to complaints of obstruction by decree-holders as well as by purchasers (a case not dealt with by the Act of 1871), and by making it applicable to applications complaining of dispossession, not only by auction-purchasers, but also by decree-holders. Both these cases were, however, covered by Article 165 as amended, and the latter portion of this article was, therefore, not reproduced in Article 167 of the Act of 1908. In Appeal Against Appellate Order No. 25 of 1889 [Vythilinga Muppanar v. Seethalakshmi Ammal(3)], which was followed in Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2), the learned Judges relied on the fact that Articles 165 and 167 do not in terms exclude the judgment debtor, but their attention was not called to the fact that the articles were transferred from the Code of 1859 where the restriction was to be found. They further observed that "unless the articles referred severally to judgment-debtors as well as to third parties, there would be tautology." There was, however, tautology in the Act of 1877 in either view, and in the Act of 1908, Article 167 was amended so as to remove it. There is in my opinion nothing in these changes to show any intention of widening the scope of the article so as to make it applicable to defendants.

The decision in Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) having stood so long unquestioned in this Court and elsewhere I have felt great doubt as to whether we should not continue to follow it, having regard to the nature of the points decided, on the principle of stare decisis. The Legislature has, however, itself restricted the scope of Article 165 by restricting in the Code of 1908 applications by third parties under Order XXI, rule 100, to applications with reference to property covered by the decree or sale in pursuance thereof, and the fact that this procedure is not now applicable to complaints by third parties of dispossession of property not covered by such decree or sale appears to me to afford an additional reason for excluding from the scope of the article similar complaints by defendants who, as I am satisfied, were never intended to be covered by it. I think, moreover, that the rights of defendants are sufficiently restricted by their being required to apply under section 47 within the period limited by Article 181. Agreeing with the decision in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1) I would overrule Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2) and answer the question in the negative.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—In this case, I shared with my Lord (if I may respectfully say so) the hesitation he felt in overruling the old decision in Ratnam Ayyar v. Krishna Doss Vital Doss (2). But I am convinced after reading his opinion that that decision is erroneous. As cases of wrong delivery of judgment-debtors' property in excess of that decreed are rare and as it is very unlikely that many titles could have been created arising from alienations of such property by decree holders to purchasers who believed the title to have been perfected by the default of judgment-debtors to file their applications within the shorter period of limitation till now prevailing, and as most of even those titles would have been perfected by the lapse of 3 years since the dates of such alienations, I agree in the answer proposed by my Lord.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXXIII, r. 5 (d)—Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis —Court, power of, to decide question of limitation—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Where an application is made for leave to sue in forma pauperis, the Court making an enquiry into the alleged pauperism of the applicant has power to decide the question of limitation and decide whether the plaintiff has or has not a subsisting cause of action.

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision with the decision of a Court which had jurisdiction to deal with the matter.

Civil revision from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, dated the 5th October 1918.

Mr. Harbhagwan Das, for the Petitioner.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The order under revision was passed under clause (d) of rule 5, Order XXXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Subordinate Judge held that although the petitioner was a pauper, she had no subsisting cause of action, her suit being barred by limitation. For a decision on this point the learned Subordinate Judge took into consideration such materials as were on the record before him. He took into consideration the statements in the petition of plaint and the deposition of the plaintiff made in Court. The Counsel for the petitioner has urged before me that the learned Subordinate Judge had no power to deal with the question of limitation because that was a question which related to the merits of the case. This contention is opposed to decided cases. It has been held that the Court has power to decide the question of limitation and decide whether the plaintiff has or has not a subsisting cause of action. This question was decided by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Chattar pal Singh v. Raja Ram (1). Having regard to this decision, it cannot be said that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to decide the case in the manner he did. According to the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council, this Court has no power to interfere with the decision of a Court which had jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge may be erroneous on the question of limitation, but I have no power to interfere with it.

Under these circumstances the application for revision fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Revision dismissed.

Public highway—Dedication, proof of.

In order to establish a public right of way by proof of user alone, it is necessary to show that such a way leads from one public terminus to another. The right of way may, however, be held proved in a road leading merely to a private place of interest if it is shown that the owner has allowed the public to spend money in improving the road, in which case dedication may be inferred. [p. 442, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barabanki, dated the 28th October 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Fatehpur, dated the 30th June 1918.

Mr. B. N. Chakbast, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff-appellant sues the defendant respondent for a declaration that the latter was not entitled to block up a certain door on the east of his (the plaintiff's) house by stacking wood on the immediate space outside and also asks for an injunction. The suit was based on the allegation that the land immediately outside the door was a portion of a plot No. 822 in the Settlement Map of the abadi, which plot was described as parti nazul land, and that the plaintiff had acquired a right of way thereover by easement by reason of sixty years' user. The right of way was denied by the defendant who, however, in his written statement admitted that the land immediately outside the door (described by him as gosha No. 1 of plot No. 822) was public property. On these pleadings obviously the only question which arose was whether the plaintiff had a right of way by easement over gosha No. 1 of plot No. 822, which was admittedly Government land. The learned Munsif, however, allowed the plaintiff to make a verbal addition to his cause of action without amending the plaint. This addition was that plot No. 822 was not merely Government land but was a public highway or rasta—a plea which was obviously inconsistent with the claim to an easement. He then framed two issues. One was whether the plaintiff had a right to use the land of gosha No. 1 of plot 822 on the ground that it was a public highway, and the other was whether he had a right to use the land on the ground of his having acquired an easement of right of way over it. He decided the first of these two issues in favour of the plaintiff and held in consequence that it was not necessary to decide the second issue. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Barabanki found that the evidence did not prove that gosha No. 1 of plot No. 822 was a public highway and remanded the case for decision on the question of easement. This order of remand has been appealed from, on the ground that the Subordinate Judge was not justified in holding gosha No. 1 of plot No. 822 not to be a public highway merely because it did not lead from one public plot to another and that he had wrongly interpreted the khasra of the old Settlement. This khasra described the land in question as parti gali amad roft, that is, "forsaken land used as a lane for going to and fro," which the learned Subordinate Judge held did not necessarily mean that it was a public highway. To support the proposition that a public way need not lead from one public plot to another appellant's Counsel quotes Fazal Haq v. Maha Chand (1). This ruling merely holds that a person who has acquired by purchase from the Municipality a piece of land which was formerly a public thoroughfare, cannot stop the drain of another person which used to flow on to the piece of land. It appears to have no relevance to this case. At the same time there is no doubt that the statement of the law in Peacock's Easements, Second Edition, page 235, on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied, is out of date. It is there stated that a public road must lead from one public place to another public place and that there cannot be a right for the public to go to a place where the public have no right to be. The rulings relied on by Peacock are English rulings which have been superseded. At page 11 of Volume 16 of Halsbury's Laws of England in a note it is stated as follows:—"It was at one time strenuously contended that a way which was not a thoroughfare but only a cul de sac could not be a highway, but such a contention can no longer be supported." In the same volume later on at pages 39 and 40 it is stated that the law at present is that, in order to establish a public right of way by proof of user alone, it is necessary to show that such a way leads from one public terminus to another. The right of way may, however, be held proved in a road leading merely to a private place of interest if it is shown that the owner has allowed the public to spend money in improving the road, in which case dedication may be inferred. In the present case the evidence shows that the land in question was used by the public for approaching a factory of sugar. It is not, however, shown that any money was ever spent on this approach by the public. The decision, therefore, of the learned Subordinate Judge was correct and this appeal is rejected under Order XLI, rule 11.

Appeal rejected.

LEHNA SINGH—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 2 (3)—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court—Executing Court, whether can investigate fact of payment.

It is not open to an executing Court to investigate in execution proceedings the fact of receipt of the decretal amount or of an adjustment of the decree out of Court. By reason of the special provision of the law contained in Order XXI, rule 2 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code, the determination of this question has been taken out of the purview of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. [p. 444, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 21st August 1918.

Mr. Hargopal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Durga Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree. The facts are simple. One Lehna Singh obtained a decree for an aggregate sum of Rs. 1,671-11-5 on the 7th of October 1915 against the appellant Parma Ram. The first application for execution was made on the 17th of January 1916. Certain property was attached in execution of that decree. On the 20th of December 1917 the present application was made, when the decree-holder admitted part payment of the decree to the extent of Rs. 1,240 and applied for the execution of the decree for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 431-11-5 including costs of the execution. Notice was issued to the judgment-debtor, and he appeared on the 25th of January 1918 and produced a receipt dated the 21st of February 1916 for a sum of Rs. 1,677 executed by the decree-holder Lehna Singh in his favour, alleging that the whole amount of the decree had been paid out of Court and the matter had been adjusted between him and the decree holder. The Court executing the decree, namely, the Subordinate Judge of Multan, recognised this alleged payment and relying upon the receipt that was produced in Court, held that the matter had been adjusted between the parties and that it was not open to the decree-holder to go behind it and claim any sum under the decree.

The decree-holder preferred an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge. The lower Appellate Court has taken a different view. It has held that looking to the clear provision of the law contained in clause (3) of rule 2, Order XXI, the Court executing the decree could not have recognised the payment or the adjustment relied upon by the judgment debtor. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has written a very careful and exhaustive judgment. He has looked into all the cases relied upon by the Pleaders of the respective parties and has come to the conclusion that the authorities in favour of the proposition, that it is not open to an executing Court to recognise a payment or adjustment not certified according to the rules laid down under the Code, are numerous. There are only two cases decided by the Bombay High Court which to a certain extent go against this proposition. Taking this view the learned Judge of the Court below set aside the order of the Court of first instance and held that the decree-holder was entitled to execute this decree.

The judgment-debtor has come up in second appeal to this Court, and the learned Pleader who has appeared in support of the appeal has for the most part relied upon the decisions of the Bombay High Court reported as Trimbak Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (1) and Hansa Godhoji v. Bhawa Jagaji (2). He has argued that the view taken by the learned Judge of the Court below on the question of limitation relating to an application under clause (2) of rule 2 is entirely erroneous, inasmuch as it was only by way of a defence that the question of the adjustment and payment was brought forward before the Court. He has, however, argued that the objection of the judgment debtor may be looked upon as an application required under clause (2) of rule 2. These arguments are contradictory. If his objections are to be treated as an application informing the Court that an adjustment had taken place under clause (2) of rule 2, then it certainly is governed by Article 174 of the Limitation Act. It is needless for me to go into the matter in any detail. The question is not one of first impression but is covered by a number of authorities of different High Courts. In the case reported as Mathar Dravia v. Subramania Pillai (3) the matter has been fully considered by the Madras High Court. The same Court in Alathoor Badrudeen v. Gulam Mohideen (4) held a similar view and dissented from the ruling reported as Trimback Ramkrishna v. Hari Laxman (1), to which I have already referred. The learned Counsel for the decree-holder has also relied upon a very recent decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Jogendra Prosad v. Asutosh Goswami (5). It is very clearly laid down there that it is not open to an executing Court to investigate the fact of receipt of the decretal amount or of the adjustment of the decree out of Court in the execution proceedings. The learned Judges in that case also clearly decided the question that by reason of the special provision of the law the determination of this question had been taken out of the purview of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In my opinion the view taken by the learned Judge of the Court below was correct, and I must dismiss the appeal which I do hereby with costs.

UPPER BURMA JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 162B OF 1918.

January 23, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Heald, A. J. C.

MAUNG GAW YA—APPLICANT

MAUNG TALOK AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage, usufructuary—Redemption—Mortgagee, whether entitled to growing crops.

In Burma an ordinary usufructuary mortgagee or his tenant is entitled to all the crops sown or planted by him on the land which were growing thereon at the time of redemption and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them provided that such crops were grown or planted before the person who grew them had notice of the intended redemption. [p. 449, col. 2; p. 450, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the judgment and decree of the District Court, Yamethin, passed in Civil Appeal No. 21 of 1918, dated the 16th May 1918.

Mr. D. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—About 1888 one Maung Shan, father of Ye Gyaw and Maung Talok, mortgaged the land in suit with possession to Shwe Sin, father-in-law of Nyo Mya. Shwe Sin died and in 1904 his son-in-law Nyo Mya again mortgaged the land to Po Hnit, who put Gaw Ya into possession as his tenant for the cultivating season of 1915 16. On the 22nd of May 1915 Maung Talok and his sister-in-law Ma Kaing, who was the widow of Ye Gyaw, sued Nyo Mya and Po Hnit for redemption and obtained a decree. They redeemed the land from Po Hnit under the decree and mortgaged it with possession to Tun E. Tun E took possession of the land, but according to Gaw Ya agreed to let him have the half share of the crops then growing on the land which he would have been entitled to enjoy under his agreement with Po Hnit. Instead, however, of allowing Gaw Ya to get half the crops, Tun E, according to the plaint, reaped and kept all the crops himself. Gaw Ya, therefore, sued Tun E to recover Rs. 82-8-0 as being the value of half the crops, Rs. 19-8-0 as being the value of the seed which he had sown, and Rs. 6-14-0 paid by Tun E as land revenue which, under the agreement which Gaw Ya alleged to have been made with Tun E, was payable by Gaw Ya. Tun E replied that he never promised to give Gaw Ya half the outturn and did not even know that Gaw Ya had grown any crops on the land. He denied that the yield of the land amounted to 165 baskets and said that he worked it himself as usufructuary mortgagee. It is to be noted that he did not at first deny that he had taken the crops.

On these pleadings the Court framed issues as to whether Gaw Ya worked the land as Po Hnit's tenant, whether Tun E agreed to give Gaw Ya half the produce, and what the yield of the land was.

Gaw Ya gave evidence on his own behalf. He deposed that he was Po Hnit's tenant on an agreement that he was to pay Po Hnit half the produce as rent and that he was to supply the seed grain and Po Hnit was to pay the revenue. He had actually sowed 13 baskets of seed grain and planted about half the area of the land under that agreement, when Maung Talok and Ma Kaing redeemed the land from Po Hnit and mortgaged it to Tun E. He, therefore, approached Tun E with a proposal that he should continue to work the land as Tun E's tenant on the same terms. Tun E refused to agree to this but did agree to pay the value of the seed grain already sown and half the cost of transplanting already incurred and to pay half the revenue, on condition apparently that he received half the crops grown on the land which had already been planted. Before the crops were reaped, Gaw Ya had them estimated and they were computed at 165 baskets. Tun E refused to accept that estimate and suggested that they should employ six reapers each and each take half the actual crop. Gaw Ya agreed to this but Tun E reaped the whole crop. Gaw Ya protested and Tun E said that it was not he but Maung Talok who had taken the crops. Gaw Ya then protested to Maung Talok, who said that, being owner of the land, he was on redemption entitled to the crops then growing thereon.

On this statement the Court ordered Maung Talok to be joined as a defendant.

Maung Talok was joined and filed a written statement, alleging that by reason of his redemption of the land both Po Hnit and his tenant Gaw Ya lost any rights they previously had in the land and the growing crops. He admitted that he reaped the crops but said that he did so under instructions from Ma Kaing, who he claimed ought also to be joined as a defendant. He denied that the crops amounted to more than 45 baskets of paddy and said that it was not true that Gaw Ya had spent Rs. 19 8 0 on seed grain and Rs. 6-8-0 on transplanting, or that the value of paddy was Rs. 100 per 100 baskets.

On this pleading Ma Kaing was also joined as a defendant, and she said that the heirs and legal representatives of Po Hnit (who by that time had died) ought also to be made parties. This suggestion was rightly disregarded by the Court. She said further that she had redeemed the land from Po Hnit and admitted that she had taken possession of the crops which, she said, amounted to only 45 and not 165 baskets. She claimed that because she redeemed the land before the crops were reaped, she became owner of the crops as well as of the land and that Po Hnit and his tenant Gaw Ya had lost any interest they might previously have had in the crops.

On these additional pleadings the only additional issue framed was as to what amount had been spent by Gaw Ya on the cultivation of the land.

The trial Court, after hearing the evidence, came to the conclusion that Gaw Ya succeeded in establishing all the details of his claim against all three defendants, and gave him a decree against them all for Rs. 98-6-0, the full amount claimed, with costs on that amount.

Tun E appealed against that decree, on the grounds that Gaw Ya had failed to establish his claim and that the judgment of the trial Court was contrary to law and against the weight of evidence.

Maung Talok and Ma Kaing also filed a separate appeal, on the grounds (1) that they were not necessary parties, (2) that Ma Kaing was owner of the crops, and (3) that Gaw Ya failed to prove his claims and that, therefore, the judgment of the trial Court was against the weight of evidence.

The lower Appellate Court heard the two appeals together and finding from the records of the mortgage suit that that suit was instituted on the 22nd of May 1915 and that after the decree for redemption had been passed on the 15th of August in that year, it was Po Hnit and not Gaw Ya who applied for postponement of delivery of possession on the ground that the land was under cultivation, came to the conclusion that if Gaw Ya worked the land he did so at his own risk and was not entitled to the crops, and being further of opinion that under the circumstances it was unlikely that Tun E agreed to allow Gaw Ya to enjoy half the crops, dismissed Gaw Ya's suit.

MAUNG GA YA v. MAUNG TALOK.

Gaw Ya now comes to this Court in second appeal, on the ground that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that he had no right to the crops which he had grown at his own expense on land which he held under a lawful tenancy.

I have read the records and heard the learned Advocates representing all the parties.

A preliminary objection has been taken in this Court that no second appeal lies, because the subject-matter of the suit is less than Rs. 500 and the suit is of a nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes. In reply to this objection Gaw Ya's learned Advocate suggests that the suit would fall within the provisions of Article 31 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which excepts from the cognisance of Small Cause Courts suits for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant. It is clear that that article cannot apply to the present case, because in this case the immoveable property did not belong to the plaintiff and I know of no article in the Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which would except the present suit from the cognisance of a Court of Small Causes. I hold, therefore, that no second appeal lies, such an appeal being expressly barred by the provisions of section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure and by the proviso to section 13 of the Upper Burma Civil Courts Regulation.

Appellant's learned Advocate then urges that, if no appeal lies, this Court can and ought to deal with the case in revision and that the grounds which have been framed as grounds of appeal would be equally good grounds for an application for revision. I have heard the Advocates on this point and I have decided that I can and ought to treat the memoranda of appeal as if they were applications for revision. I shall, therefore, deal with the case in revision.

It is clear that the fundamental question in controversy between the parties is, "who was entitled to crops which were growing on the mortgaged land at the time when the mortgage was redeemed."

It is ordinarily recognised as contrary to common justice to allow a man to "reap where he has not sown and gather what he has not strewed" or generally to enjoy the fruits of another man's lawful labour. That principle is expressly recognised in sections 51 and 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provide that where crops were growing on land when a lease of uncertain duration is determined otherwise than by the fault of the lessee, or when a person, who believed himself to be owner, is ousted from possession by a person who establishes a better title, the person who planted the crops and is ousted from the land is entitled to the crops and is entitled also to free ingress or egress to gather them, annual crops being considered not as part of immoveable property but as ordinarily belonging to the tenant who has grown them. This right to crops, which is known in English Law as the right to emblements, is recognised in English Law on the termination of the tenure of a tenant for life or for another's life and on the termination of a tenancy-at will otherwise than by the fault of the tenant and in certain other cases, but it is not, I understand, recognised in the case of mortgages, because in an English mortgage the mortgagor theoretically conveys away his entire legal estate and although he ordinarily remains in possession, he is in the absence of any covenant to the contrary supposed to be liable to be ejected at any moment without notice and without any claim to rent which may be due or to crops which may be growing on the land at the time when he is ejected. He has in theory conveyed away all his right, title and interest and has nothing left but a bare equity of redemption, that is, an equitable right to have the estate reconveyed to him on payment of the mortgage-debt. The Transfer of Property Act is mainly based on English Law and the fact that right to emblements is not recognised in English Law in respect of mortgages, while it is, recognised in respect of leases of uncertain duration which are determined otherwise than by the fault of the lessee and in respect of persons who under certain circumstances plant crops believing themselves to be owners but are evicted because the land turns out to belong to somebody else, probably accounts for the recognition of the right to crops in sections 51 and 108 of that Act and for its non-recognition in respect of mortgages. But although there is no recognition of the right to crops in the Transfer of Property Act so far as the redemption of mortgages is concerned, there is, so far as I know, nothing in that or any other law which prevents its application in cases where such application is in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience and prima facie, a principle which is recognised as equitable in the case of the determination of a lease of uncertain duration would seem to be equally equitable in the case of a usufructuary mortgage which is similarly of uncertain duration. If crops could be recorded as "separable accessions" coming under the provisions of section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act, there would be no difficulty, but they have never been so regarded and it would seem that just as a right to compensation for improvements made by a mortgagee has been recognised in India in spite of the fact that the Transfer of Property Act makes no express provision for such compensation, so a mortgagee's right to crops might be recognised in spite of the fact that it is not recognised in the Act and is not recognised in England for technical reasons which do not apply to the kinds of mortgagees which are usual in India.

The case-law on the subject is surprisingly meagre. There are two leading cases, which are always cited by the commentators when the question of the right to growing crops on the determination of a mortgage is considered, namely, the old Bombay case of the Land Mortgage Bank of India v. Vishnu Govind Patankar (1), which was decided over 40 years ago, before the Transfer of Property Act was enacted, and the Madras case of Ramalinga v. Sami Appa (2), which was decided 30 years ago.

In the Bombay case the mortgagee of certain lands brought them to sale in execution of a mortgage decree against his mortgagor who was in possession and having purchased them himself, was held entitled as against a creditor of the mortgagor to the share of produce due as rent by the mortgagor's tenants whose crops were growing on the land at the time of the sale. I do not think that that decision throws much light on the question of the ownership of the crops on the determination of a mortgage, since under the ordinary rule the crops would belong to the tenants who would be bound to pay the share due as rent to the owner, that is, to the mortgagee who had purchased the land from their original landlord, so that there would be nothing left for the mortgagor which his creditor could possibly attach.

In the Madras case it was held that a mortgagee in possession (not a usufructuary mortgage) who, while there were crops planted by himself growing on the land, brought the mortgaged property to sale under a mortgage decree against his mortgagor could not recover from the auction-purchaser the value of the crops, because what he had brought to sale was not only the interest of the mortgagor but also his own interest as mortgagee, and because at the time of the sale the right to the standing crops was not reserved. It is clear that in such a case the mortgagee could have little if any claim to a right to emblements, since his tenure was determined by his own act, and I do not think that that case can be taken as authority for the proposition that crops growing on lands on the determination of a mortgage do not ordinarily belong to the person who planted them and whose lawful tenure of the lands came to an end by reason of the determination of the mortgage.

In the Allahabad case of Deo Dat v. Ram Autar (3), which was a case in which lands were mortgaged by conditional sale and a pre-emptor was held entitled to recover them from the mortgagee, the lower Courts entered in the decree a condition that the pre emptor should not be entitled to possession until the mortgagee had gathered the crops which he had sown, but the High Court, applying to the case the rule of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, held that the decree should not have postponed the pre-emptor's right to possession but should have provided that the mortgagee was entitled as against the pre-emptor to the crops sown by him and to free ingress or egress to gather and carry them. That case is, however, clearly no authority for the proposition that the mortgagee has a right to crops as against a redeeming mortgagor.

There is a more recent Madras case, that of Narayanan Nambudripad v. Krishna Patter (4), in which it was held that where in a suit to redeem a "Kanom" mortgage the decree directs the mortgagor to deposit the decretal amount within six months from the date of the decree, the mortgagee thus directed to be redeemed must be deemed to hold the mortgaged property under a lease of uncertain duration and is, therefore, entitled under the provisions of section 108 (1) of the Transfer of Property Act to cut and carry away the crops grown by him before the decretal amount was deposited. The decision proceeds on the special circumstances of "Kanom" mortgages, which in addition to being mortgages are said to partake of the nature of leases and, therefore, it could not be generally applied.

In the Lower Burma case of Aung Baw v. Tun Gaung (5) a mortgagor got a decree for redemption and was put into possession of the mortgaged property under the provisions of section 263 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, while there were crops grown by the mortgagee standing on the land. The mortgagee subsequently applied to the Court for permission to reap the crops which he had sown, and the Court held that he ought to have applied for his right to the crops to be reserved before the decree was passed, and that because he failed to do so, he, being bound by the decree which as passed did not reserve his right to the crops, had lost any right he might have had in respect of the crops. It might reasonably be inferred from that judgment that a mortgagee, whose crops might be growing on the mortgaged land at the time of redemption, could not assert any right to those crops unless that right was established in the redemption suit and recognised in the decree, but it cannot be inferred that the mortgagee, or the mortgagee's tenant who might not be bound by the decree, has no right to the crops.

There is a case in this Court, Nga Nyan Gyi v. Nga Kyaw Nya (6), in which it was held that the tenant of a usufructuary mortgagee, whose mortgage had been redeemed after the tenancy agreement had been made but before the tenant had planted any crops, was not entitled but virtue of his tenancy agreement to keep the mortgagor out of possession and was liable to damages for having done so. No question of any right to crops arose in that case, but the question whether it is equitable that the mortgagor should be permitted to oust the tenant at any time of the year without letting him gather his crops was considered and was decided in the affirmative, and, therefore, it is necessary to consider that ruling. The grounds of the decision were that a lessor cannot transfer a larger estate than he has himself, and that, if the lessor's interest is dependent on any contingency, the lessee's interest cannot enure beyond the termination of his lessor's interest by the happening of that contingency. The learned Judicial Commissioner said practically what was said in the Bombay case cited above, namely, that the contingency of redemption is one which the mortgagee must reckon with and may provide against, but it seems to me that the only way in which the mortgagee in such a case could, in the absence of an express covenant about the crops which is unusual in this country, safeguard himself against loss would be by refraining from cultivating the land himself or letting it out to a tenant, since if he did either he would run the risk of losing either the crops or their value. The result of this view of the law would, it seems to me, be either that no reasonably cautious mortgagee would cultivate mortgaged lands, or that, if he did cultivate them or have them cultivated, the mortgagor would wait until the crops were ready for harvest and then redeem, getting the crops for nothing, and causing wrongful loss to either the mortgagee or the tenant, to say nothing of the litigation between the mortgagee and his tenant which would be almost certain to result. It has been suggested that the mortgagor in an English mortgage takes that risk without inconvenience, but I do not think that the facts would warrant that assertion. It is true that in theory an English mortgagor is supposed to take the risk of losing any crops he may plant on the land, but in fact he takes practically no such risk because the theory has been modified both by practice and by Statute. The Judicature Act, 1873, for instance, recognised the right of a mortgagor in possession to take rents and profits of the mortgaged land, unless he had notice of the mortgagee's intention to take possession of the property or to enter into receipt of the rents and profits, and the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, gave to the person in possession, whether mortgagor or mortgagee, power under certain conditions and in the absence of a covenant to the contrary to make leases binding on the other party to the mortgage. Again the Tenants' Compensation Act, 1890, gave an occupier of mortgaged lands a right to recover from a mortgagee taking possession compensation in respect of crops, so that although the occupier might lose the actual crops he did not lose the entire fruits of his labour. Further the conditions of an English mortgage are entirely different from those of the ordinary usufructuary mortgage in Burma. In an English mortgage the date for redemption is fixed, but in the ordinary mortgage in this country no date for redemption is fixed and the mortgage runs on indefinitely. As the learned Judicial Commissioner said in Nga Nyan Gyi v. Nga Kyaw Nya (6): "The usufructuary mortgagee of Upper Burma takes the profits towards interest and has no accounts to render. The contract is that he restores the land on payment of the principal mortgage money. A mortgage of this kind, kept alive by further advances, often lasts much longer than 60 years and the mortgaged property is handed down by inheritance in the family of the mortgagee. The mortgagee, therefore, enjoys all the advantages of an owner, except that he must allow redemption if the mortgagor pays the mortgage money within limitation. While he has the land he deals with it practically in the same way as he would deal with land of his own and he very frequently leases it to tenants." The learned Judicial Commissioner also went on to say: "My experience in this Court affords some indication of a custom, at least in parts, by which land is redeemed only at certain seasons of the year so as not to deprive the tenant or mortgagee of the crops," and I may say that my experience is the same and that within the last week I have dealt with a somewhat similar case in which that custom was admitted by both parties. All this seems to me to show that the claim of the mortgagee or his tenant to reap the crop which he has sown has been recognised both judicially and generally as being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience and that any argument based on the inconvenience of the contrary view, that the mortgagee or his tenant must be held to take the risk of losing his crops, is not met by the assertion that under an English mortgage the mortgagor without inconvenience takes exactly the same risk. The unfairness and inconvenience of the view that the mortgagor on redemption becomes owner of any crops which may be growing on the land at that time was expressly recognised in the Lower Burma case of Mo Gale v. Ma Sa U (7), where the learned Judge directed that the date fixed for redemption should in the case of cultivated land be fixed so that the party who has sown the crop shall have the benefit of it, and in the Madras case Ramalinga v. Sami Appa (2)] where the Court said: "It was open to the mortgagee to have asked the Court to postpone the sale so as to enable him to take the standing crop."

Such devices as those suggested in these two cases for safeguarding interests which the Courts recognise as equitable are unsatisfactory and, as the experience of the present case shows, inadequate and I do not think that the view of the law which necessitates them is sound. It is, of course, true as a general rule that when an interest is determined all rights arising in respect of that interest ordinarily come to an end, but what may be called the "residual rights" recognised in sections 51 and 108 of the Transfer of Property Act are equitable exceptions to that rule and if a similar right is recognised in respect of those usufructuary mortgages which are usual in this country and are in my opinion exactly analogous to leases of uncertain duration, such devices become unnecessary.

I have already said that, so far as I am aware, there is no enactment in force in India which prevents such recognition and on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience as well as of practical convenience I consider it expedient that the right of the ordinary usufructuary mortgagee in this country or his tenant to the crops growing on the land at the time of redemption should be recognised, provided, of course, that such crops were sown or planted before the person who grew them had notice of the intended redemption. I hold, therefore, that in the present case the tenant Gaw Ya was entitled as against the mortgagors who redeemed, that is against Maung Talok and Ma Kaing, to all the crops planted or sown by him on the land which were growing thereon at the time of redemption and to free ingress and egress to gather and carry them. He admits that he would have to pay half the crops to them as rent and, therefore, he claims only the other half. The fact that the lands were subsequently mortgaged to Tun E would make no difference, because he merely stepped into the shoes of Maung Talok and Ma Kaing, to the extent of the interest which he acquired by the mortgage, and it was they, and not he, who took the crops.

It has been suggested in argument in this Court that the tenancy agreement between Po Hnit and Gaw Ya was made after Maung Talok and Ma Kaing and instituted their mortgage suit and that the doctrine of "lis pendens" applies, but there is no evidence to support that argument, and it is, I think, too late in any case to raise it for the first time in this Court.

Maung Talok and Ma Kaing admit that they reaped the crops and as I have held that although they were owners of the land they were not entitled to the crops I am of opinion that Gaw Ya was entitled to recover from them the value of those crops less the value of the half share which would be payable by him as rent.

That being decided, there remain for decision the two questions, (1) what was the amount and value of the crops, and (2) did Gaw Ya establish his claims in respect of the cost of seed, grain and labour.

As for the second of these two questions, I may say at once that Gaw Ya offered no evidence beyond his own bare word and that I consider that insufficient.

As for the first, Gaw Ya's statement that the crops were estimated at 165 baskets of paddy was corroborated by the evidence of Maung Kan, who is said to be headman of the village, and who swore that he was one of the four men who estimated the outturn of the lands planted by Gaw Ya before the crops were reaped and that after visiting the lands they came to the conclusion that the outturn would be 165 baskets. That evidence was not rebutted. None of the respondents gave any evidence on their own behalf and the evidence of their witnesses was of little weight. Maung Tha Dun, who was employed by Tun E to thresh certain paddy, which he says Tun E told him was paddy from the lands in question, deposed that the outturn of the paddy he threshed was only 45 baskets, but there is nothing to show that that was the whole produce of the land in suit and no admissible evidence to show that it came from that land at all. Maung Nge, who is Tun E's brother in law, said merely that he thought that the yield of the land would be about 40 or 45 baskets.

On this evidence I think that the trial Court was justified in accepting 165 baskets as the outturn.

As for the price of paddy neither side gave any evidence, but as Rs. 100 per 100 baskets is the rate usually accepted in the Courts in Upper Burma in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, I see no reason to object to the trial Court's assessment of the value of the produce at that rate.

In view of the fact that Maung Talok and Ma Kaing admit that they took the crops and that Gaw Ya does not deny this, I see no reason why a decree should be given against Tun E.

I, therefore, dismiss Gaw Ya's application so far as Tun E is concerned, but in view of the fact that Tun E has made common cause with Maung Talok and Ma Kaing throughout I direct that he pay his own costs in all Courts.

As against Maung Talok and Ma Kaing, Gaw Ya was entitled to half the value of the crops, that is Rs. 82-8-0, and as in my opinion the Appellate Court acted illegally in finding that he worked the land at his own risk and was not entitled to any crops, I set aside the judgment and decree of the Appellate Court dismissing his suit with costs and vary the decree of the trial Court by giving judgment for Gaw Ya against Maung Talok and Ma Kaing for Rs. 82-8-0 with costs throughout on that amount.

I note that I have not overlooked the fact that Gaw Ya was willing to give credit to Tun E for Rs. 6 14 0 paid by Tun E as land revenue, but I have held that he was not entitled to any decree against Tun E and the decree which I have given him is based not on his alleged subsequent agreement with Tun E but on his original agreement with Po Hnit, under which the land revenue was alleged to be and would naturally be payable by the landlord.

Decree varied.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2637 OF 1917.

February 25, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

WARYAM SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

BASANT SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss 2 (7), 17, 49—Construction of s. 17—Construction of document—Agreement permitting a person to occupy land, whether lease Registration, whether necessary—"Undertaking to occupy" in s. 2 (7), what is.

Section 17 of the Registration Act must be strictly construed, as taken in connection with section 49 of the Act it imposes serious disqualifications for non-observance of registration Unless a document is clearly brought within the purview of the section, it should not be excluded from being treated as evidence [p 453, cols 1 & 2.]

A mere undertaking to occupy land contained in a document will not make the document compulsorily registrable, unless some interest or right in the thing let is created by the document. [p. 453, col 1.]

Defendant's father obtained possession of a piece of land under a written agreement from the plaintiff for the purpose of building a house on it, on the condition that the plaintiff would have no power to dispossess him during his life, but that on his death in case of a disagreement between his heirs and the plaintiff the latter would have a right to eject them on paying them the price of the materials:

Held, that the agreement was not a lease in any sense, nor was it an undertaking to occupy within the meaning of section 2 (7) of the Registration Act and that inasmuch as it created no interest in the land, it did not require registration under section 17 (d) of the Registration Act. [p. 453, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 12th July 1917.

Messrs. Sleem and Dalip Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for the possession of a piece of land on the following allegations: Defendants' father Sundar Singh obtained it from the plaintiff for the purpose of building a house on it, on the condition that the plaintiff would have no power to dispossess him during his life, but on his death in case of a disagreement between his heirs and the plaintiff the latter would have a right to eject them on paying them the price of the materials. It was further agreed that in case of a dispute as to the value of the materials the heirs would be at liberty to remove them and vacate the land. The terms of the agreement were reduced to writing and the present dispute relates to the nature and the terms of this deed of agreement. Sundar Singh having died, a disagreement arose between the parties which has given rise to this suit. This document embodying the terms of the agreement was put in evidence and was relied upon by the plaintiff. On the pleas raised in defence one of the issues framed by the Court of first instance was whether the document was admissible in evidence. The document was executed by Sundar Singh, in which he set forth the conditions on which he had agreed to build on the land. It was contended by the defendants that the document came under the definition of a lease and required registration under section 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act. The learned Munsif of Jullundur held that it was merely an agreement and did not amount to a lease and having decided the remaining issues also against the defendants, he gave the plaintiff a decree for the possession of the land in dispute. The defendants were ordered to remove the materials within two months. In the alternative they were given the right to take the price of the materials which was assessed by the Court at Rs. 537-4-6, and give up the house. They were not satisfied with the decision of the Court and preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court and raised the following contentions:—

That the agreement was not executed by their father, that the deed required registration, as (a) it was a lease for more than a year, and (b) dealt with property worth more than Rs. 100 in value; the plaint did not disclose a cause of action; that the agreement was indefinite as regards its terms, and the price of the materials had been underestimated.

On the question of the admissibility of the document the lower Appellate Court took a different view from that taken by the Court of first instance and held that it required registration and was inadmissible for want of registration In its opinion the document contained "an undertaking to occupy" the land and as such came under the description of a lease as given in section 2 (7) of the Registration Act. The basis of the plaintiff's claim having failed, his suit was dismissed and certain cross-objections which he had filed were also dismissed. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal to this Court and three pleas have been raised in the memorandum of appeal on his behalf, namely, that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the agreement was inadmissible for want of registration, that the document was in any event admissible to prove the permissive possession of the defendants and the terms of such possession and that the plaintiff in any case was entitled to the value of the site.

It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the very terms of the document show that it was merely a license granted to the father of the defendants to build on the land and remain in occupation during his life and that no interest in land was created by the document in his favour. I have examined the terms of the document carefully and I find that there is force in this contention. To start with, on the face of the deed there is no rent reserved nor is there any other consideration agreed upon. The very words of the deed go to show that Sundar Singh obtained permission to keep his house on the land during his life only. He acquired no right of any kind in the land itself. Had it been so there would have been no need of providing about the right of his heirs after his death. They would simply have come in as his representatives and would have been bound by the terms of the deed. The condition as to the price of the materials or as to their removal clearly shows that the parties understood that it was merely a license granted to Sundar Singh for his personal benefit during his lifetime.

The following is the exact translation of the agreement:—

"I, Sundar Singh, son of Gurdit Singh, caste Tarkhan, resident of Mauza Manak Rai, Thana Bhagpur, do hereby declare as follows:—

"I have taken a vacant site (taur) in the abadi of Manak Rai, bounded on the east by a passage, i. e., a lane and a vacant site belonging to Thal Singh, on the west by the haveli of the sons of Nihal Singh, on the south by a passage to the haveli of Fateh Singh and on the north by a wall of the kotha belonging to Thakar Singh, son of Ram Singh, owned and possessed by Waryam Singh, son of Sant Singh, caste Jat, resident of Mauza Manak Rai, for the purpose of habitation. I agree that I will construct a building in the said vacant site at my own expense. The proprietor shall have nothing to do with the costs incurred thereon. I will remain abad in it during my lifetime. The proprietor or his heirs shall not at all be competent to eject me during my lifetime. After my death, if the proprietor or his heirs fall out with my heirs, they shall pay the costs of the materials and effect ejectment. In case a dispute takes place in respect of the cost of the materials, my heirs shall remove the materials and make over the vacant site to the proprietor or his heirs. Hence I have executed this deed of agreement, so that it may serve as an authority.

"Dated the 27th June 1900, corresponding to the 14th of Har Sambat 1957."

Reading the deed according to its plain terms, it is apparent that at least Sundar Singh never contemplated that he was taking a lease of the land.

It was argued in the lower Appellate Court and it is argued also before me that the deed contains merely a unilateral statement by Sundar Singh and its terms are so uncertain that it cannot be treated as a lease. The case of Beni v. Puran

JHABBU v. ZAHID ALI.

Das (1) is relied upon before me as it was also in the lower Appellate Court. But it is not necessary for me to enter into the discussion whether the decision in that case was correct or incorrect, because I am clearly of opinion in the present case that the agreement can in no sense be said to be a lease. It is contended, however, by the Counsel for the respondent that if the document according to its terms cannot strictly be said to be a lease, it must be taken to be "an undertaking to occupy" and as such to require registration. The real question, however, to decide is: was the undertaking to occupy the site as a lessee or as a mere licensee? In this case there was "an undertaking to occupy" on certain conditions, but not as a lessee as no right or interest in the land was created. I agree in the construction put on the expression by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Apu Budgavda v. Narhari Annajee (2). The facts of that case, no doubt, were different, but it was decided in that case that a mere undertaking to occupy contained in a document would not make the document compulsorily registrable unless some interest or right in the thing let was created. In that case such right or interest was not created as the terms had not been accepted. In the present case no interest or right has been created, as it has not been shown that it was ever intended by the owner to create such an interest or right. The decision in Athakutti v. Govinda (3) shows that a mere permission to occupy land on certain terms did not create a lessee. It was held that it was not a case of a tenant but the case of a licensee.

It has been held in this Court that section 17 of the Registration Act should be construed very strictly, as read with section 49 it imposes a serious disability [see the judgment of Rivaz, J., in Imam Bakhsh Khan v. Karim Shah (4)]. This opinion was adopted by the learned Judges who decided the case of Sansar Singh v. Tiloka (5). They made the following remark at page 175,* which fully applies to the facts of the present case:—"Further as observed by the same learned Judge at page 63 of the report, section 17 of the Registration Act has to be strictly construed, as taken in connection with section 49 it imposes such serious disqualifications for non observance of registration. Unless the document is clearly brought within the purview of the section, it cannot be excluded from being treated as evidence. If there is doubt, the benefit must be given to it."

Applying this principle to this case, I must hold that the lower Appellate Court was not right in setting aside the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance on the ground that the document relied upon was inadmissible in evidence. I allow the appeal, set aside the decision of the Court below on this preliminary point and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, to be restored to its original number of pending appeals and to be disposed of according to law.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 1st March 1919, confirming that of the Munsif, Safipur, dated the 16th December 1918.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ali Ausat, for the Opposite Party.

NABI BAKHSH v. MAULA.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of the price of bricks and lime alleged to have been sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants. The defendants denied having purchased the same and pleaded that Mazhar Ali, son of defendant No. 1 and brother of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, was a partner of the plaintiffs in the brick kiln and that 31,000 bricks fell to his share, out of which the plaintiffs had supplied only 15,000 and had not given the rest The defendants are the heirs of Mazhar Ali.

On the date fixed for the hearing of the suit, Gur Saran Das, plaintiff No. 2, was present. He agreed to abide by the statements of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on oath, if made at the Dargah of Makhdum Shah at Safipur. Jhabbu, plaintiff No. 1, was not present on that date; but Gur Saran Das, his general agent, who had power to compromise or withdraw the case or to do any other act in the suit on his behalf, was present. The Court, acting on the statement of Gur Saran Das, appointed a Commissioner to examine defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the manner suggested. On the 14th December 1918 the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were examined at the Dargah and stated on oath that no money was due to the plaintiffs on account of bricks or lime and that 16,000 bricks were due to Mazhar Ali deceased on account of his partnership in the kiln. On the same date Jhabbu, plaintiff, is stated to have appeared in Court and presented a petition, repudiating the act of his agent, Gur Saran Das, in agreeing to abide by the oath of the said defendants. It is suggested that the learned Munsif returned the application. The original application said to have been presented to the Munsif was filed with an affidavit in the lower Appellate Court, but that Court makes no reference to it. It is clear, however, that the said defendants had been examined on special oath before the said application was, if it had been, presented and if that was so, it was too late for any of the plaintiffs to withdraw from the agreement, which had been previously entered into and carried out.

It is urged on behalf of Jhabbu that his general agent had no power to bind him. But the copy of the power-of-attorney on the record shows that the general agent had authority to withdraw the suit or enter into a compromise. An agreement to bind the principal by a special oath to be administered to the opposite party, would not place the plaintiff in a worse position than an application to withdraw the claim; and as pointed out in Wasi ul zaman Khan v. Faiza Bibi (1), an agent who is empowered to conduct a suit in any manner he may deem fit, even to the extent of withdrawing it, must be deemed to have possessed a power to bind his principal by an agreement to abide by a special oath, entered into with the opposite party. The powers conferred in the present instance are much wider than those which were conferred in the case which was dealt with in Sadashiv Rayaji v. Maruti Vithal (2). A person who appoints an agent with such extensive powers must be prepared to abide by anything which the agent may do on his behalf, and if the agent does anything of which he does not approve he has only himself to blame. His repudiation came too late.

The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Cancellation of instrument on ground of fraud—Fraud not carried out, effect of.

Plaintiff sued for cancellation of a deed of mortgage executed by him in favour of the defendants, alleging that he had been induced to execute the deed by fraud and that there was no consideration for his contract It was found that the transaction was in fact fictitious and that plaintiff and defendants had conspired to concoct the mortgage to the detriment of plaintiff's reversioner;

Held, that inasmuch as the reversioner's rights would come into operation only on the death of the plaintiff, it could not be said that the purpose of the fraud had been carried into effect, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to get the deed cancelled.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 10th October 1917.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sham Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for cancellation of a certain deed of mortgage of land executed by him on the 20th of July 1916 in favour of the defendants, alleging that he had been induced to execute the deed by fraud and that there was no consideration for his contract. The plaint did not specify what the fraud was but it was explained later, on behalf of the plaintiff, that defendants had promised to secure a wife for him and that they had no intention of carrying out their promise and had in fact failed to do so. Defendants pleaded that full consideration had passed and that they had never undertaken to secure a wife for the plaintiff. The first Court found that no consideration had passed and granted the plaintiff the decree for which he prayed. Defendants appealed to the District Judge, who found that the consideration for the mortgage was unproved, at any rate to the extent of Rs. 575 (out of the alleged total of Rs. 800), and that the transaction was in fact fictitious, but he disbelieved the plaintiff's story that the consideration for the transaction was a promise on the part of the defendants to secure him a wife and that what really happened was that plaintiff and defendants had conspired to concoct the fictitious mortgage to the detriment of Khuda Bakhsh, plaintiff's near reversioner. Upon these findings he held that the parties were in pari delicto and that as the fraud was not only concocted but also carried into effect to the detriment of Khuda Bakhsh, each party was estopped from showing the truth as against the other and that, therefore, plaintiff was not entitled to the relief which he claimed. He accordingly accepted the appeal and dismissed plaintiff's suit with costs.

The District Judge's enunciation of the law is undoubtedly correct, but it appears to me that in the present case the purpose of the fraud had not been carried into effect and that on this ground plaintiff was entitled to ask for the cancellation of the mortgage deed. Obviously, Khuda Bakhsh, whose rights would come into operation only on the death of the plaintiff, had not been defrauded in any way up to the time when the plaintiff brought his suit, and so far as Khuda Bakhsh is concerned, the cancellation of the deed would be a step towards doing away with the possibility of any fraud being perpetrated at his expense. On the other hand, as regards the defendants, it is clear that at the time when the plaintiff instituted his suit nothing had been done to carry the mortgage into effect. Rs. 575 had, upon the findings of both the Courts, not been paid by the defendants, nor had the latter paid off, as they undertook to do, the previous mortgagee. The land had consequently not passed to the defendant and the previous mortgagee was at that time in possession. It is alleged that on the 7th of May 1917, i. e., at the time when the trial of the case in the first Court had terminated and the suit was ripe for judgment, the defendants paid off the previous mortgagee. This, however, was long subsequent to the institution of the suit and was obviously done in order to make evidence on behalf of the defendants. From the facts then as established, it is clear that even if both parties had conspired to defraud Khuda Bakhsh, nothing had been done at the time when the suit was brought to carry that fraud into effect, and in this connection the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pethermal Chetty v. Muniandy Chetty (1) is in point and is an authority for holding that the plaintiff is not debarred from asking for the relief which he claimed.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Munsif. Defendants must pay plaintiff's costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 108, 135—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 3—Joinder of claims—Claim for share of profits as co-sharer, whether can be joined with claim for arrears of revenue as lambardar.

A plaintiff can join a claim for a share of profits as co-sharer with a claim for arrears of revenue, etc., as lambardar in one suit. Section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act does not contain anything which would make this improper or unlawful, and under Order II, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with section 135 of the Oudh Rent Act, a plaintiff can unite in the same suit the two causes of action. [p. 456, cols 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 4th February 1919, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Unao, dated the 26th September 1918.

Mr. Salig Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Puttu Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In these cases the plaintiff sets forth in his plaint that he is a co-sharer and that the defendant (in the one case) and defendants (in the other case) are co-sharers in the same Mahal. In the second paragraph he states that the land in the possession of the defendants exceeds their share. In the third paragraph he states that according to Patwari's account certain sums are due from the defendants. In the fourth paragraph he sets forth four dates as the dates on which the cause of action in each case accrued. Amongst other grounds taken up by way of defence it was urged that the suit as brought was not maintainable. This has been explained to mean that the account subsequently filed in evidence by the Patwari showed that the plaintiff was claiming not only a share of profits as co sharer but also arrears of revenue, Lambardari commission and village expenses as Lambardar. The Court of first instance, namely, the Assistant Collector of Unao, held, notwithstanding, that the suit was one for profits and not a suit for revenue or rent. On first appeal the District Judge of Lucknow held that inasmuch as the amount allowed to the plaintiff included the revenue, Lambardari dues and village expenses, the award could not be regarded as an award under section 108, clause (15) of the Oudh Rent Act, which covers only a suit by a sharer against a co-sharer for share of the profits of an estate or any part thereof. He also held that the suit must be regarded as one under clause (15) and not under clause (16 of section 108 and consequently he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

On second appeal to this Court it is maintained that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the suit as framed was not maintainable under section 103, clause (15), of the Oudh Rent Act and alternatively that, even if the suit were held to be governed by clause (16), then the plaintiff's claim should have been decreed. In argument it has also been urged that there is nothing in the Oudh Rent Act to prevent the suit being treated both as a claim for profits by the plaintiff as co sharer and a claim for arrears of revenue, etc., by him as a co sharer, the former claim falling under clause (15), the latter claim falling under clause (16). It is quite clear that the decree of the Assistant Collector cannot be regarded as a decree under clause (15). A decree under clause (15) could not award arrears of revenue, etc. Nor again can the suit be regarded as one brought under section 108, clause (16), though wrongly described as under clause (15). The plaint nowhere sets forth that the plaintiff is Lambardar, nor does it set forth the amount of revenue, etc., claimed. As to the extra plea added in argument that the suit might have been regarded as partly under one section and partly under the other, I am not prepared to say that by means of a properly framed plaint a person could not join a claim for a share of profits as co-sharer with a claim for arrears of revenue, etc, as Lambardar in one suit. The inducement to section 103 of the Act does not contain anything which would make this improper or unlawful, and under Order II, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with section 135 of the Oudh Rent Act, the plaintiff could unite in the same suit the two causes of action. If the original Court found that they could not conveniently be tried or disposed of together it would be open to it to order separate trials, but apparently the Assistant Collector found no difficulty in trying the suits together. At the same time it is impossible to hold that the plaint as framed was a suit based on two separate causes of action, one under clause (15) and one under clause (16) of section 108. The District Judge in his judgment has stated that, excluding the amount awarded for Lambardari dues and village expenses, the Patwari's evidence shows that there is nothing due to the plaintiff at all, and this statement of fact has not been impugned in appeal to this Court If this were the case, there would be no cause of action for a claim under clause (15). Again, as in the plaint the plaintiff has not mentioned that he is a Lambardar, it is clear that no cause of action was shown for claiming arrears of revenue, etc. The District Judge was right in regarding the claim as one under clause (15). The statement in the plaint that according to the Patwari's account the defendants owe the plaintiff so much, coupled with the statement that the parties are co-sharers could only mean that the plaintiff was prepared to prove a claim to a share of profits under clause (15). The evidence of the Patwari does not prove that he is entitled to anything as a co-sharer because the Patwari's evidence of account inextricably mixes up the accounts of what is due to the plaintiff as a co-sharer with the accounts of what is due to him as Lambardar. If we are to accept the District Judge's statement indeed these accounts show nothing due to the plaintiff as co sharer. I, therefore, agree with the lower Court that the claim was one under clause (15) and that the plaintiff failed to prove that he is entitled to any relief under this clause.

In this judgment it is not intended to convey the meaning that a co-sharer who is also a Lambardar cannot ask for relief as a co-sharer under clause (15) of section 108 of the Oudh Rent Act until he has had the amount of the sum due to him as Lambardar for arrears of revenue, village expenses and Lambardar's commission decreed under clause (16). It is true that the share of profits that can be claimed under clause (15) against a co-sharer is a share of the net profits obtained by subtracting from the gross amount of profits realised by him the sum due from him for arrears of revenue, etc., but the co sharer Lambardar in a suit under clause (15) can specify the amount so to be subtracted from the gross profits without claiming it. This amount, if disputed, will have to be determined but will not be decreed. If the plaint in the present suit had been on these lines, there would have been no flaw in the frame of the suit. Assuming, however that the suit as brought could be regarded as one on these lines, the suit must fail by reason of the unchallenged statement of the District Judge that there is no balance of profits after deduction of the arrears of rent, etc.

The appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Custom—Alienation—Sale of ancestral land to pay off father's debt, whether can be avoided—Necessity—Minor, sale by—Property, whether can be recovered by minor—Compensation, minor, whether bound to pay.

A man who has sold a portion of his ancestral land to pay off his father's debts cannot subsequently avoid the sale merely on the plea that the sale was not for necessity. [p. 458, col. 2.]

A minor, however, is not bound to recognise his father's debts as a charge on the ancestral land and, therefore, where a portion of a minor's ancestral land is sold by his mother to pay off his father's debts, the minor is entitled to recover the property without being made to pay anything. [p. 458, col. 2]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 6th May 1913.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 12th June 1911 the land in suit was sold to Thamman

Singh for Rs. 814 by a registered deed of sale executed by Santa and his mother, Musammat Kahno, the latter acting on behalf of her minor son, Ramditta. Ramditta and Santa now sue to recover the land, alleging that the sale was without necessity and not for the benefit of the minor. The lower Courts have found that the sale was executed in order to pay off debts due by the father of Ramditta and Santa. As regards Santa, it is clear that he was a major at the time of the sale but the lower Courts regard him as a simpleton, who was under the thumb of his father's creditor and think that he was overreached and acted under undue influence. As to Ramditta, the lower Courts hold that he is not liable as the consideration for the sale was merely unsecured debts left by his father for which the ancestral land was not chargeable. The first Court held that the plaintiffs should refund the benefit which they have received and gave a decree for possession on payment of Rs. 814. The learned District Judge on appeal held, that there was no legal obligation on the plaintiffs to pay their father's debts and that there was no consideration for the sale, and so they were entitled to regain possession without any payment. The vendee appeals to this Court.

So far as Santa's share of the land is concerned, I think the decision of the lower Courts cannot stand. Santa no doubt had not long been a major when the sale deed was executed, but apart from the question whether by agricultural custom unsecured debts cannot be regarded as a charge on ancestral land, there is a moral obligation on a son to discharge his father's debts; and if the son chose to do so, I do not see how he can now turn round and seek to avoid the sale. I can find no evidence of any sort which in my opinion proves that Santa was overreached in any way. At the time when the sale-deed was executed, it was the general impression that ancestral land was liable for the debts of the last owner, and though that impression has now been removed by the publication of Jagdip Singh v Bawa Narain Singh (1), still even that ruling is no authority for the proposition that a man who has sold a portion of his land to pay off his father's debts can undo the sale merely on the plea that the sale was not for necessity. I note too that it is not a case of the whole estate being sold. It is admitted before me that plaintiffs have plenty of land left. The appeal must, therefore, succeed so far as Santa's share in the land is concerned. But as regards the share of Ramditta, who was a minor at the time of the sale, the decision seems to me to be correct. The minor was not bound to recognise his father's debts as being a charge on the ancestral land, and his mother was not authorised to alienate the land in discharge of these debts. In fact all that Counsel for the appellant urges as regards the share of Ramditta is that since this appeal was lodged, Ramditta has died sonless and is now represented by his brother Santa. So it is urged that Santa, having joined in the sale, cannot now seek to avoid it even as regards his brother's share. The only authority quoted in support of this is Ram Chunder v. Ram Jeebun (2). The facts of that case, however, were quite different from those of the present case, as in that case there was no question of a party dying during the pendency of appeal. It was rather a case of certain parties to a suit being held to be estopped by reason of their conduct during a previous suit. The appellant is seeking to set aside the decree of the lower Court, and in order to succeed, I think, he should be able to prove that that decree is in some way incorrect. So far as Ramditta's share is concerned, it is not contended that the decree passed was an incorrect one. It is merely urged that circumstances have since arisen which if they had arisen earlier would have altered the decree. This, however, in my opinion makes no difference to the correctness of the decree. If Ramditta had lived to the present day and subsequently died after recovering his share of the land, that share would undoubtedly have passed to his brother Santa and the present appellant would not have been able to claim that the case should be re-opened. So far then as Ramditta's share is concerned, I think, the District Judge's decision is a correct one and I uphold it.

A muafidar holding a rent-free tenure liable to resumption has no higher position than that of a tenant entitled to hold the land rent-free, unless he is a grantee under other conditions [p. 459, col. 2.]

Section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to such a holding, because tenants having an untransferable right of occupancy have been expressly excluded from the operation of that section [p. 459, col 2.]

The possibility of a declaration that a muafidar has acquired under-proprietary rights under section 107 (H) of the Oudh Rent Act being made in a future suit which may be brought against him by the landlord cannot be taken into account for determining whether the muafidar has at present a saleable interest or not. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 14th March 1918, upholding that of the Munsif, Biswan (Sitapur), dated the 22nd December 1917

Mr. Gulab Chand Srimal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Har Dhian Chandra, for Respondent No 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the Zemindars of the village in which the defendant Baldeo had a muafi holding. That holding was attached in execution of certain decrees obtained by Baldeo Bihari against Baldeo. The plaintiffs thereupon sued for a declaration that the said holding was not liable to attachment or sale in execution of the said decrees.

The allegation of the plaintiffs was that Baldeo had quitted the village more than 7 years ago and had not been heard of, that there was no one to succeed him and that the plaintiffs resumed the holding in consequence. The Court of first instance found that Baldeo was still in possession of his holding. It further found that he was not an under-proprietor but a person holding a rent-free tenure liable to resumption. It, however, dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs, on the ground that the tenure was saleable in execution of the decrees obtained by Baldeo Bihari against the muafidar. The lower Appellate Court upheld the same view on general grounds.

A muafidar holding a rent-free tenure liable to resumption has, however, no higher position than that of a tenant entitled to hold the land rent free, unless he is a grantee under other conditions. Section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) does not apply to such a holding, because tenants having an untransferable right of occupancy have been expressly excluded from the operation of that section. In Gaya Prasad v. Tasadduk Husain (1) it was held that a muafidar, the grant to whom was resumable in whole or in part, held no proprietary right in the land and had no permanent interest which he could assign. So far as the grant was resumable in part, his possession was analogous to that of a tenant who was not liable to ejectment at will but whose rent might be enhanced at any moment at the will of the landlord, and so far as the grant was resumable in whole, his possession was analogous to that of a tenant at will, liable to ejectment at any time at the will of the landlord. In Tika v. Sheo Narain (2) it was held that the rights of an ordinary tenant in Oudh were not transferable.

(1) 6 O. C. 110.
(2) 34 Ind. Cas. 426; 19 O. C. 117; 3 O. L. J. 175.

The learned Counsel, who appears for Baldeo Bihari, contends that a muafidar could get under-proprietary rights under section 107 (H) of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), if the landlord were to sue him for resumption or for assessment of rent. It is stated that a suit was actually brought by the former proprietor of the village for the resumption of the muafi holding but was subsequently withdrawn. There was no occasion then for the Revenue Court to declare that the muafidar had acquired an under-proprietary right under section 107 (H) of the Oudh Rent Act. The possibility of such a declaration being made in any future suit, which may be brought by the present landlords for the assessment of rent, cannot be taken into account for the purpose of determining whether the muafidar has at present a saleable interest or not. If his interest is not saleable at present, the attachment must be discharged.

The appeals are, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed for the declaration asked for. The costs of the plaintiff-appellant here and hitherto will be charged against the contesting defendant-respondent.

Appeals allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Sale, confirmation of—Possession, dispute as to delivery of, whether relates to execution of decree—Judgment-debtor, remedy of.

Where, after an auction sale is confirmed and a sale certificate is granted to the auction-purchaser, the judgment-debtor or his legal representative objects to the delivery of possession of the property sold, the dispute cannot be said to relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the decree has already been satisfied, and, therefore, the executing Court cannot entertain the objection. Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 23rd May 1918.

Mr. Santanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. Obedulla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against an appellate judgment passed by the lower Appellate Court. The facts out of which this appeal has arisen are fully stated in the judgment of the first Court, and I shall refer only to some of them which are material for the decision of this appeal. On the 17th February 1916 an ex parte decree on a mortgage was passed in favour of one Gauri Parshad. On the 13th July a final decree for sale was passed in favour of the decree holder. On the 10th October 1916 the house in dispute was sold in execution of the said decree and was purchased by the present appellant Nusrat Ali. The present respondent Musammat Sakina Begam, the wife of the judgment debtor Rahim Bakhsh, put in an application objecting to the proceedings on the ground that her husband had gone out of the country and was on the front in France. It does not appear in what capacity she made that application; she had no locus standi in her capacity as the wife of the judgment debtor to raise any question with respect to the execution of the decree. Her application was rejected and on the 14th November 1916 the sale was duly confirmed and on the 12th December 1916, a sale certificate was granted to the auction-purchaser. After that Musammat Sakina Begam filed a declaratory suit to get the ex parte decree set aside, but that suit was dismissed for want of production of evidence. On the 18th November 1916 Nusrat Ali, the auction purchaser, applied to the Court to be put in possession of the house. The decision of that application was delayed pending the decision of the suit to which I have referred above. On the 20th November 1917 the auction-purchaser put in another application asking the Court to put him in possession of the property. Certain proceedings were taken on that application, which need not be specifically referred to. There was obstruction on the part of Musammat Sakina Begam to the delivery of possession. Thereupon on the 17th December 1917 the auction-purchaser put in an application in Court complaining of the obstruction on the part of Musammat Sakina Begam. At this stage the Court ordered notice to be issued to Musammat Sakina Begam as the legal representative of the judgment debtor Rahim Bakhsh, as in the meantime it had been discovered that he had died. Musammat Sakina Begam then came in and put in an application on the 8th of January opposing the application of the auction purchaser for possession. The Court of first instance upon this state of things was of opinion that the objections raised by Musammat Sakina Begam could not be entertained and the only remedy open to her was to file a regular suit. Taking this view the Court ordered that delivery of possession of the house should be made to the auction-purchaser and that the objections of Musammat Sakina Begam be dismissed.

The objector appealed to the lower Appellate Court. The Court has held that as the lady was brought on the record as the legal representative of her husband who was the judgment debtor under the decree, she was entitled to raise the question which she did under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. Being of this opinion the lower Appellate Court decided on the merits in favour of the lady and set aside all the proceedings in execution and dismissed the application of the auction-purchaser for the possession of the property. The auction-purchaser has preferred the present second appeal to this Court against the decree and order of the lower Appellate Court and the question which has been argued on his behalf before me is that section 47, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to this case. The sale had been confirmed and thereupon a sale certificate had been granted. The question raised, therefore, on the objection by the lady was not one relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, inasmuch as the satisfaction of the decree had taken place already. The learned Counsel who has appeared in support of the appeal has relied upon a very recent decision of this Court which is reported as Chotha Ram v. Musammat Karmon Bai (1), and in my opinion the contention is fully borne out by the decision in that case. In fact, the present case is much stronger than the case reported as Chotha Ram v. Musammat Karmon Bai (1). In that case the auction-purchaser was the decree holder himself, and in spite of that, it was held that the matter did not relate to the execution or satisfaction of the decree. The learned Judges in that case observed: "If, therefore, after the Court executing the decree has entered up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part, a dispute arises between the quondam decree holder, in his new capacity of auction purchaser, and the quondam judgment-debtor, or their representatives, regarding the possession of the property sold at the public auction held in execution of the decree, the dispute cannot properly be said to relate to 'execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree,' which under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code can only be determined by the executing Court." In this case an outsider is the auction-purchaser. These remarks apply with greater force to the case of a stranger auction-purchaser. A similar view was taken by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in a case reported as Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (2). That was also a case in which the decree holder himself was the auction-purchaser. In my opinion both these cases fully support the argument put forward before me by the learned Counsel who has argued the appeal. The lower Appellate Court entirely failed to understand the scope of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and merely based its judgment on the finding that the lady having been brought on the record as the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, she was entitled to raise the question. It entirely failed to consider whether the question raised was one which related to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree.

In this view the appeal should be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts, and I order accordingly.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender of estate, validity of—Surrender in favour of secondary reversioner, with consent of immediate reversioner, effect of.

A Hindu widow can renounce her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, if there is only one, and in favour of all the reversioners nearest in degree, if more than one exist at the moment, that is to say, she can by a voluntary act part with her own title qua the estate inherited by her from her husband and accelerate the devolution in favour of the donee. A surrender by a widow of her husband's estate in favour of the secondary male heir with the consent of the nearest female heir can be treated as a joint surrender by both, the result being to vest an absolute title in the secondary male heir.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 21st October 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, Kunda, dated the 5th July 1918.

Mr. Lachman Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a house situated in the village Samaipur. Sheo Dayal was the original owner of the house. He was at first married to a woman whose name is not exactly ascertainable. The defendants-appellants state that her name was Musammat Subhao, but whether that was so or not is of little consequence.

The allegation of the plaintiff is that after the death of his first wife Sheo Dayal took another wife, whose name was Musammat Subhao, and that by her was born a daughter, Musammat Rukmin, whose son is Sundar Lal, the present plaintiff respondent. Sheo Dayal died two years prior to the suit and was succeeded by his widow, who died in October 1916. Before her death she executed a deed of gift transferring the entire property left by her husband to Sundar Lal, her daughter's son. Sundar Lal claims possession of the disputed house on the strength of the said deed of gift.

The finding of the Courts below is that Musammat Rukmin had assented to the gift and the gift, therefore, operated as an acceleration of the estate in favour of the nearest male heir. On behalf of Gokul Prasad, who describes himself as a nephew of Sheo Dayal, it is contended that the mother of Musammat Rukmin was not formally married to Sheo Dyal, that the consent of Musammat Rukmin to the said gift was not proved, and that the existence of Musammat Rukmin was an impediment to the devolution of the estate on Sundar Lal. The finding of the Court of first instance on the question of the marriage of the mother of Musammat Rukmin with Sheo Dayal was against the defendants. Its correctness was not challenged in the lower Appellate Court. It cannot, therefore, be impugned here

In regard to the question of Musammat Rukmin being entitled to an intervening estate, there is a clear finding of both the Courts below that she had assented to the gift. In fact she gave evidence to that effect. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1), it is settled by long practice and confirmed by decisions that a Hindu widow can renounce in favour of the nearest reversioner, if there is only one and in favour of all the reversioners nearest in degree, if more than one exist at the moment, that is to say, she can by a voluntary act part with her own title qua the estate inherited by her from her husband and accelerate the devolution in favour of the donee. The surrender was made in this case in respect of the entire estate, which the widow possessed, and the mere fact that a daughter was in existence was not an impediment to the surrender, because as observed in Ohinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (2), a surrender by a widow with the consent of the nearest female heir to the secondary male heir can be treated as a joint surrender by both, the result being to vest an absolute title in the secondary male heir.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (b)—Security bond executed in compliance with order of Court hypothecating immoveable property of value of more than Rs. 100, whether requires registration.

Where execution of a decree is stayed conditionally on the judgment debtor's furnishing security, and the security bond executed hypothecates immoveable property exceeding Rs. 100 in value, the bond requires registration under section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 13th June 1918.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—An order was passed by this Court staying execution of a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar, from which an appeal is pending conditionally on the judgment-debtor's furnishing security. A security bond has been executed, and the executing Court has accepted it. It has not been registered, and the question raised is whether, as the property hypothecated exceeds Rs. 100 in value, the bond requires registration under section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act. The Senior Subordinate Judge holds that registration is not necessary, as the security is furnished under orders of the Court and will practically become part of the order of the Court. He regards the bond as being a petition to the Court.

The decree-holders have appealed, and, their learned Counsel has referred to Nagaruru Sambayya v. Tangatur Subbayya (1), in which it was held that such a security bond is compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act.

The bond clearly requires registration, unless it can be regarded as an order of the Court, falling under section 17 (2) (vi) of the Act.

I cannot agree with the lower Court that the document is in any sense a petition. It contains no request for anything to be done, and is nothing but a security bond.

It also appears to stand on a different footing from a compromise, which, in so far as it is submitted to, and judicially acted upon by, the Court, is a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration. A compromise submitted to the Court has to be followed by a decree, but a security bond requires no order of the Court to render it effectual. The Court's acceptance of the bond given by the judgment-debtors merely indicates, as has been pointed out by the Madras High Court in the case mentioned above, that the Court considers the security sufficient, and does not give validity to the bond.

Nor can the bond be treated as a part of the order of this Court directing execution to be stayed on the judgment-debtor's furnishing security. It was executed in compliance with, or in consequence of, that order, and is something distinct from the order itself.

I agree, therefore, with the view taken in the Madras case, and hold that the security bond requires registration.

I accept the appeal and direct the lower Court to require the judgment-debtors to execute a fresh security bond and have it registered.

The parties will pay their own costs.

Appeal accepted.

ANNAMMAL v. SAMBASIVA AIYAR.

*receipt of—Failure to object to jurisdiction, effect of—*Ex parte decree, suit to declare invalidity of, maintainability of.

A party residing outside the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of a Court, who receives a summons from that Court and raises no objection to its jurisdiction, must be deemed to have submitted to jurisdiction and once a party so submits, he cannot subsequently raise the question again in another Court An ex parte decree passed against such a person cannot be vacated on the ground of want of jurisdiction. [p. 467, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 281 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1914.

FACTS.—A decree ex parte was passed by the High Court on its original side against the present plaintiff. No leave of Court had been obtained, the allegation having been that the High Court had jurisdiction on the ground that the cause of action and the breach of the contract of bailment in question both took place in Madras and that the defendant was also within the jurisdiction. It also transpired that the defendant (the present plaintiff) was in Madras on the 6th and 7th November 1910, that the suit was instituted on 9th November 1910, that the defendant passed Madras at least on the 11th on his way on transfer from Kumbakonam to Vizagapatam and that he had his son in law resident in Madras. The present suit is for a declaration that that decree was passed without jurisdiction and was, therefore, null and void. The lower Appellate Court gave the declaration prayed for.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Defendant Appellant.—The High Court had full jurisdiction to pass the decree. The jewels in question were entrusted by way of bailment in Madras and the jewels ought to have been returned in Madras, because the person who was to receive them back was admittedly in Madras.

This suit is not maintainable. For if a decree is a nullity, no declaration is needed. It need not be set aside. Lakshmanaswami Naidu v. Ramaswami Naidu (1). But these objections as to jurisdiction cannot be taken by way of this suit. The general rule is not that objections as to jurisdiction can be taken without any restriction as to time or place. Puran Chand v. Sheo Dat Rai (2), Kadircelu Nainar v. Kuppuswami Naicker (3). Chokkalingam Chettiar v. Kurunthappan Chettiar (4), Moore v. Gamgee (5); Black on Judgments, Chapter XII, section 217, Fry v. Moore (6).

[BAKEWELL, J.—Your client's predecessor-in-title is said to have died out of the High Court's jurisdiction. Is not that death part of your cause of action?]

No. The death has to be proved, for then only my cause of action arises. But where the death took place is immaterial.

The objection as to jurisdiction must be deemed to have been waived. For section 21, Civil Procedure Code, requires clearly that the objection should be taken at the earliest possible stage.

Clause 12 of the Letters Patent must be widely construed. The High Court has unlimited jurisdiction.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.—There can be no waiver, for my clients come in only in execution proceedings, and it is not open to the Court then to go behind the decree.

Clause 12 has its limitations which are judicially recognised. A distinction has to be drawn between cases where a Court, having general jurisdiction, declines to exercise it for want of compliance with certain formalities prescribed by law and cases where the Court has no jurisdiction whatsoever. Thus, for instance, the High Courts have unlimited jurisdiction to hear cases. But still in Harendra Lal Roy v. Hari Dasi Debi (7) it was held that, where the property was not within jurisdiction, the Calcutta High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit on a mortgage of property.

Neither consent nor waiver can confer jurisdiction. Abdul Kadir v. Dulanbibi (8). Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Meer Mynoodeen Khan (9) is the leading case.

Advocate General of Madras v. Arunachellam Chettiar (10).

[PHILLIPS, J.—Could you not have properly obtained this relief by an application under Order IX, rule 13 ?]

No; for a Court acting under that rule has no power to go into questions other than those required for deciding whether the ex parte decree should be set aside or not. Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (11), Maharaja of Jeypore v. Gunupuram Deenabandhu Patnaick (12), Muhammad Askari v. Radhe Ram Singh (13).

There was no bailment under section 148 of the Contract Act. For the possession of the jewels was with the plaintiff's wife through whom the defendant claims, and it was never with the plaintiff though the control may have been in the plaintiff. So no question of bailment arises in this case. Venkatalutchmi Ammal v. Srirungapatnam Srinivasamurthy (14).

Radha Raman Shaha v. Pran Nath Roy (15) and Khagendra Nath v. Pran Nath Roy (16) cover the question of res judicata in this case.

Advocate-General of Madras v. Arunachellam Chettiar (10) is clear that objection as to jurisdiction cannot be taken in execution proceedings. See also Ratnaswami Chetty v. Ratnammal (17). The case in Laksmanaswami Naidu v. Ramasawmi Naidu (1) does not apply, as it was the case of a consent decree. Alderson v. Palliser (21). (The case was then argued on the merits).

Mr. S. Rangachariar in reply, dealt with the merits of the case.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case obtained a decree of the High Court, made in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, against the plaintiff for the return of certain jewels or payment of their value, and the present plaintiff has brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore for a declaration that this decree is null and void and of no effect on the grounds of fraud and want of jurisdiction. The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no fraud on the part of the defendant, and the question to be decided in this appeal is whether the decree is void for want of jurisdiction.

The plaint filed in the High Court by the defendant alleged that the present plaintiff resided with his wife at No. 25, Venkataramaier Street, George Town, Madras, that is within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court; that the defendant's mother entrusted some jewels to her mother, the defendant's wife, and subsequently died at Vizagapatam, where the plaintiff was then employed; and that the plaintiff and his wife had failed to return the jewels to the defendant after demand. The plaint alleged that the jewels continued in the custody of the plaintiff's wife until the death of the defendant's mother, and there was no averment of a conversion of the jewels within the jurisdiction by the plaintiff or his wife The plaint, therefore, contained no averment to support the contention that the cause of action or part thereof arose within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court. The High Court was competent to entertain a suit of this nature and of the value stated, and its jurisdiction depended upon the residence of the persons sued within the prescribed area.

The plaintiff and his wife did not appear in answer to the summons issued in the suit, and an ex parte decree was passed against the plaintiff upon evidence that he had been served at the house mentioned in the plaint and that this was his residence.

The present plaintiff applied to the High Court to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground that he had not been served with summons. In his affidavit in support of this application he admitted that a bailiff of the Court told him that he had a summons against him, and that he wrote to the Assistant Registrar of the High Court requesting him to send the summons through his superior officer, and stated that he was permanently residing at Kumbakonam. The order dismissing the application was confirmed on appeal.

Many authorities have been cited before us with reference to judgments of foreign Courts, but we are of opinion that they are not relevant to the question to be decided. The Courts of this country will not recognise the judgment of a foreign Court, unless it complies with the prescribed conditions (Civil Procedure Code, section 13), and one of the conditions is that the Court had jurisdiction in the particular case.

In the present case the plaintiff is a subject of British India and resides within the Presidency of Madras and is, therefore, subject to the process of its Courts.

For the convenience of parties and for the better despatch of the business of the Courts the Legislature has prescribed the subject with which the several Courts shall deal, and the areas within which they shall respectively exercise their powers, and has determined what persons shall be subject to their process; and it has provided that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any Appellate or Revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice (Civil Procedure Code, section 21).

Upon the averments contained in the plaint presented to the High Court that Court had power to enquire into their truth, and if it found that the defendant was in fact resident within the local limits of its jurisdiction, it had power to pass the decree prayed for. Such decree could not be set aside by the Appellate Court, unless objection had been taken by the defendant in the prescribed manner.

If its jurisdiction depends upon the existence of certain facts, the Court must decide upon the evidence whether they exist or not, and if upon the facts so found a subordinate Court has assumed jurisdiction, the superior Court will not interfere with its decision except by way of appeal. [See Monisha Eradi v. Siyali Koya (22), Revell v. Blake (23), Gomatham Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (24)].

"Where an inferior Court has no jurisdiction from the beginning, a party by taking a step in a cause before it, does not waive his right to object to the want of jurisdiction. But jurisdiction is sometimes contingent; in such case, if the defendant does not, by objecting at the proper time, exercise his right of destroying the jurisdiction, he cannot do so afterwards." Jones v. James (25) per Erle, J., cited in Moore v. Gamgee (5)].

The plaintiff received a summons from the High Court while he was in Madras, and at the time took no objection to the jurisdiction of this Court, but merely asked that another summons should be sent to him. This Court had, therefore, to determine whether it had jurisdiction. Acting on the averments in the plaint, the return on the summons, and the failure of defendants to raise any objection, it decided that it had jurisdiction and disposed of the suit. Although section 21, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable to the facts of this case, there is no reason why the principle underlying it should not be applied. This principle is that no objection to the place of suing shall be entertained unless it is taken at the earliest opportunity. All Courts in this Presidency, so far as original jurisdiction is concerned, are local Courts, and there is no Court exercising original jurisdiction over the whole Presidency. If, therefore, a Court has jurisdiction to try a suit of a particular nature, the fact that it has not territorial jurisdiction over the suit is a matter of minor importance and will not be deemed to be a matter destroying jurisdiction, unless the objection to jurisdiction is taken at the earliest opportunity. In this case plaintiff, by receiving summons and raising no objection, must be deemed to have submitted to jurisdiction. Although such submission would not be effectual, if the Court, apart from the question of territorial jurisdiction, had otherwise no jurisdiction, it is held to be effectual on a question of territorial jurisdiction. (Vide the provisions of section 21, Civil Procedure Code.) In the present case, therefore, plaintiff must be deemed to have submitted to jurisdiction, and cannot subsequently raise the question again in another Court. The cases in Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Meer Mynoodeen Khan (9) and Alderson v. Palliser (21) are no authority to the contrary, for there the jurisdiction depended on questions other than territorial.

We are of opinion that the remedy open to the plaintiff was that provided by section 21 of the Code and that he has no other remedy.

The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

The memorandum of objection is also dismissed with costs.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
CIVIL REVISION No. 924 OF 1918.
February 6, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Broadway.
PAIRA MAL AND SONS—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS
versus
RAJ NARAIN AND COMPANY—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10—Stay of suit, when can be ordered—Concurrent jurisdiction, what is.

Before an order under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code can be made, the Courts in which the two suits are pending must be shown to be of concurrent jurisdiction, in the sense that the suit to be stayed could be tried by the Court in which the first suit was instituted.

Revision from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 30th August 1918.

Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Petitioners.
Mr. Bishan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 44 of the Punjab Courts Act for revision of an order passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, staying the trial of a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. The petitioners filed the suit on the 20th April 1918 and the respondents asked for an order staying, it on the ground that they had filed a suit in which the same questions were involved in the Court of the Munsif at Delhi on the 25th March 1918.

Before an order under section 10, Civil Procedure Code, can be passed, however, it seems to me that the Courts in which the two suits are pending must be of concurrent jurisdiction, in the sense that the suit to be stayed could be tried in the Court in which the first suit was instituted [See Gopikisan v. Padamraj (1)]. It is obvious that the suit now stayed is not triable by the Munsif and the order complained of was, therefore, without jurisdiction.

I accordingly accept this petition with costs and setting aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge direct that the case be proceeded with.

Revision accepted.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Pre-emption—Co-heirs, right of pre-emption of, extent of—Procedure.

A Burmese Buddhist co-heir has a right of pre-emption in respect of the unseparated interest of any particular co-heir in undivided inherited property, and the whole body of co-heirs, excepting those in respect of whose interest the exercise of the right is claimed, are entitled to settle among themselves which of them shall exercise it in any particular case, but in case there are conflicting claims among the co-heirs and they fail to come to any agreement, any of them may institute a suit to establish his claim as against the others and also against any purchaser who may have bought or be proposing to buy the property in disregard of their rights. The plaintiffs represent Shwe On, one of the five children of Maung Tu and Ma Mi Gyi, and the defendants, except the 1st and 2nd, represent the other four children of the same parents.

The plaintiffs' case is that the lands in suit belonged to Maung Tu and Ma Mi Gyi, that on Maung Tu's death many years ago those lands passed to his widow Ma Mi Gyi, that on Ma Mi Gyi's death some 20 years ago they passed into the possession of the eldest surviving son Shwe Kon, that some ten years ago the lands passed from the possession of Shwe Kon to that of his niece Ma Tin daughter of his sister Ma Kyaw, Shwe Kon being understood to have sold his interest in the lands to Ma Tin, that Ma Tin bought from her cousins Tun Win, On Gaing, and Po Mya, who represented Ma Kaing and Ma E Ma, two other children of Maung Tu and Ma Mi Gyi, their interest in the land so that she became entitled to the interest of four out of the five children of Maung Tu and Ma Mi Gyi, that Tun Hla, the son of Shwe On the fifth child of Maung Tu and Ma Mi Gyi, refused to sell his share to Ma Tin but agreed to her holding the entire land on condition that he also should be entitled to hold it in his turn, that Ma Tin died in the following year and was succeeded in possession of the entire estate by her children Po Thaung and Ma Hla Win, that Tun Hla died subsequently, leaving his wife and children, the plaintiffs themselves, as his heirs, that on the 9th May 1915 after the death of Ma Tin and Tun Hla, Ma Tin's children sold the whole estate by registered deed for Rs. 1,000 to Maung Pu Za and Ma Bwin Pyu, who were strangers to the family, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs as representing Tun Hla, son of Shwe On, one of the five original co-heirs, were entitled to have the sale set aside so far as it affected their one-fifth share of the estate and had a right to pre-emption in respect of the other four-fifth shares. The suit was instituted on the 9th July 1915.

The 1st and 2nd defendants Pu Za and Ma Bwin Pyu, who were the purchasers of the property, said merely that the plaintiffs were aware of the sale when it took place and that, therefore, they were not entitled to have it set aside.

The 3rd and 4th defendants, Po Thaung and Ma Hla Win the children of Ma Tin, who were the vendors, said that their mother Ma Tin bought the interest of Tun Hla, whom the plaintiffs represent, for Rs. 30 as well as the shares of all the other co-heirs, and that, therefore, she became sole owner of the estate and the plaintiffs had no interest in it. They also said that the plaintiffs knew of their sale of the estate to the 1st and 2nd defendants at the time when it took place and made no objection and no claim to pre-emption at that time.

The rest of the defendants, except the 6th Tun Win who did not appear or contest the suit in any way, filed a joint written statement saying that they did not sell their interests in the estate to Ma Tin but only mortgaged them, and that they too were still entitled to be regarded as heirs and should have been made co-plaintiffs in the suit.

The trial Court, after hearing the evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs succeeded in proving that they still retained their right to Tun Hla's one-fifth share of the estate and that, therefore, the sale to the 1st and 2nd defendants, so far as it affected that share, was invalid, and further that the plaintiffs established their right to pre-emption in respect of the other four-fifth shares of the estate. It, therefore, gave them a decree setting aside the sale and declaring that the plaintiffs were entitled to pre-emption on paying such sum not exceeding Rs. 1,600, that is four-fifths of the value of the whole estate, as might be accepted by the other co-heirs.

All the parties objected to this order and either appealed or filed cross objections and the lower Appellate Court framed fresh issues and referred them to the lower Court for trial.

The trial Court, after taking further evidence, recorded findings that the lands were first mortgaged to one Maung Nyun by all the co-heirs, who divided the mortgage money between them, each receiving Rs. 30, and that Ma Tin redeemed the land from Maung Nyun and also paid the representatives of all the other four co-heirs for their interest in the estate so that she became sole owner of the estate.

The lower Appellate Court did not accept these findings but held that it was not proved that Tun Hla's interest in the estate was bought by Ma Tin. It found, therefore, that the original decision of the trial Court was correct and dismissed the appeal of the first four defendants with costs, but passed no order on the cross-objection filed by the plaintiffs and the other defendants.

The plaintiffs and the other defendants then asked the lower Appellate Court to review its judgment on the ground that it had failed to deal with their cross-objection, which was to the effect that the amount payable for pre-emption was Rs. 800 only and not Rs. 1,600.

The Court allowed the application for review, presumably because it had, as alleged, overlooked the cross-objection, and reviewed its judgment to the extent of fixing the amount payable for pre-emption at Rs. 800 instead of Rs. 1,600.

The present appeal, which purports to be filed on behalf of all the four parties to the registered conveyance, that is the first four defendants, regardless of the fact that the 2nd defendant died before the application for review was filed, is said to be a first appeal against the order granting a review and also a second appeal against the final judgment and decree of the Appellate Court passed on review.

So far as it is supposed to be an appeal against the order granting a review, it may be disregarded. There can be no doubt from the lower Appellate Court's judgment that it did overlook the fact that a cross-objection had been filed and when that mistake was brought to its notice, it had every right to review its judgment

The grounds of appeal against the final decree of the lower Appellate Court are:—

(1) that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation,

(2) that there is no right of pre-emption in the case of an ancestral estate which has been partitioned, and that the estate in suit has been partitioned,

(3) that it is proved that all the co-heirs sold their interests in the estate to Ma Tin and that, therefore, she was the sole owner of the estate and the plaintiffs have no interest in it,

(4) that pre-emption requires the consent of all the co-heirs, and that because the 3rd and 4th defendants, who, if the plaintiffs' contention is correct, are co-heirs with them in respect of the estate, do not consent to the plaintiffs' exercising the right of pre-emption, the plaintiffs cannot pre-empt, and

(5) that the trial Court was right in fixing the amount payable for pre-emption at Rs. 1,600.

I have read the record and heard Counsel, and it seems to me that as the lower Courts have come to divergent findings on the facts, the first thing to be done is to see what facts ought to be found on the evidence.

The plaintiffs relied mainly on the evidence of those defendants who practically made common cause with them.

The most important of these is Shwe Kon, one of the five original co-heirs, who is equally related to the 2nd to 8th plaintiffs and to the 3rd and 4th defendants and who, if he had any prejudice at all, might be expected to be prejudiced against the 1st plaintiff, Ma Nge Me, who since the death of her husband Tun Hla would ordinarily be regarded among Burmans as a stranger to the family. His account of what happened seems to be that very soon after the death of Ma Mi Gyi, which took place over 20 years ago, he and his nephews On Gaing and Tun Win, who were sons of his sister Ma Kaing, and Po Mya, the son of his sister Ma E Me, and Ma Tin, daughter of his sister Ma Kyaw, mortgaged the land in suit to a Shan Maung No (Maung Nyun) for Rs. 150. He did not at first mention the name of Tun Hla, son of his brother Shwe On, as one of the mortgagors, but subsequently he said that Tun Hla was a party to the mortgage and received his share of the mortgage money which was divided into five shares of Rs. 30 each, one share going to the representatives of each of the five children of Maung Tu and Ma Mi Gyi. He said that some 10 to 13 years ago, about the year 1266 (1904), Ma Tin with the consent of the other heirs redeemed the land with her own money and that at that time Tun Win, Po Mya and he executed a bond mortgaging the land to Ma Tin for Rs. 300 and received Rs. 30 each on account of their shares in the property. He alleged that Tun Hla, who was present at that mortgage and was at that time living with Ma Tin, agreed to their executing the mortgage bond but refused to execute it himself or to take any share of the money. He admitted that the mortgage bond was not registered and he said that from that time Ma Tin and her children remained in possession of the property until they transferred it to the 1st and 2nd defendants, Pu Za and Bwin Pyu.

The defendant On Gaing, who, as I have said, claims that he still has an interest in the estate, said that he and Shwe Kon, and Tun Hla and Ma Tin and Po Mya originally mortgaged the land to Maung Nyun and divided the mortgage money, which was Rs. 150, among them in five equal shares of Rs. 30, that Ma Tin redeemed that mortgage with her own money, that after that redemption he and Shwe Kon and Po Mya mortgaged the land to Ma Tin and again received Rs. 30 each as their shares of the mortgage money and that at the time Tun Hla was living with Ma Tin, but he did not know whether or not Tun Hla received his share of the mortgage money from Ma Tin. He admitted that from that time the whole estate remained in the possession of Ma Tin and her children for ten or twelve years, and that he himself had never made any claim to redemption as against Ma Tin.

The defendant Po Mya similarly said that the land was originally mortgaged by the five co-heirs to Maung Nyun for Rs. 150 of which they received Rs. 30 each, that Tun Hla redeemed that mortgage with Ma Tin's money and that three years later he and Shwe Kon and On Gaing and Tun Hla mortgaged the land to Ma Tin. He admitted that he and Shwe Kon and Po Mya received

Rs. 30 each again at the time of the mortgage to Ma Tin, but alleged that Tun Hla said he would not take his share of the money because he was living with Ma Tin and was leaving his share with her. He also said that during the 3 years which elapsed between the redemption from Maung Nyun and the mortgage to Ma Tin, Tun Hla worked the land for two years and his brother worked it the third year.

Ma Pa U, who was Tun Hla's mother, said that although the estate was in the possession of Po Thaung and Ma Hla Win, she knew that Tun Hla had never received his share of it. She said that when Po Thaung and Ma Hla Win sold the land to Ma Shan Ma and her son Pu Za after Tun Hla's death, she and her daughter-in-law, the plaintiff Ma Nge Ma, went and protested against the sale. She admitted that before the land came into the possession of Po Thaung and Ma Hla Win it was in the possession of their mother Ma Tin, but said that before it came into the possession of Ma Tin the heirs used to cultivate the land by turn, Tun Hla's younger brother Maung Kaing cultivating the land for one year about 12 years ago as Tun Hla's tenant. She also claimed an interest in the property herself as being the widow of Shwe On.

Maung San Nyun, who is related to all the parties except of course the 1st and 2nd defendants, said that he witnessed the bond recording the mortgage of the land to Ma Tin by certain of her co-heirs but as the bond was admittedly unregistered, he was not allowed by the Court to give any evidence of its contents. He said further that Ma Tin and her son Po Thaung were in possession of the land for about 7 years.

Po Saing said only that he once heard Ma Hla Win asked Tun Hla to let her work some land but he did not know what land was referred to.

Po Ka said that during the rains not long before Tun Hla's death, he heard Ma Hla Win tell Tun Hla 'that she would either give over the land in suit to Tun Hla after harvest or pay him Rs. 200 as his share of the inheritance and that on her saying this Tun Hla agreed to her working the land. Po Saing was present at the time and so was Ma Nge Ma. In cross-examination he admitted that the name of the land was not mentioned and it is to be noted that his account of the conversation is quite different from that given by Po Saing.

Maung O, son of the original mortgagee Maung Nyun, said that Tun Hla mortgaged the land to his father about 18 or 19 years ago, that he himself cultivated it for some years, and that it was subsequently redeemed from his father, but he did not know who redeemed it.

Po Min, an ex-convict who is apparently on bad terms with the defendant Pu Za, was called by the plaintiffs as their witness, but his evidence was all hearsay and was in any case worthless.

Tun Nyo, who was called by both sides, said merely that Ma Tin once gave a bullock to Tun Hla's brother Maung Kaing, but he did not know on what account the animal was given.

Ma Nge Ma, the 1st plaintiff, did not give evidence on her own behalf but she was called by the first four defendants as their witness, and in cross-examination she said that she did not wish to deny that the land was mortgaged to Maung Nyun. She also said that the statement of the defendant Po Mya that her husband worked the land in dispute for three years before it went into Ma Tin's possession was correct, and that she was present about a year before Tun Hla died, when Ma Hla Win asked Tun Hla to allow her to work the land for another year, and Tun Hla agreed.

That may be regarded as the end of the plaintiffs' evidence.

For the defence Maung E Ni was called apparently to show that the document executed in Ma Tin's favour by her co-heirs was a deed of sale and not a mortgage but in view of the fact that the document was admittedly unregistered his evidence was held to be inadmissible.

Chit Pu, husband of Ma Tin and father (or possibly step-father) of Po Thaung and Ma Hla Win, swore that he saw his wife Ma Tin deliver a pair of bullocks to Tun Hla saying that it was the price of land. He admitted that in 1915 Tun Hla came to Ma Hla Win and said that if they wanted to sell the land, it ought to be sold to a co-heir.

Po Myat said merely that he himself proposed to buy the land from Ma Hla Win before it was sold to Pu Za, but Ma Hla Win told him that she had decided to sell it to Pu Za and returned the advance which he had already paid on account of the price.

It is clear from the evidence that Ma Tin and her children had been in exclusive possession of the land for a good many years, apparently at least 10 years, when the suit was filed and that the initial burden of proof was on the plaintiffs. But I think that it was proved that Ma Tin's possession was originally permissive, that is to say, that after she redeemed the land from Maung Nyun she held it on behalf of the whole body of the co-heirs, who would be entitled to obtain their shares of the estate on paying their shares of the Rs. 150 which she had paid to Maung Nyun.

It is admitted that Ma Tin subsequently paid the representatives of three of the five co-heirs Rs. 30 each for their remaining interest in the land, and her children naturally say that the transaction was a purchase of the interest of the other co-heirs for that amount. The representatives of the other co-heirs on the other hand say that it was a mortgage and not a sale of their interests. Neither side can prove its allegations but if Ma Tin's children could prove that their possession for the last twelve years had been adverse, they would establish a good title by prescription as against these three co heirs.

The case of Tun Hla is different. It is said that he was living with Ma Tin at the time of the transaction and that for that reason he did not take his share of the mortgage money paid by Ma Tin, and there is no sufficient evidence to prove that he did take it. I see no reason why the witnesses should be lying when they say that he was living with Ma Tin or when they say that he did not transfer his interest in the property to her, and if he was living with her, there would seem to be no particular reason why he should transfer it. The question whether or not the various defendants who claim interests in the estate still have rests does not arise in this case and all I have to decide is, whether or not Tun Hla retained his interest. There is no evidence that he parted with it and it is not proved that the possession of Ma Tin and her children was adverse to Tun Hla for more than 12 years. It is proved that their possession, when it began, was permissive and in the absence of any reliable evidence to the contrary I am bound to hold that Tun Hla retained his interest in the estate, which on the evidence would be a right to recover one-fifth of the land on payment of Rs. 30, that is one-fifth of the amount which Ma Tin paid for redemption. Ma Tin's children had no right to sell Tun Hla's interest in the estate and as no question of ostensible ownership has been raised, the sale of Tun Hla's share of the land to the 1st and 2nd defendants was invalid, except to the extent to which the 3rd and 4th defendants were entitled to transfer their right to possession of that share subject to the plaintiffs' right to recover it on payment of Rs. 30.

The question of the plaintiffs' right to pre-emption in respect of the rest of the estate remains for consideration.

Appellants' learned Advocate says that supposing that co-heirs have a right of pre-emption in respect of the interests of other co-heirs in the estate in which they are co-heirs, and supposing that the plaintiffs and the 3rd and 4th defendants are co-heirs in the estate in suit, and supposing further that pre emption is a matter of inheritance, which he denies, even then the plaintiffs cannot exercise their right of pre-emption because that right can be exercised only with the consent of all the co heirs and the 3rd and 4th defendants, who according to the plaintiffs are their co-heirs, do not consent.

As for the question whether pre-emption is a matter of inheritance, it has been pointed out by Sir Charles Fox in Maung Ye Nan O v. Aung Myat San (1) that it does not matter whether pre emption be regarded as a question of inheritance or as a matter of custom since the right would be recognised by the Courts in either case, but I may say that although pre emption is not necessarily a matter of inheritance, it is in my opinion clearly a matter of inheritance in cases where it is a right to which heirs are entitled solely on account of their status as heirs and not on any other account.

I have already held that the plaintiffs are co heirs with the 3rd and 4th defendants, and, therefore, the argument resolves itself into the questions, (1) whether any right of pre emption is recognised in Burmese Buddhist Law, (2) if so, whether co-heirs have a right of pre-emption in respect of the interests of other co-heirs in the estate in which they are all co-heirs, (3) whether that right continues after partition of the estate, and (4) whether the right can be exercised by any co heir or co heirs without the consent of all.

The first two of these questions were raised in the Lower Burma case cited above and were answered in the affirmative, while the third was also raised but was answered in the negative.

The proposition that the consent of all the co heirs is necessary before the right of pre-emption can be exercised is based on the cases of Lu Dok v. Mi Po (2) in this Court and Mi Te v. Po Maung (3) in Lower Burma.

Unfortunately the Burmese Buddhist Law of pre emption has been differently interpreted in Upper and Lower Burma.

The latest ruling of this Court, which is at present binding on all Courts in Upper Burma, is the case of Nga Tin v. Nga Shwe On (4), in which Sir George Shaw held that after an ancestral estate has been partitioned among the co-heirs, a co-heir who on such partition has received his share retains a right of pre-emption in respect of the shares which his co-heirs have similarly received and that his widow who succeeds to his share on his death succeeds also to his right of pre-emption. Sir George Shaw expressly followed the earlier rulings of this Court in the cases of Lu Dok v. Mi Po (2) and Shwe Nyun v. Mi So (5), which he said were based on the Lower Burma decisions in Mi Ngwe v. Lu Bu (6), Mi Te v. Po Maung (3) and Nga Myaing v. Mi Baw (7), and he came to the conclusion that the Buddhist Dhammathats contain provisions which give a right of pre-emption to co heirs in respect of divided as well as undivided property. That conclusion, so far as it concerns divided property, is directly opposed to the ruling of Sir Charles Fox in the Lower Burma case of Shwe Eik Ke v. Tha Hla Aung (8), which Sir George Shaw considered and refused to follow.

Sir George Shaw's judgment was considered by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Maung Ye Nan O v. Aung Myat San (1), where Sir Daniel Twomey pointed out that the learned Judicial Commissioner did not mention the portion of the Dhammathats on which he relied as establishing his proposition in respect of divided property. The original texts on which the previous rulings purported to have been based were considered and Ormond, J., pointed out that the passage from Manu Thara Shwemyin on which Sandford, J., relied in the leading case of Nga Myaing v. Mi Baw (7), applied only to special lands which in Burmese Buddhist Law were known as "dead" lands (myethe) and not to ordinary lands which were known as "live" lands (myeshin). Twomey, J., went a step further and pointed out that on reference to the original Dhammathats it appears that the passage from Manu Wunnana, on which Sandford, J., also relied, similarly referred to "dead" lands (myethe) and not to ordinary lands.

This disposes of the authorities from Manu Thara Shwemyin and Manu Wunnana.

The only other authorities cited by Sandford, J., for his decisions in Nga Myaing v. Mi Baw (7), Mi Te v. Po Maung (3) and Mi Ngwe v. Lu Bu (6) were two passages from Manugye. With reference to the first of these Sir Charles Fox pointed out that it applied to all property which had been bought and sold, that it had nothing to do with inheritance, or rights of co-heirs or inherited property, and that in any case the rule embodied in it was admittedly long obsolete. I agree with all this and I would add that in view of the fact that the rule given in that passage (7 Manugye 36) is exactly the same as that given in Manu Wunnana 458 (c) which applies only to "dead" lands (myethe), it is probable that the rule in Manugye also applied only to "dead" lands and not to ordinary lands.

MAUNG PU ZA v. MA NGE MA.

I agree, therefore, that no right of pre-emption in respect of ordinary lands can be inferred from the first of the two passages from Manugye on which Sandford, J., based it.

In respect of the second passage many difficulties have arisen mainly through mis-translation, and although I accept the translation given by Twomey, J., in Maung Ye Nan O's case (1) as substantially correct, I think it desirable to give, so far as possible, a literal version.

As I read the passage (excluding the second paragraph which expressely deals with dead" lands), the wording is as follows:—

"As regards right of ownership lands are of two kinds, 'dead' and 'live.'

'Dead' lands are soldier's lands, lands given as allotments, lands of definite area given by the King to Headmen, Governors, Surveyors, Foresters, Secretaries and Stewards for their subsistence, and lands anciently held for their subsistence by a line of hereditary officials in succession.

'Live' lands are all lands except 'dead' lands, and include lands received from parents as inheritance, lands purchased from some one else, lands got by some one else absconding, lands openly worked and owned without objection for ten years, lands got by clearing and cultivating forest, and lands given by Survey Officers, lands worked without the paddy-land owner's objecting, and lands worked by clearing and cultivating forest, these lands the owner can sell outright. If they are bought let the buyer have an undisputed right to work, enjoy, and own them, while the seller is alive, if redemption is claimed, redemption shall not be allowed, but if the buyer die while the seller is alive let the seller redeem and if he is dead and there is an 'office-bearer' let redeem.....As for all the aforesaid 'dead' and 'live' lands, parents, grandfathers, and great-grandfathers, relations, sons, grandsons, and great grandsons, and though it be between younger and elder brothers or brothers and sisters only, they shall not redeem. If the sale was outright, let the buyer be owner. Though they be truly relations within the seven degrees and none others, even sons or grandsons, they shall not redeem. According to the original sale let the ownership be. Suppose among relations only a sale of any of the aforesaid is intended, those interested as relations or (and) heirs having been asked generally, let the person who says 'I will not buy' be. Let the person who says 'I will buy' buy. If the matter is between relations, then although one who when asked said 'I will not buy' should say after another has bought, 'Let me share equally in the purchase,' if this be said after the other has bought and worked for a year, the original buyer alone shall be owner, because the one who said 'I will not buy' has delayed, he cannot buy, let him lose his right. But if in the day or month when he said 'I will now buy' he says again: 'At the time of the selling and buying' I said 'I will not buy,' now 'I will buy', let there be no objection to his buying because he said in the sight and knowledge of the buyer that he would not buy. The matter is between relations and the selling and buying must be carried out as becomes relations. Suppose a sale to a person who has an interest is intended and the seller says to all those who have an interest 'Buy I am in debt to someone and shall have to pay up,' if they say: 'We will buy', let them all buy together equally. But if one of the purchasers say: 'It ought to be sold to me alone, I alone ought to buy the whole,' let the discussion as to who ought or ought not to buy be among the purchasers. Let it not be said to the seller. But suppose the seller desiring one only to have the property has sold without telling another who has said 'I will buy', the seller is wrong. As for the buyer turn him out and let them then discuss who ought or ought not to buy. Let the owner take back his property and let those who say they ought to buy say among themselves who ought to buy. Let the property be sold to the one who ought to buy and if the owner say 'I will not sell', let him bear the law-costs and let him not sell to another. As for those costs let him not say: 'We are relations; let him pay them.'"

The distinction between "dead" and "live" lands is now as Twomey, J., said in Maung Ye Nan O's case (1) of merely historical interest, because the lands in respect of which pre-emption is claimed in the Courts now-a-days are always "live" lands.

It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the passage from Manugye so far as it deals with "dead" lands.

So far as it refers to "live" lands, what the passage says in plain English seems to me to be as follows:—

"(1) Lands allotted by Survey Officers, lands occupied without objection on the part of a former occupier, and lands obtained by clearing waste can be sold outright by the person who has occupied them and the seller has no right to redeem them unless the buyer dies in his lifetime."

The passage about redemption by an "office-bearer" after the death of the seller is obscure. Judson's Dictionary gives the meaning of the words translated "office-bearer" as "one who has a civil office", and so the passage might possibly mean that an "Officer," possibly the Revenue Officer, has a right to redeem. I think, however, that this is unlikely and probably the translation which regards the words as meaning a "representative of the seller" is correct.

"(2) Relations as such have no right to redeem any lands.

"(3) If the sole owner of any lands wishes to sell them to a relation, he must offer them not to one but to the whole body of his relations. Any of them who may wish to buy may do so, but if any one has bought and another claims to do so within a year, he should be allowed to join in the purchase."

"(4) If one of a number of co-sharers in any lands wishes to sell his share to another of the co-sharers, he may not sell it to whom he likes but must leave the decision as to who is to buy to the whole body of co-sharers, and must either accept their decision or not sell at all."

The first of these provisions seems to me to give no right of pre-emption to heirs.

The second says merely that relations as such have no right to redeem. It does not refer to pre-emption.

The third says that if a sole owner of any lands wishes to sell those lands as a whole to relations he must offer them to all his relations without distinction, but does not say that the relations have any right of pre-emption if the owner chooses to sell to a stranger.

The fourth similarly says that if a co-sharer wishes to sell his interest in any lands in respect of which he is a co-sharer to another co-sharer in those lands, he shall not himself decide to which of the co-sharers he will sell but must allow the co-sharers to decide among themselves and must abide by their decision.

There is no express provision for pre-emption in any of these cases, but the existence of a right of pre-emption might be inferred from the direction in the last case that the seller must abide by the decision of his co sharers. So far as the express words go, all that the passage says is that if one co-sharer wishes to sell his share to another he must abide by the decision of all. It does not actually say that he must sell his share to another co-sharer, but possibly that might be inferred.

That inference is apparently the sole basis for the law of pre-emption as found by Sandford, J., in the three rulings on which all the subsequent case-law has been founded, and as Sir Charles Fox said in the Lower Burma case already cited: "If the question of the right of pre-emption among co heirs depended solely on the reasons given in favour of it in Mr. Sandford's judgments, I should be prepared to hold that these were decisions which should not be followed because they were not founded on materials recognized by law as the basis for a decision that a binding custom prevailed at the time the question as to its existence had to be decided."

I entirely agree with that view. I think that although the passages from Manugye to which reference has been made do suggest a custom of pre emption among co-heirs, they do not contain any express statement of any such custom, and I should be loth to say that they are by themselves sufficient to establish the existence of a right to pre emption among co-heirs in Burmese Buddhist Law. But Sir Charles Fox went on to refer to section 97 of the "Civil Code of the Province of Pegu sanctioned by Resolutions of His Honour the President in Council," commonly referred to as "Sparks' Code," and he remarked that the rules embodied in it were at the time equivalent to legislation.

Section 97 of that Code is headed: "Sale and right of pre-emption" and runs as follows:—

"If a person wish to sell his share in an undivided ancestral estate, he should first offer it to all the co-heirs. They may buy his share jointly, or each buy his separate portion of the share, or one may buy in trust for the whole, according as the co-heirs shall decide among themselves; the seller shall have no voice in the decision and shall not be at liberty to sell his share otherwise than they or the majority of them shall decide."

That statement of the law purports to be based on the passage of Manugye translated above and is clearly a paraphrase of the part beginning: "Suppose a sale to a person who has an interest is intended," that is to say, it corresponds to my fourth paragraph above.

In this connection I may note that Richardson's translation of the preceding passage which says that relations "shall not redeem" omits the word "not" and says that if relations wish to redeem "they shall have a right to do so." Now Richardson's translation was published in 1847 and Sparks' Code was prepared in the fifties, so it seems possible that Major Sparks' reading into the paragraph in Manugye about co-sharers a definite rule of pre-emption in favour of co-heirs may have been induced by Richardson's mistranslation of the preceding passage about relations. It may be remarked also that the Kinwun Mingyi in compiling his Digest of the Dhammathats omitted to include any texts on pre-emption, except those referring to the now probably obsolete right of the relatives of one of a married couple who predeceases the other to pre-empt the "hereditary belongings" (probable "heirlooms") of the deceased to which the survivor has succeeded, in case there are no children of the marriage and the surviving spouse proposes to sell them. Twomey, J., has suggested that that omission might be due to the learned author's regarding matters of pre emption as relating to inheritance only in a secondary sense, but it is clear that another possible explanation would be that the Kinwun Mingyi was of opinion there were no passages in the Dhammathats which gave any other right of pre-emption than the one which he mentioned.

If the matter were res integra, I should be inclined to hold on the materials which are available that the right of co-heirs to pre emption under Burmese Buddhist Law in respect of the shares of other co heirs in the estate in which they are co-heirs is not established, but in view of the fact that the right of persons who are co-heirs in undivided inherited property to pre-emption in respect of the unseparated interest of any particular co-heir in that property was recognized in Sparks' Code 60 years ago and has not, so far as appears from the published rulings, ever been questioned in the Courts until recently and that the Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma before whom it was lately questioned recognized it in a judgment in which the whole question was considered with the greatest care and learning, I agree with Sir Charles Fox that to the extent to which it was laid down in Sparks' Code, and to that extent only, the right of pre-emption amongst co-heirs must be recognised. I agree also with Sir Daniel Twomey that the right belongs to all those who are co-heirs in respect of undivided lands and that the whole body of co-heirs, excepting those in respect of whose interest the exercise of the right is claimed, are entitled to settle among themselves which of them shall exercise it in any particular case, but in case there are conflicting claims among the co-heirs and they fail to come to any agreement, any of them may institute a suit to establish his claim as against the others and also, of course, against any purchaser who may have bought or be proposing to buy in disregard of their rights.

Possibly I have failed to grasp what was in the learned Judge's mind when he made the further deduction that the right can be enforced only against the person who inherited the land jointly with the claimants, that it lapses with his death, and that his heirs take the land free from all obligation as regards pre-emption; but I do not think that there is any authority for the limitation suggested and I would hold that so long as inherited land is undivided all the co heirs, whatever their degree of relationship to the original owner, have a right of pre-emption in respect of the interest of any particular co heir in the undivided inherited property in which they are all co heirs.

I agree, of course, that the right must be claimed promptly, but I would interpret "promptly" as meaning within the period limited by Article 10 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act.

One effect of this decision is to overrule the judgment of this Court in the case of Lu Dok v. Mi Po (2), in so far as that judgment can be regarded as suggesting that no co-heir can enforce pre-emption unless the actual consent of the other co-heirs has been obtained, but I think that the learned Judicial Commissioner's addition of the words "or unless they have been made parties to the suit" shows that he did not intend to rule that no co-heir can succeed in a suit for pre-emption if any of the other co-heirs who are made parties to his suit object.

The Lower Burma case on which appellants' learned Advocate also relies, namely, the case of Mi Te v. Po Maung (3) has already been overruled, and, therefore, I find that there is no basis for the fourth ground of appeal

I have already found that the appellants failed to prove that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation by reasons of adverse possession on the part of the 3rd and 4th defendants, and no other question of limitation arises.

I agree that there is no right of pre-emption in respect of an inherited estate after it has been partitioned, but I have found that in this case, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, the estate has not been partitioned.

These findings dispose of the first three grounds of appeal.

The fifth ground, that the amount payable for pre-emption is the whole value of the share in respect of which pre-emption is claimed and not the amount offered or paid for that share by the purchaser at the sale against which pre-emption is claimed, has not been seriously argued and is manifestly baseless. The amount payable for pre-emption in such a case as the present is, of course, the amount which the vendor has agreed to receive or has received from the purchaser whose purchase is avoided for the share in respect of which pre-emption is claimed and that amount in this case is Rs. 800, being four-fifths of Rs. 1,000, the amount which the 1st and 2nd defendants paid for the whole estate.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-emption in respect of four-fifths of the estate for Rs. 800 and that as regards the other one-fifth share they are entitled to recover the lands which represent that share on payment of Rs. 30.

The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and in substitution of the trial Court's decree there will be a decree directing as regards four-fifths of the estate that on the plaintiffs paying into Court the sum of Rs. 800 within three months from this date, together with the costs of the 1st and 2nd defendants, the 1st defendant shall deliver possession of the property to the plaintiffs whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment, but that if the said sum of Rs. 800 and costs are not so paid, the suit shall be dismissed with costs for the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants against the plaintiffs, and as regards the other one-fifth share that the 1st defendant shall deliver it to the plaintiffs on receipt of Rs 30.

I think it equitable under the circumstances that the plaintiffs, whose long delay in asserting their claim to an interest in the property has occasioned this litigation so far as the 1st and 2nd defendants are concerned, should, if they recover the property, pay the 1st and 2nd defendants' costs, and that the parties other than the 1st and 2nd defendants should bear their own costs unless the plaintiffs fail to pay the amount found due, in which case I think the plaintiffs should pay the costs of the 3rd and 4th defendants also.

I note that if on the expiry of the three months allowed by this decree the decretal amount and the costs have not been paid into Court, the trial Court should pass a final decree dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs for the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants throughout.

I note also that the Rs. 830 will be payable to the 1st defendant, not to the 3rd and 4th defendants as the lower Courts seem to have thought.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2399 OF 1917.

May 13, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Newbould and Mr. Justice Duval.

NAZIR AHAMAD, ADMINISTRATOR TO THE ESTATE OF Late MOULVI KHABIR-UD-DIN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

RAGBAT ALI—PRINCIPAL DEFENDANT AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXI, rr. 1, 2—Administrator, one of several, suit by, to recover rent, maintainability of—Consent of other administrators.

A suit by one of several administrators of an estate with the consent of the other administrators, who are impleaded as pro forma defendants, to recover rent, is maintainable.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 27th August 1917, reversing that of the Additional Munsif, Sundip, dated the 4th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Plaintiff Appellant.—There was no defect in law in the frame of my suit. Though I am one of the four administrators of the estate, and the other three have not joined me as plaintiffs in the rent suit, there was no defect inasmuch as the other three administrators gave consent and were duly made pro forma defendants. So, there ought to be a remand for the adjudication of the next issue as to the amount of rent payable by defendant No. 1, which remains undecided. The suit by me was legally maintainable and should not have been dismissed by the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. It was decreed by the first Court, but dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the plaintiff, who was one of the four administrators to the estate of Moulvi Khabir-ud-din, could not maintain the suit in the absence of the other three persons who joined him in taking out the Letters of Administration. In our opinion, any defect which could have arisen from the absence of the other three persons was cured by making them pro forma defendants and by their giving consent in their capacity as pro forma defendants to the plaintiff continuing the suit.

We accordingly reverse the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case for a decision on the second issue that arose before the lower Appellate Court as to the amount of rent payable by defendant No. 1. After hearing the case on this point, the lower Appellate Court will finally dispose of the appeal according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide the result

As we have held that the appeal lies in this case, the connected Rule is discharged as being unnecessary.

Appeal allowed;
Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit without leave to bring fresh suit—Suit, subsequent, based on different allegations, maintainability of.

Plaintiff brought a suit against C. and T. to recover possession of a house, on the allegation that it had been let to C. who had abandoned it and that T. was in possession of it as a trespasser. The defendants pleaded that they were the owners of the house The plaintiff obtained permission to withdraw the suit but he was not given leave to bring a fresh suit Subsequently he brought another suit for possession of the same house against T. and K., on the ground that after the withdrawal of the first suit he had let the house to T. who had abandoned it and had sold it to K:

Held, that the previous suit having been withdrawn without leave to bring a fresh suit, the plaintiff was debarred under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code from alleging that T. was not the owner of the house, and that, therefore, the present suit was not maintainable. KANSHI RAM v. BALDEO SINGH.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sewaram Singh, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree-table relating to the family of the defendant Tulsi will help towards a proper understanding of the present case:—

Plaintiff, Rai Baldeo Singh, who is the proprietor of the village of Raipur in the Ambala district, sues, through the Court of Wards as his next friend, for a declaration to the effect that he is the owner of a certain house in the village abadi: that the said house was leased by him some 19 years before suit to Tulsi defendant No. 2 for residential purposes; that about a year thereafter Tulsi left the house in the village; that on the 10th March 1916 Tulsi sold the house to Kanshi Ram defendant No. 1; that he was not competent to sell it; and that the sale is not binding upon the plaintiff. Kanshi Ram and Tulsi denied plaintiff's title as owner and pleaded that Tulsi was himself the absolute owner of the house and that the sale was valid and binding. The Munsif found that plaintiff had failed to prove his title to the house and that he had not established his allegation that he had leased it to Tulsi. The Senior Subordinate Judge, after remanding the case for an enquiry on certain points, reversed the decree of the first Court and found that Tulsi had by reason of abandonment lost all rights in the house and that plaintiff as the owner of the village was presumably in possession of the site in question and was, therefore, entitled to the declaration prayed for. Kanshi Ram has preferred a second appeal to this Court and the various points involved have been argued at some length before me.

It appears that in 1896 the present plaintiff brought a suit for possession of the same house, based on very similar allegations, against Musammat Chauni the widow of Ram Dial and Tulsi, and that in that suit he claimed that he was the owner of the house; that he had leased it to Mangal, the father-in-law of Musammat Chauni; that Musammat Chauni after the death of her husband had left the house in the village and had thereby lost all rights in the property and that he was consequently entitled to a decree for possession. Musammat Chauni and Tulsi pleaded that the plaintiff was not the owner of the house but that on the contrary they and their ancestors had for a long time past been in proprietary and adverse possession of it and that plaintiff had no right to claim possession. Plaintiff did not proceed with the suit but asked permission to withdraw his claim. This permission was granted but the Court did not, at the time of passing this order, give plaintiff leave to institute a subsequent suit in respect of the same subject-matter. It has been argued before me that Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, precludes plaintiff from suing now for the declaration claimed by him inasmuch as the allegations in the plaint relate to the same cause of action which he put forward in the previous suit. In answer Mr. Sewaram Singh contends that the present suit is based upon an entirely different cause of action inasmuch as the plaintiff alleges that on a date subsequent to the previous suit the plaintiff leased the house to Tulsi and that Tulsi thereafter abandoned it. I have considered these arguments and my conclusion is that Order XXIII, rule 1, debars plaintiff from alleging against Tulsi any claim founded upon his alleged ownership of the property. The withdrawal of the suit in 1896 must be regarded as a bar to any plea by the plaintiff that Tulsi was not an absolute owner of the house and site in dispute. In the previous case Tulsi in express terms claimed to be the absolute owner, and in view of the result of that case plaintiff must now concede that at that time at all events Tulsi was such absolute owner. It is impossible for plaintiff, therefore, in the present suit to claim that he was the owner of the property in 1898 or 1899 and that Tulsi was merely a tenant holding under him. His whole suit as at present framed is based on the assumption that he is as much the owner of the site of the house in question as he is of the rest of the village abadi, and in my opinion this is a position that he is not entitled to take up.

Of course there is nothing to debar plaintiff from proving that subsequently to the previous suit Tulsi abandoned the house and that he (plaintiff) thereupon took possession of it and has acquired proprietary right therein by adverse possession for more than 12 years. But it is not upon this allegation that his claim is based and there is no evidence to prove that he has actually had such adverse possession in respect of the house. The first Court, for reasons which appear to me sound, came to the conclusion that plaintiff had failed to prove that he had been in possession at all, and this is practically the same conclusion that was arrived at by another Munsif after the remand ordered by the Subordinate Judge. The latter does not find that plaintiff has in fact been in possession of the house or of the site, but concludes that he must be presumed to have been in possession because he is the owner of the site. Obviously upon the view that I take, this presumption cannot arise as it is not open to the plaintiff to claim, as against Tulsi, that he as the proprietor of the village is also the proprietor of the site of this particular house. In my opinion the first Court was right in dismissing the suit and I accordingly accept the appeal and set aside the order and decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge. Plaintiff must pay costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—This application arises out of a suit for rent. The suit was dismissed by the first Court and the dismissal was upheld on appeal. It appears that the defendant No. 17, Sakina Khatun, died when the case was pending in appeal before the lower Appellate Court and the appeal proceeded without her heirs being substituted. We are asked now in the appeal preferred to this Court to substitute the heirs of Sakina Khatun. It seems to me that the question of substitution can only arise where there is a death pending a suit or appeal. In this case, the death having taken place before the appeal in the lower Appellate Court was decided and not while the appeal was pending in this Court, I do not think we can order the substitution prayed for. The Rule is accordingly discharged. The costs of the minor opposite party represented by the Deputy Registrar having already been paid, we make no order as to costs.

If the applicant has any remedy, he has to make a proper application to the proper Court if so advised.

Queen-Empress v. Sami, 13 M. 426 at p. 432; 1 Weir 290; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1009, relied on.

Criminal appeal from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Chhattisgarh Division, dated the 25th June 1915.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Ramji Mahar, aged 20 years, has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of Bahini Mhalin. The Assessors concurred in thinking his guilt established.

The evidence was fully recorded by the learned Sessions Judge and is exhaustively discussed in his judgment. The appellant at his own request was produced before us, so that we had the advantage of hearing his defence from his own lips. What he wishes us to believe is that Timia Dhimar (P. W. No. 8) was seen to murder Bahini by Bakia the nephew and Damia the son of Ramji Kunbi (P. W. No. 11) and that they gave this out in the village before the Police arrived to investigate. Bakia and Damia will be found mentioned, towards the close of the case-diary for the 23rd October last, in a statement attributed to the appellant, but not as in any way cognizant of the crime. We may say at once that we entirely discredit this story. There is no indication of it in the record of the appellant's examination by the Commissioner, Drug, nor did he tell it to the Sessions Judge. The appellant complains that he was not properly examined by the Sessions Judge, and it must be conceded that the record of that examination is not as full as it should have been. He was, however, defended by a Pleader at the trial—indeed on 2 out of the 3 days for which the trial lasted two Pleaders represented him—yet the lengthy cross-examination of Tima contains no hint that he was, to begin with, accused of the murder, nor were Bakia and Damia cited as witnesses for the defence. To the Committing Magistrate Tima was mentioned by the appellant as bearing him a grudge because he had accused another Dhimar Sonia of making an indecent proposal to his wife. In the grounds of appeal the improper overtures are attributed to Tima himself, and by what is evidently a similar afterthought that person is alleged to have himself murdered Bahini.

It is proved beyond possibility of doubt that Bahini, a girl of 7, was in her parents' house at Mauza Sangam on Thursday the 22nd October up to about 10 A. M., that about 4 P. M. the same day her corpse was found covered with sand in a pit a mile from the abadi, and that she had been strangled and all her ornaments removed. The first information was laid at the Bhandara station-house at 9 P. M. by the Kotwar Kisnia (alias Pichgia), since deceased, and the Sub-Inspector Chunnilal (P. W. No. 1) reached Sangam at 3 30 A. M. on the 23rd October, being joined by the Circle Inspector (P. W. No. 9) at noon. The appellant was arrested at 3 P. M. and is said to have shortly afterwards given up all except two, a silver bindla and a gold nose ring, of the murdered girl's missing ornaments. The chalan was prepared on the 24th October and on Monday the 26th idem the appellant was placed before the Committing Magistrate. The investigation was thus completed with exceptional despatch, a circumstance which tells very strongly, if not conclusively, against any theory that evidence was fabricated. We would also observe that the Kotwar Kisnia, who was the appellant's uncle and lived on the same premises as the appellant's father, would in all probability have named Tima as the murderer in the first information had Bakia and Damia denounced him as the appellant now asserts.

Looked at in the light of these considerations, the evidence of Bahini's parents Dina (P. W. No. 4) and Jhega (P. W. No. 5), her sister, Maini (P. W. No. 6) and the little girl Sokri (P. W. No. 7) satisfies us that the appellant seized a favourable opportunity of taking Bahini to the jungle on the pretext of giving her sitaphal from the trees of which his family had a theka, and that he turned Jhega back from the jungle on her going thither in search of the child. He was staying for Diwali, then just over, with his father Yeshwantia, whose premises have an entrance opposite to and only a few paces from that of Dina's compound. The Sessions Judge writes that Sokri answered his questions fairly intelligently and that Jhega is a simple woman. Nor is there any suggestion that either Dina or Jhega has anything to gain by falsely accusing the appellant, who indeed appears to have been on friendly terms with the family. The appellant denies that he went to Dina's house at all on the 22nd October, just as he denies that he went with Babini to the jungle and gave up her ornaments. To the Committing Magistrate he said he went to the jungle early that morning to watch the sitaphal crop which was already ripe, while in this Court he declared that he must have been back at home at the time the murder seems to have been committed: both of these statements, if true, might surely have been supported by evidence, especially as a next door neighbour would be likely to show himself or be referred to as soon as active inquiry for the missing child began to be made.

With regard to Tima, we think like the Sessions Judge that no sufficient reason for disbelieving him appears. It is not likely that Babini found her way to the jungle alone or that a man and a child going there towards noon would meet or see nobody en route. Tima was asked in cross-examination about Sonia, and this is what he said:—

"Sonia Dhimar is my castefellow. He had not made any gestures calling the accused's wife and I had no quarrel with Ramji on that account."

There remains the evidence that after being arrested the appellant undertook to give up the murdered girl's ornaments and did in fact produce all but two from a faggot of hemp-twigs in his father's compound. In this Court the appellant says that the Police searched the compound and so found the ornaments without any help or disclosure from him. In this connection it is essential to bear in mind that the investigation began in the jungle, a mile from the abadi, and that the appellant was arrested in the jungle. The Circle Inspector having on the strength of a comparison between the appellant's footprints and those found in the jungle pronounced his guilt clear and undertaken to trace the stolen property in a similar way, the appellant may well have thought further concealment useless. Our experience leads us to believe that such an attitude of mind is common among ignorant criminals confronted with evidence of their guilt on the very scene of their crime. Nor can we find sufficient reason for doubting the testimony of Abdul Rashid (P. W. No. 10), malguzar of the neighbouring village Tiddi, to say nothing of Ramji (P. W. No. 11), mukaddam-gomashta of Sangam Sub-Inspector Chunnilal (P. W. No. 1) and Circle Inspector Rachpal Singh (P. W. No. 9). No doubt there are discrepancies as to the entrance by which the Police got into Yeshwantia's premises and whether, while still in the jungle, the appellant did or did not mention the faggot of hemp-twigs as the place where the ornaments were concealed. The former may be due to some members of the party entering one way and the rest by the other. As to the latter Ramji is the witness who said that the appellant described the place of concealment before going to the dense, and his memory seems to be hazy on the point, for he said:—

"When the darogha came the accused said 'the ornaments are not here, I will give them, they are at home.' There he did not say that the ornaments were kept in the sankaris. No he did say there that the ornaments were in the sankaris. He said so within the hearing of the malguzar of Tiddi."

The ornaments found in Yeshwantia's compound are clearly proved to be Babini's. If they were put there by some one other than the appellant, that other must have been the murderer, and we altogether fail to understand why, when so strong a case had been made out against the appellant he should have sacrificed so large a part of the booty. Having given all the evidence our careful consideration we consider it established beyond reasonable doubt that the appellant is himself the murderer. We do not agree with the Sessions Judge that recent possession of property taken by murder can show no more than that the possessor was either the thief or the dishonest receiver. This is manifestly a case in which murder and robbery formed part of one transaction and in such it has been held that recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property, while it would be presumptive evidence against a prisoner on the charge of robbery, would similarly be evidence against him on the charge of murder: see Queen Empress v. Sami (1). The murder was a peculiarly cold-blooded and sordid crime and we find no sort of justification for declining to confirm the sentence of death passed by the Sessions Judge. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

HIS HOLINESS SRI VANAMAMALAI RAMANUJAR JEER SWAMIGAL OF VANAMAMALAI MUTT, NANGUNERI—PETITIONER IN C. R. C. No. 318.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 435 – Government of India Act (5 & 6 Geo. V, C. 61), s. 107—Order under s. 144, whether can be revised—High Court, power of interference of, when exercised—Order, construction of—Presumption—Duration of order—Order, whether might be addressed to public generally.

An order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not fall within the scope of section 435 of the Code and can only be revised in virtue of the jurisdiction conferred on the High Court by section 107 of the Government of India Act. But it is only in very rare cases that the High Court will interfere under that section, even where there is a question of jurisdiction; if there is no question of jurisdiction, it would interfere only if very great miscarriage of justice would otherwise result. [p. 484, col. 1 p. 488, col. 1.]

In construing a judicial order it is an elementary principle that such construction must, if possible, be adopted as would make the order one in accordance with law, and not an order such as the Court making it had no power to pass [p. 485, col. 1; p 487, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, an order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code specifies no time during which it is to be in force, the reasonable presumption is that the order would operate for two months and not for an indefinite time. [p 485, col. 1; p. 487, col. 2]

Under clause (3) of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code an order may be directed to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place, but it cannot be directed to the public indefinitely. An order addressed to "all and sundry" frequenting or visiting a particular temple merely means "all and sundry persons who frequent or visit that temple during the course of the two months next following the order." [p. 485, col. 1; p. 487, col. 2.]

Petitions purporting to be put in under sections 144, 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Magistrate, Tinnevelly, dated the 2nd June 1919, in P. C. No. 383 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and T. R Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Petitioners.—The order of the District Magistrate is in contravention of the terms of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. There is no time limit to the order. Under the section the order can enure only for two months. The order looks more like a permanent injunction.

The order is addressed to "all and sundry" and to Jeers and Swamigals who are not parties to the proceedings. It should be restricted to the public resorting to a certain definite place.

The Magistrate had no power to criticise the judgment of the High Court in Athan Sadagopa Chariar Swamigal v. Eliavalli Srinivasa Chariar (1) as to the rights to honours and to have enjoined on the observance of the opinion of the Devastanam Committee.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, L. A. Govindaragava Iyer and N. S Ramasawmi Iyengar, for the Counter-Petitioners, and the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The order is one that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass. It was besides passed in the interest of public peace. The High Court will only interfere when the order has been passed wholly without jurisdiction or a gross miscarriage of justice has resulted from it.

PONNAPPA AIYANGAR v. SRI VANAMAMALAI.

The non mention of the time for which the order was to be in force does not vitiate it. It must be presumed that it was to operate for the period for which the Magistrate was legally competent to pass the order.

The direction to "all and sundry" should be understood as referring to all and sundary visiting the particular temple at Alwarthirunagari.

ORDER.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—These are two revision petitions, one Criminal Revision Case No. 318 of 1919 presented by the Vanamamalai Jeer, head of the Sri Vanammalai Mutt at Nanguneri, and the other Criminal Revision Case No. 317 of 1919 by three of the seven trustees of the famous temple of Audinatha Swami at Alwar Tirunagari.

The petitions are directed against the order of the District Magistrate of Tinnevelly prohibiting (under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code) the petitioners from doing certain acts.

The directions in the order are (a) that "all and sundry shall follow the conclusion arrived at by the Vishnu Devastanam Committee in their Resolution No. 1 of 1919 in Paragraph 1X (a) thereof, (b) that no other Jeer Swamigal shall receive honours other than those paid to ordinary devotees on any day on which the said resolution lays down that one particular Jeer Swamigal shall receive "special plenary honours," (c) that counter-petitioners Nos. 1 to 7 shall not give such honours to any such other Jeer Swamigal.

This order of the District Magistrate was passed on 2nd June 1919. Under clause 5 of section 144, it would cease to remain in force on the 2nd August 1919, that is, to-morrow.

Under section 435, clause (3), Criminal Procedure Code, an order passed under section 144 does not fall within section 435. To revise such an order this Court has to resort, not to the Criminal Procedure Code, but to section 107 of the Government of India Act. I need not say that even where there is a question of jurisdiction, it is only very rarely that this Court interferes under section 107 of the Government of India Act with the order of an inferior Court, whether criminal or civil, and if there is no question of jurisdiction it would interfere only if very great miscarriage of justice would otherwise result. Palani Chetty v. Rathina Chetty (2).

I do not think it necessary, therefore, to set out the 21 grounds for revision urged in the two revision petitions taken together. Mr. Rangachariar for the Varamamalai Jeer argued the following points:—

(1) The order in question is in the nature of a permanent injunction prohibiting a series of acts or a course of conduct for an indefinite time and in passing such an order, the Magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction.

(2) The order is illegal and without jurisdiction in that it purports to be issued to all and sundry and to Jeers and Swamigals who are not parties to the proceedings and is not restricted to persons or to the public resorting to a certain definite place.

(3) The order is very unjust and contains glaring errors and grave irregularities, (a) as it ignores the decision of the High Court in Athan Sadagopa Chariar Swamigal v. Eliavalli Srinivasa Chariar (1) as to the rights of certain of the parties, (b) as it adopts the opinion of the Devastanam Committee which was against the decision of the High Court, the Committee also having no competency to interfere with questions of honours and rituals in the temple or to give directions to the trustees in such matters, and (c) as it directs the petitioner to receive even "ordinary" honours along with "ordinary" devotees and not in accordance with the order of the precedence mentioned in the High Court judgment or even in the Committee's proceedings.

As regards ground No. 1 the order of the District Magistrate is not expressly confined to the period of two months from its promulgation and by its reference to the Vishnu Devastanam Committee's Resolution No. 1 of 1919, lends colour to the contention that it (the District Magistrate's order) was intended by the Magistrate to be enforced for an indefinite time just as the Resolution of the Devastanam Committee, Exhibit F, dated 19th January 1919, was passed by it intending that order to be enforced for an indefinite time.

After some hesitation, I think that this objection cannot be allowed to prevail. As

(2) 24 Ind. Cas. 597; 26 M. L. J. 208; (1914) M. W. N. 352; 15 Cr. L. J. 509.

Mr. Justice Mookerjee says in Ram Nath v. Emperor (3): "It is an elementary principle of construction that where a judicial order is to be interpreted, such construction must, if possible, be adopted as would make the order one in accordance with law and not an order such as the Court making it had no power to pass."* * * * "If no time is specified, the reasonable presumption is that the Court intended to pass an order which it was competent to pass and which would operate for two months, and not to pass an order which would be beyond its statutory powers and consequently void." The District Magistrate's reference to the proceedings of the Devastanam Committee were, it must be admitted, unhappy, but I do not think that he thereby intended to make "all and sundry" follow the conclusions of the Vishnu Devastanam Committee for more than two months, though the Devastanam Committee itself intended the trustees and the Jeers to follow their conclusions for an indefinite time. While making it clear, therefore, that the order would last only for two months and must have been intended by the District Magistrate to last only for two months, I shall reject the first contention of the petitioners.

Coming to the second contention, here again the learned District Magistrate would have done better to have qualified the expression "all and sundry" found in his order. Under clause 3 of section 144, the order may be directed to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place, but it cannot be directed to the public indefinitely. Having regard, however, again to the considerations mentioned by Mookerjee, J., in Ram Nath v. Emperor (3) already referred to, I do not think that I would be straining the language of the Magistrate's order (having regard to its context) if I hold that he meant by the words "all and sundry" to convey merely "all and sundry persons who frequent or visit the Audinathaswami Temple at Alwarthirunagari during the course of the two months next following his order." I, therefore, overrule this second contention also.

Lastly, I shall say a few words as regards the third and last contention. This contention attacks the justice, legality and propriety of the District Magistrate's conclusions. This is, of course, not a ground for interference under section 107 of the Government of India Act save in very exceptional cases. I am not inclined to treat this as an exceptional case, as I have no sympathy with any one claiming so-called honours in a temple of God. The District Magistrate speaks of "honours shown at the hands of deity of the temple" and it is also usual to speak of such "honours." In this case, not only is the expression "honours" used but also the expression "special plenary honours". That favours to be received from the Omnipotent out of His Grace should be spoken of and litigated as "honours" and "rights" shows how the very high spiritual ideas have been brought down and degraded to the lowest material depths. In fact, to claim or receive "honours" in the house of God is one of the 32 serious sins (like entertaining angry or envious feelings in the temple of God which a person who enters a temple should avoid scrupulously, as pointed out by the great Sridhara Swami in his commentaries on the Srimat Baghavatham and as laid down also in the Puranas and the Sastras). Fortunately "honours" as such have been held not to be the proper subject-matter of a civil suit, and I am not going to enter into such questions elaborately in this criminal case rather or in the case involving the quasi administrative action of the District Magistrate responsible for the peace of the District. Further, the so-called "honours" are claimed principally on behalf of the person who, though now popularly acknowledged to belong to the fourth order of Sanyasis, ought to have, according to the true definition and characteristic of Sanyasi, give up all claims not only to properties but also to "honours" though, of course, it is the duty of secular men to show honour to real Sanyasis (see the 13th Chapter of the 7th Skandam, Slokas 1 to 10, and Chapter 18 of the 11th Skandam, Slokas 15 to 25, as to the duties and actions of real Sanyasis). However, Matathipathis who are trustees of large properties, who hanker after the increase of Sishyas (which a Sanyasi of the old kind ought not to do according to the Shastras), who ride on palanquins and are accompanied by large pomp and ceremony and claim "honours" have now come under the modern signification of the term "Sanyasi." I do not think, however, that this Court is, therefore, bound to consider the so-called rights of such Sanyasis to receive honours in temples as of such very great importance as to justify the employment of its time in deciding such rights, unless it is bound to do so, as sometimes unfortunately happens in civil suits.

As the questions considered by the District Magistrate are, however, likely to arise again owing to the incurable litigiousness and fantical spirit of some of the parties to these proceedings, I think it desirable to say a few words for the future guidance of the Magistracy.

The learned District Magistrate, as I said already, might have made his order more clear as regards the time, place and individuals to be affected by his order.

He should also not have accepted the Devastanam Committee's views as if they were views of a body competent to regulate the internal management of festivals in the temple. The scope of the powers of a Committee has been defined in Sundararama Sastri v. Anantha Krishna Naidu (4), and some of the members of the Vishnu Devastanam Committee seem to have gone out of their way to exercise their subtle legal ingenuity for laying down rules as to the conduct of trustees in the internal management of the temple festivals. They had no jurisdiction to do so. The Committee and even the District Magistrate have further attempted the useless task of deciding whether the finding of the High Court on the admissions made and arguments advanced before them, namely, that the petitioner Vanamamalai Jeer has precedence as regards the receipt of Theertham over the 9th counter-petitioner, the Emperumannar Jeer, could be supported by the evidence in that case. That finding is binding as between the petitioner and the 9th counter-petitioner and neither the officious Temple Committee nor the learned District Magistrate could with propriety have gone behind that finding. The learned District Magistrate would have done well if he had not referred to the Committee's opinion of the respective rights of the petitioner and the 7th counter petitioner and if he had accepted the finding of the High Court. If, of course, he considered that the enforcement of the petitioner's right even as found by the High Court against the 9th counter-petitioner was likely to create a breach of the peace at the ensuing festival, he might be (as a matter of emergency and if he had not the necessary Police force or other means of enforcing the petitioner's rights) entitled to pass an order prohibiting temporarily the exercise of such rights.

In paragraphs 23 and 30 of the annexure to his order, the District Magistrate was inclined to doubt the powers of the Committee to interfere with the discretion of the trustees and he also concedes that the appointment of two trustees by the Committee in addition to the already existing five trustees (in order to create a majority of trustees willing to obey the Committee) may have been a clever move on their part. Three out of the 5 Committee members wanted to destroy the powers of the three out of the five trustees of the temple and so by a bare majority they appointed two more trustees in order that 4 out of 7 trustees might support the Committee, or rather the bare majority of the Committee.

Lastly, the order is a little ambiguous as to whether even ordinary honours should be received by the petitioner and other Jeers only along with or like the ordinary devotees on the festival day in which a particular Jeer Swamigal has to receive "special plenary honours." If it means that it is opposed to the judgment, of the High Court and even to the contentions of all the parties before us. The precedence, so far as Theertham is concerned, must be observed according to mamool and so far as the petitioner and the 9th counter petitioner are concerned, their respective rights of precedence according to mamool have been fixed by the High Court in its judgment in Athan Sadagopa Chariar Swamigal v. Eliavalli Srinivasa Chariar (1). Whether "ordinary honours" include, so far as the petitioner is concerned, Arulippadu, Idukku Tholasi, Parivattam and Malai (besides the Theertham to which is usually attached only the ordinary Tholasi and Parivattam) is a question which I do not propose to consider. But that Theertham should be given to him in precedence over the 9th counter-petitioner and over ordinary Sanyasis and over ordinary devotees is clear from the judgment of the High Court, and this should be kept in mind by the Magistracy on future occasions. With these remarks I dismiss these petitions.

OLDFIELD, J.—These are two revision petitions presented respectively by three of the Trustees of the Audhinathaswami Temple and by the Vanamamalai Jeer Swamigal of Nanguneri. They seek to set aside the order issued by the District Magistrate of Tinnevelly on 2nd June 1919 under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. The order dated 2nd June 1919 is as follows:—

"Whereas it has been made to appear to me from the various petitions and statements put in before me that such an order or direction is likely to prevent injury to persons lawfully employed, danger to human safety and a disturbance of the public tranquillity owing to the fact that on the occasion of the ensuing Vaikasi festival in the Audinathaswami Temple at Alwarthirunagari, certain Madathipathies (Jeer Swamigals) intend to be present at the same time and on the same days and are clearly in dispute themselves and their adherents regarding the honours which should be shown to them at the hands of the deity of that temple, I hereby order and direct under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, that "all and sundry" shall follow the conclusions arrived at by the Vishnu Devastanam Committee in their Resolution No. 1 of 1919 in paragraph 9 (a) thereof.

"And especially do I prohibit any other Jeer Swamigal from receiving or attempting to receive honours other than those paid to ordinary devotees on any day or days on which the said Resolution lays down that one particular Jeer Swamigal shall receive 'special plenary honours' and prohibit counter-petitioners Nos. 1 to 7 from giving or attempting to give such honours to any such other Jeer Swamigal."

The objections taken to it are:—1. That there is no time limit and the order is, therefore, a permanent injunction.

2. It is addressed to "all and sundry" and it is not directed to a particular individual or to the public in general when frequenting or visiting a public place.

3. The order traverses the decision of the High Court as to the rights of the Jeers inter se.

4. It supports the Committee as against the High Court's decision.

5. It directs the petitioner (inter alia) to receive only honours paid to ordinary devotees on any day other than those in which he is entitled to "special plenary honours." This again is in contravention of the decision of the High Court in the case referred to.

With regard to (1) above, though an order in the nature of a perpetual injunction is unlawful, Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhrani (5), it has been held that such an order need not state that its operation is confined to two months, nor is it bad unless there is something to show that it was intended to remain in force for more than two months: Ram Nath v. Emperor (3). As pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in this case, the presumption must be that the Court intends to pass such an order as it might pass legally. It is further to be noted that the order in question contains the words "on the occasion of the ensuing Vaikasi festival in the Audinathaswami Temple at Alwarthirunagari." I, therefore, think that the first contention fails and that the order is not bad for being in the nature of a perpetual injunction. Though the order is in terms addressed to "all and sundry" I think, read in their context, these words are really addressed to the public frequenting a particular place at a particular time, i.e., attending the Audinathaswami Temple on the occasion of Vikasi festival. 3 and 4.—The privileges and order of precedence among some of the competing Jeers at these festivals were decided by the High Court in Appeals Nos. 105, 70 and 106 of 1919; see Athan Sadagopa Chariar Swamigal v. Elangavalli Srinivasa Chariar (1). The learned District Magistrate has annexed to his order a long statement in which he analyses the judgment of this Court and directs that a certain resolution of the Temple Committee shall be obeyed. It is objected by the petitioners that this resolution contravenes the judgment of this Court and has been passed by a packed majority of the Committee.

With regard to other grounds, I have had the benefit of reading my learned brother's judgment and I have nothing to add to his remarks on these points. I agree that it is extremely unfortunate, to say the least of it, that the learned District Magistrate allowed himself to be led into a discussion of the High Court's judgment in a case of this sort.

If the learned District Magistrate means that the Jeers, if they attend on ordinary days, (i. e., days on which they are not entitled to special honours) are entitled only to honours received by the ordinary members of the congregation, he is clearly wrong as the Theerthams and the order of their distribution is settled, so far as the petitioners are concerned, by the judgment in the High Court appeals.

The learned District Magistrate was, therefore, again unfortunate in the expression "ordinary devotees" as it is admitted by all parties before us that it cannot mean what it says with reference to the Jeers.

I am, therefore, of opinion that it cannot be said that the order in question was passed without jurisdiction, nor am I prepared to hold that the fact that the learned District Magistrate was led into the examination of the judgment of this Court and from that to enjoin obedience to the Committee's resolution would invalidate the order. It cannot, in my opinion, be said that the order was passed without jurisdiction, and the Court will usually decline to interfere unless the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction [Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja (6)] or there has been a gross miscarriage of justice [Palani Chetty v. Rathina Chetty (2)]. It has been contended that any such injustice has in fact resulted from the order, which will lapse automatically at the end of this week, viz., on the 2nd August. I, therefore, concur with the order proposed by my learned brother and would dismiss both petitions.

Petitions dismissed.

An accused person is entitled to know what he is being charged with. [p. 489, col. 1.]

Where a person is constructively made liable for the acts of another under section 147, Indian Penal Code, it is especially necessary to set out in the charge the common object of the assembly. But if the absence of particulars regarding the common object does not prejudice the accused in their defence, the irregularity would be cured by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the High Court will not interfere. [p. 489, col. 1.]

Behari Mahton v. Queen-Empress, 11 C. 106; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. s) 829, relied on.

In dealing with a case under section 147, Penal Code, an Appellate Court is expressly empowered to pass an order under section 106 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code requiring security to keep the peace from the appellants. The making of such an order does not amount to enhancing the sentence. [p. 489, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the judgment, dated 10th March 1917, of the Sessions Judge, Raipur.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application by Maharaj Singh for revision of a sentence passed under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code and upheld on appeal by the Sessions Judge, Chhattisgarh Division. The first point urged before me is that the conviction is bad inasmuch as the charge did not set out the common object of the unlawful assembly. According to the findings arrived at by the Courts below, the common object was to assault the complainant Baliram for reasons which are given in those judgments. The learned Sessions Judge has rightly held that the absence of particulars regarding the common object did not prejudice the accused in their defence. In other words, they knew from the prosecution evidence what was being made out against them. The finding is that Maharaj Singh was the ring-leader of the party opposed to the complainant and took an actual part in the riot by ordering the accused to beat the complainant. There are three other petitions before me, and I may mention that none of these people have been, in any way, prejudiced in their defence. They also seem to be active participants in the assault and not merely persons present at an unlawful assembly.

The cases cited before me can be distinguished easily. Behari Mahton v. Queen-Empress (1) lays down a sound rule that an accused person is entitled to know clearly what he is being charged with, and where a person is constructively made liable for the acts of another, it is especially necessary to set out in the charge the common object of the assembly. I am prepared to concede that there are cases and there may be cases where an accused person is seriously prejudiced if the charge is defective. In the present case, however, nothing of the kind has happened. Sabir v. Queen-Empress (2) is a case of a trial by Jury, and it was held that where a Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury referred to two possible common objects of an unlawful assembly, one of which only had been set out in the charge, it was impossible to say which view had been accepted by the Jury. The case cannot apply here where there was no trial by Jury. Lastly Poresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (3) is relied upon for the applicant. The facts of the case were somewhat peculiar. The petitioners before the High Court had been already put in possession of some land in certain proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and it was not clear whether the dispute related according to the charge to the land so put in possession or to the land excluded from the order of the Magistrate. I hold that section 537 cures the irregularity. It is urged that the accused should not have been called upon to pay costs for recalling prosecution witnesses for examination. This is admitted by the learned Sessions Judge to be correct, but he points out, the reason for giving up Dukalu was not the demand for costs, but the fact that several attempts were made to have him summoned and he could not be got. This is a complete answer to this ground.

It is urged that the learned Sessions Judge has practically enhanced the sentence by passing an order under section 106 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code requiring security to keep the peace from the applicants. No authority in support of this view has been cited nor do I know of any. It is a power expressly conferred on an Appellate Court. On the merits of the order, I can find no ground for interference, especially as the security has been furnished as I understand.

On the merits of the case the learned Sessions Judge has very carefully gone into the evidence and has arrived at conclusions which are unassailable in revision. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 135, 138, 139—"Magistrate" in s. 139 (1), meaning of—Jury, appointment of—Verdict—Disposal of case by Second Class Magistrate after verdict, transfer for—Jurisdiction of First Class Magistrate appointing Jury.

The words "the Magistrate" in section 139 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, refer to the Magistrate to whom application has to be made under section 135 (b) to empanel a Jury and who, under section 138 of the Code, does so empanel one. [p. 490, col. 2.]

A Magistrate who sends a notice under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code and directs a party to appear before another Magistrate is alone competent to deal with the matter on receiving the verdict of the Jury empanelled under section 138 and cannot transfer it for disposal by a Second Class Magistrate. [p. 490, col. 1.]

ANAGAPPA MUDALI v. RAMAPORAM PERUMAL CHETTY.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Sankari, dated the 21st February 1919, in Miscellaneous Case No. 9 of 1919.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor and Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Counter-Petitioners

ORDER.—The First Class Magistrate of Sankari passed orders under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the counter petitioners not to work a cotton ginning factory during nights or to appear before the Second Class Magistrate, Trichengode, on the 25th March 1918 and move to have the order set aside or modified.

The counter petitioners applied under section 135 to the First Class Magistrate to appoint a Jury, and a Jury was empanelled under section 138 who sent their verdict to the Magistrate. The records were then sent by the First Class Magistrate to the Second Class Magistrate for disposal. The petitioners objected to the order on the ground that the Second Class Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter after the verdict of the Jury, but their objection was overruled. Hence this revision petition.

The question for decision is whether a Magistrate who sends a notice under section 133 and directs a party to appear before another Magistrate is competent to deal with the matter on receiving the verdict of the Jury empanelled under section 138. The case is one of first impression and agreeing with the contention of the Public Prosecutor, I am of opinion that the First Class Magistrate has jurisdiction.

Section 135 enables a party to obey the order or either to show cause or to apply to the Magistrate by whom the order was passed to appoint a Jury to try whether the order is reasonable and proper. Section 138 empowers the Magistrate who passed the order to empanel a Jury and he is given power to fix a date for the return of their verdict and to extend the time so granted. Form 17 of Schedule V of the Code requires that the verdict should be sent to the Magistrate who passed the order, and not to the Magistrate before whom the Magistrate passing the order directs the counter-petitioner to show cause under clause (1) of section 133.

Section 139 enacts that if the Jury or the majority of the Jurors finds that the order of the Magistrate was reasonable and proper or subjects it to a modification which the Magistrate accepts, the Magistrate shall make the order absolute. In other cases the proceedings are to be dropped.

Reading these sections, it seems to me that in all cases when the counter petitioner elects to leave the matter to the decision of a Jury, the case has to be disposed of by the Magistrate who passed the order under section 133.

If the effect of passing an order directing the counter petitioner to show cause before some other Magistrate is to transfer all further proceedings to such Magistrate and to divest the Magistrate who passed the order of all jurisdiction, it is difficult to see why the application under section 135, clause (b), or the duty of empanelling a Jury under section 138 should be cast on the Magistrate who passed the order or why the verdict should be submitted to him and not to the other Magistrate.

It has been argued for the counter-petitioners that the duty of appointing Jurors is so important that the Legislature did not want it to be performed by a Second Class Magistrate. but it should be observed that under section 133 the accused may be directed to show cause before another First Class Magistrate and that no exception is made in such cases. It is also difficult to see how the act of calling together a Jury is more important than the decision as to whether the verdict of the Jury is proper or the acceptance of any modification by them. If the latter duties can be performed by the Second Class Magistrate, there is no reason why he should not empanel the Jury whose verdict he has power to dispose of.

I am of opinion that the words "the Magistrate" in section 139, clause (1), refer to the Magistrate to whom application has to be made under section 135, clause (b), to empanel a Jury and who under section 138 does so.

I set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that the application be disposed of according to law.

Order set aside.

PATIA CHAMAR—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 259—Warrant case—Charge framed—Complainant, absence of—Dismissal and acquittal, legality of.

It is no part of a complainant's duty to call any witness for cross-examination or any other purpose of the defence once a charge is framed, and section 259 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives no power to the Court to dismiss a warrant case in default after a charge has been framed.

An acquittal cannot be based on a dismissal in default.

Criminal revision on a report by the Sessions Judge, Raipur, against order, dated the 10th November 1916, passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mungeli, Bilaspur District, in Criminal Case No. 89 of 1916.

ORDER.—This case has been reported by the Sessions Judge. One Rai Singh prosecuted one Patia under section 497, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Mungeli in the Bilaspur District. Process was issued against the accused on the 3rd October 1916, and on the 23rd of the same month, having taken all the evidence for the prosecution the Magistrate framed a charge against the accused, and fixed the 10th November 1916 for hearing the defence. On this day the order sheet sets out the procedure of the Magistrate in these words:—

"The complainant appeared before me 15 minutes ago and went away from the Court saying he would fetch his Pleader without caring to obtain my permission to do so. I will wait 10 minutes more.

(Sd.) N. K. HARDAS.

The complainant has not turned up though I waited for him sufficiently long. It has been found that the complainant did not take steps to recall his witnesses for being cross-examined. This default is fatal to the prosecution. The case is, therefore, dismissed and the accused acquitted.

(Sd). N. K. HARDAS,
Sub-Divisional Magistrate."

It is disappointing to find a Sub-Divisional Magistrate falling into childish errors of the kind here disclosed. It was no part of the complainant's duty to call any witness for cross-examination or any other purpose of the defence once the charge was framed. Section 259 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives no power to dismiss a warrant case in default after a charge has been framed. Nor does it need any citation of the authorities referred to by the learned Sessions Judge to perceive that an acquittal cannot be based on a dismissal in default.

The order dismissing the case is set aside, and the Magistrate concerned, or his successor or other Magistrate appointed by the District Magistrate is directed to resume the case from the point at which the above illegal order stopped it, subject to the provisions of section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, and to dispose of the same according to law.

Order set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 633 OF 1918.

(CASE REFERRED No. 56 OF 1918.)

April 7, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim.

In re KAVATHAM PATTURAJU AND OTHERS—ACCUSED Nos. 1 TO 10.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 112, 113, 115, 117, 118—Proceedings under s. 112 not drawn up—Service on accused, failure of, effect of—Order under s. 118, validity of.

The fact that no proceedings are drawn up under section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code at the time summonses are issued, and, therefore, no copy thereof is served under section 115 of the Code upon the accused, would not invalidate an order passed under section 118 of the Code, if, before the passing of such order, the proceedings required by section 112 are drawn up in the presence of the accused and are read out and explained to him, and due inquiry is held. [p. 492, cols. 1 & 2.]

Case referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the District Magistrate, Guntur, in his letter dated the 19th September 1918.

EMPEROR v. SETH JIWANDAS.

ORDER.—Two questions arise upon this reference of the District Magistrate of Guntur, firstly, is the order passed under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code liable to be set aside, as no proceeding drawn up according to section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code was served on the accused persons along with the summons, as laid down in section 115 of the Criminal Procedure Code? What happened was the Sub-Divisional Magistrate first issued summonses and when the accused were present in Court, he drew up proceedings as required by section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code and read them out and explained them to the accused. Then he fixed the case for the next day for hearing the evidence. The question is whether the fact that no proceedings had been drawn up at the time the summonses were issued and, therefore, no copy of the proceedings required under section 112 served under section 115, is sufficient to invalidate the order subsequently passed after due enquiry. The learned District Magistrate relies upon a ruling of Subrahmania Ayyar, J., in Subba Naicken, In re (1). No doubt there is a passage in that judgment to this effect: "The requisition contained in section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code with reference to the notice being accompanied by a copy of the order has not been complied with, and so far as I can judge from the record, it does not appear that any order was made prior to issuing the notice. This itself would, in my opinion, invalidate the whole proceeding. But there are still other defects." Then the learned Judge points out that there was no enquiry held as required by the Code and set aside the order requiring security. It does not appear whether in the case in Subba Naicken, In re (1) any proceeding in accordance with section 112 was drawn up. In this case there was a proceeding properly drawn up when the accused were brought into Court, and the order was then and there read out to them and the substance thereof was explained to them. Section 113 provides that if a person in respect of whom such order (meaning an order under section 112) is made is present in Court, it shall be read over to him or, if he so desires, the substance thereof shall be explained to him. I do not then see why there should be any difference in the validity of the order by reason of the fact that the person against whom proceedings under section 112 were drawn up and to whom they were read out and explained under section 113 had been brought into Court on summons issued under the provisions of this Chapter (Chapter VIII). What was done in this case could not be said to be altogether unwarranted by the Code because section 183 provides for it. I think, therefore, that this case can be distinguished from that reported as Subla Naicken, In re (1).

The District Magistrate also points out that a number of persons were joined in the enquiry. According to the evidence they were jointly concerned in the matter which gave rise to the proceedings. That being so, clause 4 of section 117, Criminal Procedure Code, authorised the Magistrate to hold an enquiry into the cases of all those persons together. There is no sufficient reason, therefore, for setting aside the order under section 118 in this case.

EMPEROR v. SETH JIWANDAS.

It is inadvisable to interfere in a pending case unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent from the face of the proceedings and calling for prompt redress. [p. 493, col. 2.]

Criminal revision on report by the Sessions Judge, Jubbulpur, under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, of order, dated the 15th March 1917, of Magistrate, First Class, Jubbulpur.

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose, Messrs. M. Gupta and M. K. Gowalkar, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—This case has been reported by the Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the applicant has been allowed to appear in support of the reference. The accused, Rao Bahadur Seth Jiwandas, is under trial on a complaint laid under the sanction of the Municipal President by one Ilahibux, Sanitary Sub-Inspector. He is accused of contravening a bye-law framed under section 105 (j) of the Municipal Act. The particular bye law said to have been broken is No. 2 of those confirmed by the Hon'ble the Chief Commissioner in his Notification No. 3155 of the 13th March 1905. Jiwandas is accused of allowing some sixty persons to occupy the servants quarter's in bungalow No. 31, now being rebuilt, in contravention of the bye-law that "such quarters shall only be occupied by bona fide servants of the occupier of the bungalow and the families of such servants." Objections were taken in the Magistrate's Court that the Sanitary Sub Inspector had no power under the Municipal Law to lodge the complaint and that the bye law in question was ultra vires. On these being disallowed, Jiwandas applied to the Sessions Judge for revision with the result that the case has been reported on the ground that the proceedings are bad because instituted by a person without authority. The Sessions Judge also holds that the bye law is ultra vires if passed under section 105 (j) of the Municipal Act, though possibly it might have been framed under section 105 (s) of that Act.

There is no doubt that this Court can interfere with interlocutory orders: see Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (1), Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (2), Kuppusami Aiyar, In re (3), Queen-Empress v. Nageshappa Pai (4) and Hari Charan Gorai v. Srish Chandra Sadhukhan (5). But the power is to be exercised with great care and only in most exceptional cases: Inamulla v. King-Emperor (6), and it is inadvisable to interfere "in a pending case unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent from the face of the proceedings and calling for prompt redress:" Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (2). It seems to me that the present is not a case for interference at an intermediate stage. The applicant has, beside the two legal questions, raised other defences, namely, that the bye law, which is supposed to have been infringed and under which the complaint is lodged, has no application to the facts and circumstances of the case and that as there is no bungalow now in existence to which the buildings mentioned in the complaint could be said to have been attached as servants' houses, they are not servants' quarters. He denies that the buildings were crowded and states that they had only been occupied by the Sub-Registrar with his family and his own servants. It is further contended that the prosecution is not bona fide but in retaliation for the accused having complained against the misuse of the Raja Gokuldas Dharamsala by Municipal servants.

The defence evidence is yet to be recorded and until that is recorded, it is impossible to say whether the case will result in a conviction. The accused has been allowed to appear by Pleader except on the day on which he was examined. He is, therefore, being put to no personal inconvenience and as the punishment for the offence he is accused of is but a fine of Rs. 50, it is not as if there is any danger of his going to jail in place of paying it. It cannot be said that in the present case delay will be injurious.

Whether the Sanitary Sub Inspector had not power to file the complaint is a matter that can well await the conclusion of the trial and though the question whether the bye law is ultra vires is doubtless one of great importance, I do not see why the Municipal Committee should be put to the expense of showing in this Court that it is valid until the question is raised by a person who has been convicted under it.

The case is one which, in my opinion, should not have been reported and I decline to interfere at this stage of the trial. The record to be returned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (7) —Court of Subordinate Judge, whether subordinate to District Judge.

The Court of the Subordinate Judge must, for the purposes of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be held to be subordinate only to the Court of the District Judge.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. N. Ohak, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for sanction to prosecute one Sajjad Ali Khan for an offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. The application has been made in respect of certain evidence given by the said Sajjad Ali Khan in Civil Suit No. 65 of 1914, which was decided by the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow on the 9th of April 1915. An appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge was preferred to this Court and the case was finally decided by this Court on the 7th of November 1918.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no application for sanction under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lies to this Court. In our opinion this objection must prevail. Sub section (1) (b) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under section 193 when such offence is committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. The proceedings in which or in relation to which the offence under section 193 is alleged to have been committed took place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and the question is whether for the purpose of section 195 the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge is subordinate to this Court. Sub section 7 of section 195 provides that "for the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say, (a) where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate." Appeals from the Court of the Subordinate Judge lie both to the Court of the District Judge and to this Court and it follows, therefore, from the provisions of clause (a) of sub section 7 of section 195 that the Court of the Subordinate Judge must, for the purposes of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, be held to be subordinate only to the Court of the District Judge. The applicant may, if he is so advised, apply for sanction either to the Court of the Subordinate Judge or to the Court of the District Judge. We would, however, note that there has been very serious delay in making the application and that unless such delay can be satisfactorily explained, no sanction should now be given.

This application is rejected. We make no order as to costs.

The accused, two in number, who were incensed against the deceased, committed a brutal assault upon the latter who was defenceless and unarmed, and caused his death:

Held, that the accused were guilty of murder. [p. 496, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Basti.

JUDGMENT.—Sheoharakh Kurmi, resident of Kobra, aged 25, and Gharib Kurmi, resident of the same village, aged 40, were placed on their trial before the Sessions Court of Basti on a charge framed under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge before trial charged the accused under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and called upon the accused to plead to the amended charge. The accused pleaded not guilty to the charge. The learned Sessions Judge has gone very carefully into the evidence before him and has delivered what may be called a very well-balanced judgment. The evidence before the learned Judge was so far believed both by him and the Assessors that they came unhesitatingly to the conclusion that the accused, who are now appealing, were partakers in the assault upon Ram Baran. The Assessors give it as their opinion that they were sure that the accused took part in the affray and beat Ram Baran, the accused did not intend to kill Ram Baran, and, therefore, they did not commit murder. The learned Judge in summing up the case in his judgment writes as follows:—"I am prepared to find, upon the evidence as adduced before me in the present trial, without the least hesitation or doubt that the accused and those who have been convicted in the previous trial attacked Ram Baran; that they were already suffering from keen disappointment on his previous conduct; that his very sight at the time of the occurrence in question made them furious beyond limit; that the aggressors had also come determined to rescue their cattle in spite of all opposition and at any cost; and that prone to commit acts of violence in the above mental state, they brutally beat the deceased who was at the time without means of defence and totally helpless, the whole affair being altogether one sided in aggressiveness as well as cruelty." In order to understand the above remarks it is necessary to remember that two other persons, who according to the evidence joined in this assault upon Ram Baran, were tried by a Judge who preceded the present Judge as Sessions Judge of Basti. They had been committed to his Court charged with an offence under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. They were found guilty of the offence with which they were charged and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years each. They appealed to this Court and this Court dismissed the appeal. The accused in this case have been defended by a very learned Counsel of this Court, who took as his line of argument that either the evidence now on record was the same as that which had been recorded in the previous case and the conviction upheld was conviction for an offence under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, or that the evidence had been so altered as to make the case now put before the Court amount to a case of wilful murder, We are not referred to any difference in the evidence then given and the evidence now given. The evidence shows, so far as the present accused are concerned, that the two accused either themselves, or with others joining them, committed an assault upon a man who was defenceless and unarmed. The nature of the assault can at once be seen from the medical evidence. The officer who conducted the post mortem found four marks on the body of the deceased and on removing the skull-cap a firm and thick piece of clotted blood was found pressing on the brain from the left temporal region to the left side of the brain above durameter. The brain was found quite pressed on the side where it was struck and the fracture continued to the petrous portion of the left temporal bone and on the middle part of the base of the brain. He gave it as his opinion that the deceased died from compression of brain as the result of the fracture of the skull, which was probably caused by some blunt weapon, probably a lathi. The person or persons who committed this act must have known that it was so eminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. It was open to the accused (now appellants) to show that this act of theirs was not murder but came under one of the provisos to section 300 of the Indian Penal Code. They made no attempt to do this. On the contrary, they said that they were not guilty of murder and that they were not present when the murder was committed. This being so, the learned Sessions Judge was very right in finding the appellants guilty of wilful murder, and it is well that there should be Sessions Judges who in the present day are able to take this right and proper view of the law. In many cases it has come within our experience that the tendency has been the other way and so far as the present case is concerned, we are unable to alter either the conviction or the sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge.

But the case is undoubtedly open to this anomaly that out of four persons, who so far as we can gather from the evidence committed or took part in the same act, two have been sentenced, as in the present case, to transportation for life and two have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years each. The case might well be brought before the Local Government who, if they consider it proper, can take action and remove the inequalities in sentence which have taken place.

The appeals are dismissed. The case will be entered in the record of the Sessions Judge as having been very properly and carefully decided.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukharji, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—Two points have been urged before me, first, that the judgment of the Appellate Court is not in accordance with law, and secondly, that the joint trial of the petitioners was illegal.

On the first point I am unable to agree with the learned Vakil that the judgment is not in accordance with law. So far as the second point is concerned, I am of opinion that the offences of which the petitioners were charged were committed in the same transaction and that consequently the joint trial was not illegal.

Nathu Thakur has been convicted under section 3 of the Gambling Act (II of 1867 B. C.) and the other accused have been convicted under section 4 of that Act, and the argument is that the offences committed by them cannot be said to have been committed in the same transaction. Therefore the problem for my consideratian is, what is the meaning of the words "same transaction" in section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the case of Gujja Lal v. Fatteh Lal (1), Garth, C. J. said: "A transaction, in the ordinary sense of the word, is some business or dealing which is carried on or transacted between two or more persons." It seems to me that there is a dealing "transacted" between Nathu Ram, who has been found to have opened, kept or used his house as a common gaming house for profit, and the other petitioners, who have used that house for the purpose of gambling and who have paid Nathu Ram his charges for the same. I am of opinion, therefore, that the joint trial of the petitioners was not illegal and that the application fails and must be refused.

Application refused.

RALU v. PHALLA.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2006 OF 1918.

March 31, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Scott Smith.

RALU—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

PHALLA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Compromise—Consideration—Forbearance to sue, whether good consideration—Bona fide cause of action.

In order that a forbearance to sue should amount to a consideration for a compromise, some liability must be shown to exist, or to be reasonably supposed to exist, by the parties. If one of the parties to the compromise has no case and knows that he has none, the compromise would not be held binding. [p. 498, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur at Jullundur, dated the 10th January 1918.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the appeal is barred by time. It appears that the parties were not present when the judgment was pronounced by the lower Appellate Court on the 10th January 1918, but a parwana intimating the result of the appeal was sent to the Munsif of Una on the 18th January. The District Judge's letter, which has been received in answer to an inquiry by this Court, shows that the parwana was not received back by the lower Appellate Court and, therefore, it is impossible to say whether the Munsif communicated the result of the appeal to the parties or not. The appellant has filed an affidavit to the effect that he only received the intimation of the result of the appeal one week before he filed the appeal in this Court. No counter-affidavit is put in by the other side and I am, therefore, of opinion that sufficient cause has been shown for entertaining the present appeal.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently from the judgment of Mr. Kennaway, District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 23rd February 1917, whereby he remanded the case for fresh trial to the first Court. Briefly the facts are that Ralu, plaintiff-appellant, by a registered sale-deed, dated the 10th August 1912, sold his mortgage rights in three plots of land to Phalla, defendant respondent. Phalla re-transferred his rights in one of the plots to Gangu. Subsequently a dispute arose between Ralu and Phalla and the mutation was rejected, as Ralu said that there was no consideration for the sale. Subsequently Ralu and Phalla made a compromise and on the 12th June 1915 mutations were sanctioned giving effect to the compromise, by which the transfer of the plot to Gangu was confirmed and the remaining two plots were shared half and half by Ralu and Phalla. In the present suit Ralu seeks to avoid the transfer entered in those mutations and asks for possession of the whole of plot No. 3 and half of the other two plots on the ground that there was no consideration for the sale or for the compromise. The first Court held that there was no consideration for the original sale which was entered into to defraud the vendor's creditors and that as the vendee acquired no rights under the sale which was void for want of consideration, the compromise was also without consideration and could not be held to be binding. It accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim. The District Judge said that he was prepared to agree with the lower Court's findings to the effect that the sale was without consideration, though in the latter part of his judgment he says that the passing of consideration is doubtful. There is, however, no contention before me that consideration for the sale passed and I may, therefore, proceed on the assumption that there is a concurrent finding of fact that the sale was without consideration. The District Judge at the same time was of opinion that consideration for the compromise consisted in relinquishment by the defendant, Phalla, of part of his rights in the land, to which rights he was entitled qua Rlau by virtue of his original sale deed. He goes on to say that Phalla forbore to exercise his rights, whatever they were, given him by that deed, which rights he was then entitled to urge in a Court and had urged in the first Court and in that Court, and compromising with respondent and Gangu, accepted something less than those rights. This, in the District Judge's opinion, constituted consideration qua plaintiff. He quoted the dictum, "A forbearance to sue, even for a short time, is consideration for a promise, although there is not waiver or compromise of the right of action." He accordingly accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court, and it is contended that if there was no consideration for the original sale the defendant acquired no rights thereby and, therefore there was no consideration for the compromise. The first Court has quoted authority in support of the proposition that in order that forbearance should be a consideration, some liability must be shown to exist, or to be reasonably supposed to exist, by the parties. It says that if one of the parties to the compromise has no case (and Phalla had none, as his sale-deed was without consideration), and knows that he has none (as Phalla knew), the agreement to compromise would not be held binding. See the remarks of Cockburn, C. J., in Callisher v. Bischoffsheim (1). In my opinion the view of the law put forward by the Subordinate Judge is correct. If Phalla had no rights and knew he had none under the deed of sale (and he had none, for it is found that the deed was without consideration), then he had no right to sue and his forbearance to sue amounted to nothing at all. Ralu in fact received no consideration for agreeing to the compromise, which is not binding on him.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court decree plaintiff's suit for the land claimed, so far as it is in the possession of Phalla. Gangu has not been made a party to this appeal and, therefore, no decree can be passed against him. Phalla will pay costs to Ralu throughout.

Appeal accepted.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 826 OF 1918.

April 11, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

YELLAVAJHULA SURAYYA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

YELLAVAJHULA SUBBAMMA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Succession—Blindness—Rule of exclusion from inheritance on ground of blindness, whether obsolete—Tests for determining, whether rule has become obsolete—Reversioner, whether can sue for declaration as to limited nature of widow's estate—Will conferring absolute title and power to adopt on widow—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.

The rule of Hindu Law which prevents a person born blind from claiming interest along with his brothers as a co-owner in ancestral properties has become obsolete and cannot be enforced. [p. 512, col. 1.]

(Authorities considered.)

A mere contingent Hindu reversioner is entitled to sue, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, for a declaration as to the limited nature of the widow's title to her husband's properties where there is a Will giving absolute rights to the widow. It is not necessary, to found a cause of action under the section, that the widow should actively set up her title. The setting up by the widow of an authority to adopt, however, is not sufficient to found a cause of action for the reversioner.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The exclusion of a blind man from inheritance was not based on his incapacity to perform Vedic ceremonies. [p. 508, col. 1.]

A rule becomes obsolete owing to change of time and circumstances, and the strict rules in the older Smritis have to be relaxed in this Kaliyuga owing to such changes. [p. 509, col. 1.]

If a rule of law has become obsolete, a Judge is not prevented from laying down the law as it exists merely because the obsolete rule is socially unjust and his decision negativing the old rule would also promote social reform and justice. As regards questions of Hindu Law, extreme conservatism is not to be commended so long as the Legislature is slow to move in the direction of recognising that customs have become obsolete or do require alterations. [p. 511, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Napier, J.—In archaic conditions of life a blind man could not take his share in cultivation and in the protection of the family. It was, therefore, not unnatural that he should be excluded from a share in the property. In modern days, however, owing to improved methods of education there is nothing to prevent a person born blind from being taught how to transact business and to take his proper share in the responsibility of family affairs, and there is, therefore, no reason why such a disqualification should still continue. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 21 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 22 of 1915.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 23rd, 24th and 31st January and 14th, 18th and 19th February 1919.

FACTS.—A and B were two brothers of whom A was born blind. But it was proved that A was treated throughout as if A had no disqualification. Properties were acquired jointly in the name of A and B or in the name of A alone. A admittedly managed the properties even during B's life and for more than 12 years after B's death. A was also well versed in the Puranas and Vedas and was earning as a Purohit. At his death A made a Will whereby he authorised B's widow (the 1st defendant) to adopt and gave her full powers over the properties. The main question was whether the Will was operative, A having been born blind. The other questions were whether subsequent conduct amounted to estoppel and whether A had acquired rights by prescription. The suit was by plaintiff as reversioner for a declaration that the Will was inoperative. So there was another question whether such a declaration could be granted.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathy Aiyar for Mr. V. Ramdoss, for the Plaintiff-Appellant.—It is a uniform rule deducible from all the texts that blindness bars a man from inheriting. Manu (Chapter IX, 201, 202) refers to persons "born blind" as disqualified. Yajnavalkya, Chapter II, 140, 144; Colebrooke's Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 10; Smriti Chandrika, Chapter V (where all these texts are quoted). Saraswati Vilasa follows Smriti Chandrika.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Many of these texts do not refer specifically to blindness as a disqualification.]

Manu and others refer to it specifically and one or other of them is quoted with approval in all the subsequent texts. The enumeration is not exhaustive. Thus see the words "any" or "other" 'incurable disease."

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Suppose a man is born blind but gets cured of it later on will the disqualification to inherit continue?]

It may not. But if the property has already been divided, vested rights can't be divested. But the present case stands on a different footing.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—If the blind man begets a son, the law says that he can get his father's share.]

Yes, he can. That is distinctly provided for.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—If a blind man can marry and beget children and even work and earn, what is the principle on which he is to be held to be prevented from taking a share?]

The texts say so. It may be that the disqualification is the punishment for the sins of a former birth, and that is the possible clue to why he is not allowed to share.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Suppose a man is outcasted, he is excluded from sharing, according to the texts. But he is not.]

Act XXI of 1850 is the special law. Hindu Law is put out.

Coming to decided cases, the Courts have uniformly held that blindness or congenital blindness is a bar. Vallabhram Shivnarayan v. Bai Hariganga (1), Murarji Gokuldas v. Parvatibai (2), where blindness supervenes; Ananta v. Ramabai (3), Mohesh Chunder Roy v. Chunder Mohun Roy (4). In Krishna v. Sami (5) there is a difference of view as regards divesting on the subsequent cessation of disqualification. But the bar is admitted. The same rule prevails also in cases of dumbness; Charu Chunder Pal v. Nobo Sundari Dasi (6), Bapuji Lakshman v. Pandurang (7) (where the disqualified man's son born after partition was not allowed to come in). See as to idiots and lunatics Futtick Chunder Chatterjee v. Juggut Mohinee Dabee (8), Dwarkanath Byrack v. Denobundoo Mullick (9), Ram Sahye Bhukkut v. Lalla Laljee Sahye (10), Ram Soonder Roy v. Ram Sahye Bhugut (11), Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh v. Jagatpal Singh (12). In Venkata Subba Rao v. Purushottam (13) non-congenital blindness was held to be no bar. See also Velanayaga Mudaliaar v. Vedammal (14), Kayarohana Pathan v. Subbaraya Thevan (15). The Privy Council have throughout laid down the same view. Ramanand Kuar v. Raghunath Kuar (16), Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (17), Durga Bakhsh Singh v. Muhammad Ali Beg (18), and Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh (19). The last is a case of congenital blindness.

The law having thus been uniformly laid down, it is not open to the Courts to probe further and upset the law. See Minakshi v. Ramanada (20) as to functions of the judiciary. Therefore, the other questions in the case do not arise.

Mr. Ramesam, for Defendant No. 1.—The question of exclusion has no place in this case. The blind man has been admittedly in enjoyment throughout.

The texts nowhere say that a blind man can in no case be or become a co-parcener. They are too uncertain and vague to be relied on. Hindu Law is not the law of the books except so far as what is already adopted by Courts, as to which there is no use contending against. But the present question has not yet been set at rest by judicial decisions. So I submit that the texts should not be allowed to stand in the way of coming to a correct decision.

Again, what the texts intend is only protection of the disqualified man. If he is able to take care of himself, why should he not? This is not a case of bare maintenance. Every need of his is satisfied, e.g., pilgrimage, marriage, ceremonies as regards children, doctor's fees for sickness and whatever is required for every ordinary man. Because he can't, by reason of natural disability, do these himself, the texts enjoin them upon the more blessed in the family as a burden and a duty. (Here the texts were dealt with in detail.) See Baudhayana, XIV, MaxMuller, pages 224, 230. The words used is Nirindriya * * * * *. It literally means only "devoid of sufficient strength." Some texts say "devoid of good qualities" and "those who are incapable of supporting themselves."

All these texts, no doubt, refer to the loss of a right, which at least does not negative the existence of the right to share.

The texts do not contain the living Hindu Law. They are obsolete (e.g., the double share in cases of self-acquisitions). The decisions do not deny the right but say if the right is lost by reason of the disqualification what the disqualification ought to be according to the texts. See Sudder Decision 1857, page 210 (supervening leprosy no bar); Muthuvelayuda Pillay v. Parasakthi (21), followed in Rangayya Chetti v. Thanikachalla Mudali (22). In Venkata Subba Rao v. Purushottam (13) Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., clearly holds the texts to be obsolete. See also Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal (14); Bhattacharya (Tagore Law Lectures), page 426 (1885); S. D. (1855), page 118; Krishna v. Sami (5); 5 Selected Decision (Mac. and Suth.); Kalka Pershad v. Budree Sah (23), Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh (19).

On the facts of the case the blind man was at no time treated as a disqualified person. He has acquired and held property in his name and jointly with his brother.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—But if he can't inherit, he cannot be a member of a joint Hindu family.]

But he has been treated as such. And that has been held to be sufficient. See Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh (24). If the present suit had been brought by the deceased brother (B) in his life, he would have been estopped. The same estoppel binds the reversioners, who claim through him. See also Mitakshara, Chapter II, plac. 6, and Gandla Pedda Naganna v. Sivanappa (25). A gift to the blind man could have been validly made. The co-parceners could agree by a registered instrument to include the blind man as a full co-parcener and that would be valid.

In the present case the blind man has been in possession for over the statutory period and has perfected a title by prescription.

The suit for a bare declaration is not maintainable. Any reversioner cannot sue. See Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (26), Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Narayan Singh (27), Gangadhara Ramarao v. Surya Rao (28), Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh (19), Janki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (29). Granting a declaration is in the discretion of the Court, Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (30), Parthi Pal Kunwar v. Guman Kunwar (31).

Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar, in reply.—Prescription connotes intention to prescribe for an absolute estate or limited estate. He can't prescribe for a co-parcener's estate for the law forbids him from becoming a co-parcener.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—But it may be by agreement.]

Then there is no question of prescription. See also Lala Muddun Gopal Lal v. Khikhinda Koer (32) and section 28, Limitation Act. Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh (24) does not apply because this is not a case of family arrangement.

Declaration can be granted whenever the plaintiff's title will be clouded. See Gangadhara Ramarao v. Surya Rao (28) and Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (26).

Exclusion on the ground of congenital blindness is based on well-defined principles.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The material facts found are: The 1st defendant's husband Chinna Sambayya had two undivided brothers, namely, P. Sambayya and G. Sambayya. P. Sambayya was the eldest, G. Sambaya was the second brother, and the 1st defendant's husband C. Sambayya was the youngest. P. Sambayya died issueless about the year 1877. G. Sambayya, who was born blind about 1847, had, however, been invested with the sacred thread (the parties being Brahmins by birth) as if he had no such disability and lived in commensality with his younger brother C. Sambayya in undivided family communion after the death of the eldest bother P. Sambayya. G. Sambayya died in December 1911 when he was about 65 years old. His younger brother C. Sambayya, the 1st defendant's husband, had predeceased him in November 1906, leaving his widow the 1st defendant as his heir. Soon after the 1st defendant's husband's death on the 19th January 1907, the blind Brahmin G. Sambayya executed the Will, Exhibit VII, as follows: "I am now 60 years old. I am born blind. Your husband is my undivided brother. I am unmarried. My younger brother has no male issue. He left only two daughters. * * *. I execute this Will in a sound and disposing state of mind so as to make my entire property devolve on you after my death with powers of alienation by gift and sale. * *. For the continuation of the line, you are authorised to adopt any boy whom you please whenever you desire. If you do not desire to adopt, you should have the right of alienation by gift and sale, as you please, in respect of the entire property mentioned herein. This Will is to take effect after my death." At the foot of the Will the particulars of the property bequeathed are given and they are said to be in the possession and enjoyment of the testator. One of the houses in Panduvva village is stated to have been purchased by the blind testator in November 1900 and to have remained in his possession.

The testator was 'an active and intelligent man taking part in all family transactions and contributing to the maintenance and improvement of the family.' As a matter of fact, 'he seems to have been entirely managing the family affairs during his lifetime and the 1st defendant's husband was a mere figurehead.' 'As a Vaidic Brahmin he would be officiating at ceremonies and going about for Sambhavans and Dhakshinas on marriage and other occasions not only when they took place in his own village but also in adjoining villages. His blindness, far from being a disqualification, was a recommendation to his being paid double the usual Dhokshinas paid to other Brahmins. He appears to have been well versed in the Brahminical Puranic and other religious literature,' and appears to have been 'in the habit of expounding them to the villagers. He took part in the cultivation of the lands and he sold lands, purchased lands, incurred debts by mortgaging lands, executed simple debt bonds and discharged them all on behalf of the family.' (See documents beginning in 1881, Exhibit II, and ending with Exhibit XIX, dated 1910). The 1st defendant has been in possession of the properties after the death of her brother-in-law (G. Sambayya) in 1911.

The plaintiff is the undivided agnate cousin of G. Sambayya and of C. Sambayya. He treated the blind man as the surviving full owner of the family properties after the death of the 1st defendant's husband. The plaintiff even got a decree against the blind man in 1910, the liability of the blind man being based on his ownership of his family lands.

The present suit was brought in July 1915 on the following averments:—

(a) The blind Sambayya had, according to Hindu Law, no ownership right in the plaint properties. His younger brother, who died in November 1906, was sole owner at his death. His widow, the 1st defendant, in 1906 inherited the properties with a widow's interest.

(b) The Will of blind Sambayya of January 1907 in respect of the properties, which did not, as above shown, belong to the blind man, giving the 1st defendant absolute powers of disposal by gift, sale, etc., cannot legally confer on her such powers and she can only have a widow's interest as her husband's heir in those properties.

(c) The authority to adopt given to her by such Will could not lawfully be given to her by the blind man.

On those averments, the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the 1st defendant, "save a widow's estate to be enjoyed for life, has acquired no absolute rights of sale, gift, etc., in respect of the schedule properties under the Will alleged to have been executed" by the late G. Sambayya.

The plaintiff does not pray in the plaint for setting aside the Will nor does he seek a declaration that the power to adopt given by the Will is invalid. In paragraph 7 of the plaint, he says: "The 1st defendant not having as yet made any adoption in pursuance of the said authority, the plaintiff has no relief to seek for in this suit in that behalf."

Both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The Subordinate Judge framed six issues. He begins the 5th paragraph of his judgment by referring to issues IV and VI alone. The 6th paragraph professes to consider the first issue alone, and the 7th paragraph the second issue alone. The Vth issue is, "whether the suit is barred;" and I take it that the issue was not pressed by the plaintiff. The second part of the second issue raises the question whether some of the plaint properties were the self-acquisitions of Guddi Sambayya. But there is no express finding on that part of the issue. The third issue states the question of estoppel and though the third issue as such is not referred to in paragraph 7 of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, I find that paragraph which professes to consider only the second issue, also gives a finding that the plaintiff is estopped by his conduct (in having brought the suit in which the plaint Exhibit XIX was filed and the decree Exhibit XV was passed) from asserting in the present suit that the blind Sambayya was not the sole owner of the properties by survivorship on the death of Chinna Sambayya On the first issue, the Subordinate Judge held that the rule of exclusion of a born blind man from inheritance along with his brothers, and from co-parcenery with his brothers and from the right of survivorship had become obsolete. On the first part of the second issue, the Subordinate Judge held that by the assertion of joint ownership with his brother and by enjoyment accordingly as managing member, the blind Sambayya had acquired a prescriptive right as joint owner before Chinna Sambayya's death in 1906 (and hence had exclusive title by survivorship at Chinna Sambayya's death).

On the IVth and Vth issues, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff, being merely a contingent reversioner to Chinna Sambayya's estate and having a mere spes successionis, had no right to sue for any declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act unless waste or alienation by the widow is alleged and proved and that as no such waste or alienation is alleged in this plaint, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the present suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge on all these points and dismissed the appeal.

The questions, therefore, for consideration in this second appeal are:—

1. Has the rule of Hindu Law which prevents a person born blind from claiming interest along with his brothers as a co owner in ancestral properties become obsolete?

2. Did Guddi Sambayya acquire by prescriptive enjoyment the right in the plaint properties as co-owner with his brother Chinna Sambayya and did he possess such co-ownership right on the date of the death of Chinna Sambayya and could he legally acquire by long enjoyment as co owner such a title?

3. Is the plaintiff estopped by his conduct from denying Guddi Sambayya's title as co-owner and also title as exclusive owner after Chinna Sambayya's death?

4. Is the plaintiff, as a mere contingent reversioner to Chinna Sambayya's estate, not entitled to sue for a mere declaration as to the limited nature of the 1st defendant's title in the plaint properties?

As regards the rule of Hindu Law itself, the most important text is that in Manu Smrithi, Chapter IX, § 201, Manu being recognised as the highest authority on Hindu Law next to the Sruti or Veda: "Eunuchs and outcastes, persons born blind or deaf, madmen, idiots, the dumb and 'Nirindriyas' are excluded from a share of the heritage." (I have not translated the word 'Nirindriyas' in the quotation. The English translators following some commentators have translated the word as meaning "such as have lost the use of a limb." I shall later on show that the interpretation and translation are wrong). Yagnavalkya, Chapter II, verse 140, excludes a blind man (Andha) and not merely a man born blind (Jatyandha). He also excludes a Pangu (crippled in both legs) and a man incurably diseased (Avichikitsya Roga) and adds "Adyas" (and the like persons). Verse 141 shows that the personal disqualification of a blind man does not stand in the way of his son sharing the inheritance in his place except in the case of the outcaste's son, who, in Yagnavalkya's days, would himself have been an outcaste. Not only is the son entitled to take his disqualified father's place but the disqualified man himself can re-open the partition (notwithstanding the rule that an estate once vested cannot be divested) if the ground of his disqualification is removed. The Mitakshara says: "If the defect be removed by medicine or other means * * * * the right of participation takes effect by analogy to the case of a son born after separation." The Vyavahara Mayukha says: "If after division, virility or the other absent qualification be regained by medicine or other means, the person will receive his share like an after-born son." [See Full Bench decision in Kalidas Das v. Krishan Chandra Das (33).] I need not consider whether the Mitakshara is right in saying that Yagnavalkya did not mean more than Manu and that he intended to exclude only persons born blind and not persons who were anyhow blind at the time of the partition. In Murarji Gokaldas v. Parvatibai (2) that very learned Judge, Westropp, C. J., (who consulted his equally eminent colleague West, J., before delivering judgment) quotes the text of Manu, 'the chief of the Rishis', and at page 185 he says: "The word 'nirindriya' in that text, which Sir William Jones has rendered 'such as have lost the use of a limb.' Mr. Colebrooke has in his translation of the Mitakshara rendered thus: 'those who have lost a sense (or a limb).' * * * Vachaspati Misra in his Vivada Chintamani commenting on the text of Manu says:— 'Those who have lost the use of a limb signifies those who have been deprived of a hand, a leg, or any other member of the body. Such persons are not competent to perform ceremonies relating to the Vedas and Smriti. They are consequently not entitled to inherit paternal property.'" Then Westropp, C. J., indicates his inclination on the matter thus: "Even assuming that Manu meant by 'Nirindriya' to indicate deficiency in a sense, organ, limb, or member * *." I take it that the learned Chief Justice was not prepared to agree with the commentators and translators that Manu used "Nirindriya" in that sense. This fortifies me in my opinion that 'Nirindriya' does not convey that meaning, but another meaning which I will mention later on. Then the learned Judge says, "Nilakanta, in the Mayukha, Chapter IV, section XI, quotes, amongst other texts, that of Manu,.....with this remark: that, as to the words 'have lost a sense (Nirindriya)' they mean 'deprived of the nose or the like.' The translator, Mr. Borrodaile (possibly following the Smriti Chandrika, Chapter V, pl. 61), after the word 'nose', adds in a parenthesis 'or smell', but that is merely conjectural. * * * * *. It is hardly probable that, if supervening deficiency in the more valuable senses of sight or hearing, or in the organ of speech, or in the reasoning faculty, were not permitted by Manu to work disherison, he regarded a deficiency in the minor senses of taste, touch, and smell as sufficient to produce that effect." At page 189, the learned Judge refers to a text of Brihaspati: "'Manu holds the first rank among legislators, because he has expressed in his code the whole sense of the Veda; no code is approved which contradicts the sense of any law promulgated by Manu' * * *. Upon a question as to which the Smritis vary so much as that of disqualification for inheritance, we think that the pre-eminence assigned by Brihaspati to Manu should not be forgotten."

(33) 2 B. L. R. 103 (F. B.); 11 W. R. A. O. J. C. 11; 4 Mad. Jur. 296; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 639.

The learned Chief Justice finally concludes that congenital blindness alone is a disqualification according to the highest authority (Manu) and as, in that case, the blindness was not congenital the blind testatrix did inherit her husband's estate and the legatees of the blind testatrix accordingly succeeded in the appeal. Of course, the direct point decided in that case was that a person not congenitally blind could inherit. The question whether a person congenitally blind could inherit according to the Shastras and even if he could not, whether that rule of the Shastras had become obsolete, was not directly decided though it was unhesitatingly assumed that the rule according to the Shastras was that a person born blind was incapable of sharing the inheritance.

Now comes the question whether that rule is obsolete. I need not say that a rule becomes obsolete when the reason of the rule disappears through change of circumstances and environments in the society which was governed by that rule. Now what is the reason for the exclusion by Manu and other Smriti writers of a born blind man? Manu refers to a man born blind and a man born deaf by the Dwandva Samasic phrase "Jathyandha Badhirau." He classes them along with eunuchs, outcastes, madmen, idiots, dumb and Nirindriyas, but does not state that the latter should be such by "birth". In fact, madmen and outcastes need not at all be by birth. It is also impossible to give any plausible reason for giving a share to a man who was incurably idiotic or lunatic on date of partition while refusing it to one who was such from birth. Before going further, I shall at once deal with the meaning of the expression 'Nirindriyas'. The word is clearly taken from the Vedic text, which says that Soma should not be given pure to women as they are Nirindriyas. The text occurs in Taitt: Samhita VI Kanda, V Prapathaka, 8th Anuvaka: "Soma when taken to women did not manifest himself. Then by means of clarified butter they attacked him. By this attack, Soma became destitute of Indriya (virility, strength to breed) and they took this weak Soma for the Patnivat Agni. Hence women are unvirile (Nirindriya) and destitute of inheritance." It will be seen that the text itself was not intended to lay down any rule of inheritance but to lay down that women should not be given pure Soma but Soma weakened by Ghee (just as the Kshatriya was given Nyagrodha juice instead of Soma and so on). The statement in the Veda is not an injunction about inheritance according to the Memamsa rules of interpretation but is a Nityanuvada (the statement of a known fact or established convention) justifying the real injunction. Baudhayana quotes this text in his Sutra "(Arhati Stree) Na dayam nirindriya Adayascha Striyo Mathayiti Srutheh." The meaning is that a woman is not entitled to inherit because a text of the revelation says "females are Nirindriyas and are incompetent to inherit." Here the word "Nirindriyas" can never mean "devoid of sight, hearing, touch, smell or taste or mind," as women generally possess these. Every translator has translated it as meaning that females are devoid of sufficient strength or prowess or capacity in their senses. I shall in this connection quote another text of the Sruti found in the Kathopanishad: "Peethodaka Jagdhatrhah Dugdha doha 'Nirindriya', Anandanamathe Lokah Tan Sa gachati Ta dadat." Nachikethas finds fault, in this Upanishad text, with his father who made useless gifts because the gifts were of "Nirindriya" cows which had become too old (they were incapable of yielding milk or manure) and were too feeble to take food and drink. In this text "Nirindriya" clearly means (as in the other Vedic text) "wanting in the required vital strength to be indicated by vigour of activity of the five senses of perception and five senses of action and the unifying eleventh sense of mind." It is also to be noted that if 'Nirindriya' in the texts of Manu and Yagnavalkya means "devoid of any sense or organ of sense" (including "sense" of action), it will be a tautology as pointed out by Westropp, C. J., because the deaf and the blind had been mentioned just previously. I am also very glad to have some support from Dr. Jolly in this matter. He says (Tagore Lectures of 1883, page 272): "Another difference of opinion, besides the one resting on the varying number of texts quoted in each digest, has been called forth by the philological difficulties besetting the interpretation of some of the terms used in the old texts on exclusion from inheritance. No other among those terms is so ambiguous as the phrase 'those who are Nirindriya any how' in a text of Manu (IX, 201), which is quoted in all digests. Occurring as it does, at the close of a list of excluded persons, the word 'Nirindriya' may be supposed to be a general term denoting bodily infirmities or defects of every other kind than those specifically mentioned in the previous list. Thus, in another text of Manu (IX, 18) the same word 'Nirindriya' is used with reference to women, and means 'destitute of strength.'" I feel, therefore, no hesitation in saying that 'Nirindriya' means 'devoid of sufficient capacity and vital strength in the organs of sense.' In fact, the exclusion of women from inheritance (except the wife, the daughter and the mother who were afterwards brought as favoured by special texts) has been expressly based on the above text of Veda, which speaks of women being 'Nirindriyas' (and not because they cannot perform Vedic rites as they are entitled, at least, to join their husbands in performing such rites). The very name of a woman in Sanskrit is 'Abala' or 'one without strength.' Barring exceptional amazons and geniuses, women were, till quite recently, known as the "weaker sex" and the "frailer" sex and just as the "right hand" is the strong hand employed in useful activities, (the left hand being merely used as supplemental), so women were to be protected and cherished but prohibited from being entrusted with any responsible work. "Women were regarded under the Teutonic laws as necessarily dependent and the traces of this order of ideas still remain in the English law. The proper guardian was the husband, father, brother or son, the nearest agnate or the king's Court." (The well-known text of the Smritis that a woman is unfit during her whole life period to be independent and that father, husband and sons control her till death may be recalled in this connection.) "(So under the early Roman Law. See Mommsen's History of Rome, Volume 1)" Impotent persons, outcastes, madmen, idiots and the born blind and deaf were persons generally incapable and even unwilling to transact business or to manage property, and the exclusion of all these was based clearly on their presumed incapacity. There are many other grounds for exclusion from inheritance mentioned by Manu, Yagnavalkya, Brihaspati, Apasthamba, Narada and Devala. One ground was "affliction with an incurable disease." Two others were "irreligion and being guilty of degrading sins." Manu says in Sloka 214: "All those brothers who are addicted to vice, lose their title to the inheritance." Narada says: "An enemy to his father and one who is addicted to vice take no shares of the inheritance even though they be legitimate." Manu says in Sloka 202: "But it is just that the heir who knows his duty, should give all of them food and raiment for life without stint, according to the best of his power. He who gives them nothing sinks assuredly to a region of punishment." Sloka 202 says: "If the eunuch and the rest should at any time desire to marry, the issue of such as have children, shall be capable of inheriting." That the deaf and the dumb were assumed to be defective in mind also (owing to the best avenues of knowledge being closed to them) till very recent times is, if I may say so, notorious. That eunuchs were as a class content to be slaves obeying their masters' orders provided food and raiment were given to them is also well known, but according to Manu if a eunuch was desirous of marrying and married accordingly and then raised progeny on his wife by another (as was allowed in olden times), his son was entitled to share in the inheritance in his place. The Smrithi Chandrika and the Saraswathi Vilasa have attempted to base the disqualification of heirs on the ground of the disqualified's incapacity to perform religious rites prescribed by Vedas and Smritis. Surely, Sudras were never entitled to perform Vedic ceremonies nor Chandalas and other depressed classes. The laws of inheritance and exclusion from inheritance apply not only to the three castes of Dwijas (entitled to perform Vedic ceremonies) but to all Hindus. It, therefore, seems impossible to base the exclusion on incapacity to perform Vedic ceremonies.

As regards agamic religious practices, surely a blind man is not excluded by the Sastras from singing devotional songs or weaving garlands for temple worship and so on. The man born blind is not necessarily or usually an idiot. Manu has no doubt said in Chapter II, Sloka 99, that even when one among the organs of a Vedic student fails, his divine knowledge passes away as water flows through one hole in a leathern bottle. But blind boys are studying and have studied the Vedas and Sastras (like Dirghatamas of old and the blind Pandit of phenomenal learning and memory of very recent times who a few years ago dictated the Franava Veda to the well-known Benares scholar Babu Bhagavan Doss), and in modern days there is no difficulty in teaching the blind to read. In this case itself, Guddi Sambayya was not excluded from Vedic rites or social intercourse or from the management of affairs. Some orthodox commentators excluded persons suffering from elephantiasis, atrophy and marasmus from inheritance, but no Hindu would suggest in these days the exclusion from inheritance of a man suffering from elephantiasis, etc., nor would the Court uphold such a contention. In the same way Apasthamba and Gautama exclude from inheritance sons who acquire wealth by following irregular professions and Devala excludes a hypocrite and an impostor. As Jolly says at page 281: "In a primitive state of society, in which collective forms of property were generally prevalent, a natural reluctance would be felt against recognising a disabled family member out of whom no work could be got as an equal sharer with his capable co parceners. A wide extension of the reasons for exclusion from inheritance is common to several archaic legislations. I will terminate this lecture with a summary of an interesting analogy to these archaic provisions in our law. In the rules of the Sachsenspiegel on this head, as in that old North German law book, the contents of which are closely analogus to the old laws of the Anglo-Saxons, an interesting analogy to these old archaic provisions in our laws is to be found:—

1. Outcastes, illegitimate children, monks and nuns, one who has killed his father or other relative, whose presumptive heir he is, or who has forcibly dispossessed him, or robbed him of his property; these persons are entirely incapable of inheriting.

2. Dwarfs, helpless cripples, persons of neutral sex, and lepers are equally disqualified, but their next-of kin have the duty of maintaining them.

3. The deaf, the dumb, the blind and the lame, as well as those who have no hands or feet, may inherit ordinary property, but they cannot succeed to any feudal estate.

The analogy of these rules with the corresponding provisions of the Indian Law is self-evident."

Further, even in old times the blind and lame men were not incompetent to perform religious works. Apararka, the well known commentator on the Mitakshara, says at page 264: "Though there is incompetence to perform religious works of the Patita, there is no such incompetence of the blind, the lame and others. They have no right to perform special rites, which include parts requiring seeing the sacrifice and the like, still there is no general incompetence to perform all religious works. They surely have the right mentioned in the Gribya Sutras to Ishta works (that is, works performed with fire consecrated according to Vedic or Smriti rules). They can be married." "From this text (Manu's text) showing the marriage of the impotent, etc., their investiture with the sacred thread is understood" * * "Supposing that the born blind, etc., have no right to perform Ishta ceremonies, because of want of marriage and Upanayanam, still they have right to Poorta or conservatory works (such as digging tanks) like the Sudras. Therefore, these persons are not disqualified because of their incompetence to perform religious works but because of special texts." Viswarupa says: "Some say, the word 'Pangu' and the rest are used as illustrative of all persons incompetent to perform Agnihotra and the like sacrifices. That is wrong, as wealth is the subject of human purpose and because we find the capacity of the unlearned who are incompetent (to perform the above sacrifices) declared. Therefore, these are disqualified to take shares because of express texts denying their rights. Their disqualification to take a share is not because of their incompetence to perform sacrifice, etc." I think this completely disposes of the theory of exclusion being based on incompetence to perform religious works.

Then, it was argued that because the blindness was due to sin in the former birth and it has not been expiated, therefore, there is exclusion from inheritance. This again cannot be the true ground of exclusion, as the adoption of a religious order (like Naishtika Brahmachariya, Vanaprastha or Sanyasa) also excludes from inheritance according to Devala, who includes such a Lingee along with a madman and a blind man. Viswarupa in his commentary on Yagnavalkya says, "the disqualification to take a share is not * * because they bear the sign of grave sin in a previous birth. According to tradition, the blind and the rest who are not Patita may take grand-paternal property. The incompetency to give more than what is necessary for maintenance when one is able to do so should be understood to be a mere declaration of what is proper and not a rule. To that effect is the text of Manu: 'if the eldest or youngest of several brothers is deprived of his share or if either of them dies, his share is not lost.' This shows that because of the incompetency of a disqualified person to dispose of shares obtained by him, there is resumption of what is properly obtained by him. Therefore, his share is not lost. Thus these persons are themselves alone disqualified. But if there are Aurasa and Kshetraja sons, these are entitled to allotments if free from similar defects. Their daughters must be maintained likewise until they are made over to their husbands." (Yajnavalkya II, 142). I cannot conclude this subject better than by quoting from that very learned and very level-headed text-writer Jagadis Chandra Ghose (who is fortunately or unfortunately not a Brahmin by birth). "The rule probably owed its origin to the difficulty of keeping the property from the attacks of the strong in those troublous times when might was right. * * * But the old rule of exclusion on the ground of physical deformity was limited by these three ancient law givers" (Gautama, Vasishta and Apastamba the Sutra writers) "to the case of the insane and of the Kliba or one of a neutral gender according to the interpretation of Vignaneswara" (These three did not mention the blind). "These persons were placed in the category of minors, and others incapable of transacting legal business. * * * * * Now, it is quite possible that during the long centuries when Buddha's rational and merciful religion prevailed in India all these theories" (incapacity to perform rites, former sins, etc.) "fell into disrepute except the doctrine that natural deformities were the consequences of grave sins in past existences. We find that during these times and in the times following them, the rule was as is laid down by Gautama, Vasishta and Apastamba that only the insane, the Kliba and the Patita or outcast for grave sins only, were excluded." "The Burmese Manu also lays down, that if one 'shall have a severe disease, shall be unable to walk, shall stutter or be dumb, let the share such child is entitled to, be set aside, and let its relations support it. If he be blind or deaf, but perfect in his intellect, let him have his proper share. But as mad, dumb and lame people, and those who have disease of the eyes, may be relieved by medicine, let their portion be regularly set aside for them.'" * * * "Several commentators, such as Medatithi and Vachaspati Misra, have laid down, that persons excluded from inheritance are those who are excluded from Vedic as well as Smarta ceremonies, and are thus incapable of marrying. The Saraswati Vilasa says in this connection, 'the inner meaning is, that deformed persons, if they are eligible for marriage, are share-takers.' * * * Therefore, the proper way to determine, whether a person is excluded from inheritance, is to ascertain whether he is debarred from marrying." As the prohibition of marriage of blind persons became obsolete long ages ago, it would naturally follow that their exclusion from inheritance must have likewise become obsolete long ago. Now, this is the view of the Subordinate Judge (an experienced Hindu Judge).

As Macnaghten says at page 133: "It will be seen from the above specimens, that questions connected with loss of caste and consequent privation of the right of inheritance, are not by any means frequently litigated. I do not recollect having met with any others. Were these disqualifying provisions indeed rigidly enforced, it may be apprehended that but very few individuals would be found competent to inherit property, as there is hardly an offence in jurisprudence, or a disease in nosology, that may not be comprehended in some one or other of the classes. A cursory inspection of the subjoined catalogue of disqualifications will suffice to verify this assertion." And then he gives the disqualifications, which include 'a man destitute of virtue, a son who has no sacred knowledge, nor courage, nor industry, nor devotion, nor liberality, and who observes not immemorial good customs, one who neglects his duties' and so on. It seems to me that the principle of exclusion is conclusively indicated by Viswarupa, "incompetency to dispose of his" proper share, and especially by the text of Baudhayana which says "persons incapable of transacting business, blind men, idiots, those who were immersed in vice or afflicted by incurable diseases and those who neglect their duties, let the heirs supply with food and apparel." Further, Deepakalika (another commentator on Yagnavalkya) says that a Jada (one of the excluded heirs) means "one without energy to perform the duties of his own station in life." According to Apastamba, a son who "dissipates wealth by his vices should be debarred from participation even though he be the first born." I do not think it necessary to pursue this further. It is well known that commentators give all sorts of fanciful reasons as the reason of a rule of law while the real reason stares them, so to say, in the face. The strict injunction to maintain and protect disqualified heirs and the rule that their sons become sharers, show that the exclusion was not intended as a punishment but as a protection to persons incapable of or unwilling to manage property and to deal in secular affairs with others (outcastes being incapable of dealing with their fellow beings) and also in order to prevent vicious persons from squandering wealth in Adharma. Giving shares to such persons would only lead to the property given to them being soon lost to them through their incapacity and unwillingness to hold it or to its being used in the promotion of Adharma.

As I said before, whether having regard to the reason of the rule and the change of environments and circumstances, the rule in question was likely to have become obsolete would form an important consideration for arriving at the right conclusion in this matter. The days when large families (consisting of all the agnates and their wives) lived undivided under the protection of a Kulapathi and patriarch passed away long ago. The text of Manu as now found was not as Manu pronounced it, but as Bhrigu (to whom he gave the general principles) expounded it to other Rishis. Most of the Slokas of even Bhrigu's dictation have been lost and many "pious" forgeries have crept in through medieval priestcraft. These texts as to exclusion clearly date from the patriarchal days. That many blind men, though born blind, have become capable of managing affairs and were married with all Vedic and other rites is shown by the life of the King Dhritharashtra and of the Rishi Dhirghatamas. The duty of maintaining a disabled agnate (however remotely connected) must have gradually decreased in strength from the date when Manu gave his original injunctions. On this question of a rule becoming obsolete owing to change of time and circumstances, I shall only say that it has been acknowledged by numerous later writers that the strict rules in the older Smritis have to be relaxed in this Kaliyuga owing to such changes. Thus, though according to the older Smritis a man who hates his father is excluded from inheritance, nobody will dream of denying that that rule has become obsolete and later commentators have tried to explain away the rule as restricted to a man whose hatred extends to attempts on the life of his father. Manu says in Chapter II, Sloka 103, that a Brahmin who stands not repeating his Gayatri in the morning twilight and sits not repeating in the evening twilight must be precluded like a Sudra from all sacred observances. That is of course obsolete. According to Manu, Chapter III, Slokas 17 and 19, a Brahmin who takes a Sudra woman to his bed and begets a child by her loses his caste as a Brahmin and "the law declares no expiation" for his sin. This is, of course, now obsolete, as concubinage with dancing girls and Sambandams with Nair ladies (the latter being, of course, not at all morally culpable if monogamous) cannot be said to be unknown or even uncommon and no Brahmin loses caste thereby. Exclusion from inheritance on account of vice or extravagance is, of course, now obsolete. Outcastes, etc., and similar persons are now entitled to inherit by Act XXI of 1850, which shows that the British Legislature moved with the times 70 years ago, the old days when outcastes from Hinduism were necessarily excluded from all secular activities having become obsolete after the numerous foreign invasions. Of course, nobody will now think that the loss of a limb or a sense by a soldier or a hero will have the effect of excluding him from inheritance, even if that rule was ever in force. If all incurable diseases were really causes of exclusion from inheritance, chronic consumption and diabetes have been and are probably even now such diseases, but nobody would think of holding that exclusion for such causes is not obsolete. In Venkata Subba Rao v. Purushottam (13) it was argued by Mr. Ramesam (who unsuccessfully appeared for the respondent) that lameness which is subsequently acquired is a ground of exclusion, relying upon the Mitakshara and Yagnavalkya, who excluded a Pangu or "cripple" without the qualification "by birth" from inheritance. Bhashyam Iyengar, J., interjected the following remarks in the course of his argument: "Have you found any case in which the point was raised?" and when he got the answer "none" and that in Fittick Chunder Chatterjee v. Juggut Mohinee Dabee (8) the point was not raised but conceded, Bhashyam Iyengar, J., again remarked: "That shows that it is obsolete as a ground of exclusion. What do you say as to one who is an enemy of his father?" Then in the judgment, the learned Judges (Bhashyam Iyengar and Moore, JJ.) say: "Even assuming that under the Hindu Law texts in case the lameness was congential there would be a bar, a matter regarding which we give no opinion, it is admitted in the present case that the lameness was not congenital" "No case has been quoted where any Court has held that lameness congenital or otherwise is a bar to inheritance"; and then the learned Judges reversed the decision of the lower Courts. The learned Judges, while inclined to hold that even as regards a cripple from birth, the rule was obsolete, got over the difficulty by following Fittick Chunder Chatterjee v. Juggut Mohinee Dabee (8), where lameness was held to be no bar unless it were proved that the person proposed to be excluded was a cripple from birth. In Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal (14) Subramania Aiyar, J., says: "Acts or omissions which entailed degradation under the Hindu system of life were indeed many. They included not only heinous sins and crimes but numerous other things which are looked upon as innocent or are tolerated in these times. It may well admit of doubt whether the injunctions connected with degradation (such as loss of the right of inheritance) were ever enforced otherwise than by expulsion from caste now relieved against by legislation. However this may be, it is quite certain that even so far back as the days of the Dayabhaga commentator, Srikrishna Tarkalankara, loss of proprietary rights as an incident to degradation had begun to disappear. (See Tagore Law Lectures for 1884-85, page 426.) Since the establishment of British rule in this country, no one seems to have ventured to suggest in judicial proceedings that the sin attaching to the commission of even such serious crimes as robbery, murder, etc., entailed by itself forfeiture of civil rights as a matter of Hindu Law, for though innumerable persons have from time to time been convicted by the Courts of such offences, the reports contain no case recognising any such doctrine." [I must, however, state that there is one case reported in Sudder A. Reports 188 and decided in August 858, [Choondoor Lutchmeedavee v. Narasimmah (34)], where exclusion was not only suggested but was argued and where three Judges including T. L. Strange stated, (1) "that mere conviction for theft, though it excluded from inheritance under the Hindu Law, would not carry that civil penalty in a British Court of Justice because the British Criminal Code sufficiently punished the offence with distinct penalties, and (2) that theft by plaintiff of part of the ancestral property to be divided disentitled him to share." I am very doubtful if the decision will be followed now on the 2nd point, which the Judges decided on the strength of the opinion of the Junior Pandit ignoring that of the Senior Pandit. The N. W. Provinces High Court in Kalka Pershad v. Budree Sah (23) (decided in 1871) refused to lay down that a man became disqualified because he wrongly misappropriated to his exclusive use part of the joint property or because he was addicted to vice or hostile to his father. At page 270 occurs this significant passage: "the texts quoted by the Subordinate Judge which are understood to have become obsolete in practice," etc.] To resume the quotation from Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal (14), "Plaintiff's case, therefore, derives no support from the rules dealing with the matter of degradation which, even assuming that they were at one time more than mere moral injunctions, cannot now be treated as otherwise than obsolete" I might state in this connection that there seems to have been no case in which the Courts have decided (as distinguished from assuming or opining or as having taken it as conceded in argument) that congenital blindness does exclude from inheritance in these days. In other words, there is no case in which a congenitally blind man has been made to lose his inheritance by the decision of a Court.

In Kayarohana Pathan v. Subbaraya Thevan (15) decided by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., the following passages occur in the judgment: "It must be noted that the ancient writers excluded various other persons from inheritance to the paternal estate along with those specifically enumerated in the Mitakshara." "How wide the reasons for exclusion were will appear from Colebrook's Digest, Volume II, pages 424 to 435. Many of the grounds of exclusion would not now be enforced by the Courts, and are practically obsolete." (Neglect of obsequies and duties towards ancestors were also grounds of exclusion.) "It is doubtful how far the injunctions contained in the books are now actually enforced in different parts of the country. In Steel's Law of Castes it is observed that the rules of exclusion are largely qualified by custom, and that in seventy two castes at Poona it was found that insanity excluded only unmarried persons, and that in eighty-three castes blind persons married and having families might inherit." As regards the incurable disease of leprosy, the case in Kayarohana Pathan v. Subbaraya Thevan (15) following Rangayya Chetti v. Thanikachalla Mudali (22), Ananta v. Ramabai (3) and Janardhan Pandurang v. Gopal (35)] confined exclusion to the case of leprosy of the "agonizing, sanious or ulcerous type." This case was followed in Raju v. Ramaswamy Naicken (36) decided by the learned Chief Justice and Sesbagiri Aiyar, J. (Sundara Aiyar, J., based the rule of exclusion on the ground of unfitness for social intercourse which unfitness is not caused by the milder forms of leprosy). I might add here that unfitness for social intercourse caused in former times unfitness for the proper management of property and this latter is, as I have already shown, the real reason (or rather one of the two reasons) for the ancient rule.

In the view, therefore, of very learned and orthodox Brahmin Judges of the Madras High Court beginning from Subramania Aiyar, J., many grounds of exclusion have become obsolete owing to change of time, circumstances and environment.

Mr Ganapathi Aiyar quoted a passage from an old judgment of a very learned Hindu lawyer that a Judge ought not to alter the existing law on account of any inclinations towards social reform. I entirely agree. But if a rule of law has become obsolete, I do not think that a Judge is prevented from laying down the law as it exists merely because the obsolete rule is socially unjust and his decision negativing the old rule would also promote social reform and justice. I do not deny that Judges are human and may be unconsciously biassed in their decisions either by their conservatism in social and political matters or by their radicalism in such matters. Even the tendency of their particular religious, philosophical and cultural views might unconsciously affect their view of legal principles and questions. Owing to this, Judges of the nationality of the litigants and acquainted with the customs and social habits of the litigants are partly in a position of advantage and partly in a position of disadvantage as compared with Judges of a different nationality. When the English Common Law became a "wooden" system in many respects, the introduction of the "human" element by the Lord Chancellors in the Courts of Equity cannot be considered to have been an undesirable innovation. Even now when equity and law have become combined, the ideas of "justice, equity and good conscience," which vary with individual Judges, do have an important part in the unconscious and gradual development of law. As regards questions of Hindu Law, I do not think that extreme conservatism is to be commended so long as the Legislature is slow to move in the direction of recognising that customs have become obsolete or do require alterations. It is well known that while the Indian Legislature was reasonably progressive in these matters till the days of the Age of Consent Act (passed during the time of Lansdowne), it has since been afraid to move with the times and to suit itself "to the changing needs of society and custom in modern times."

Even Sir Bhashyam Iyengar was unable to have a Sister's Inheritance Bill (long overdue) passed in the local Legislature. While extreme conservatism may be a virtue in Judges where the Legislature is capable of moving with the times, I do not think that it is going outside his functions for a Judge, who finds that a rule or custom has become obsolete, to declare and decide accordingly, especially where, as in this country, the Legislature is, for well-known reasons, tardy in such matters. It cannot be deemed that their Lordships of the Privy Council have by their decisions gradually developed the law as to alienations by a managing member or by a father in a Hindu family. They have recognised that the growth of the law by judicial decisions in the several High Courts on this question and allied questions has not been uniform owing to the Judges presiding over the respective High Courts having taken different views. (See, for example, the judgment of the Privy Council in Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (37)]. The rights of contingent reversioners to bring suits as regards adoptions and alienations by Hindu widows have also been gradually developed. It has not been a matter of strictly following precedents, but of "broadening" the law from precedent to precedent and it may even be (where the process of such broadening has gone on too far) of reacting occasionally. (The Malabar Law as to the rights of maintenance of junior members living apart from the Tarwad house is Coming back to the question now under consideration, most of, what I may call, the antediluvian rules of the Hindu Law of exclusion from inheritance jar not only on the minds of persons educated in English but, so far as I know, on every ordinary Hindu mind and hence a large proportion of those rules dealing with extravagance, non-performance of religious or caste duties, etc., became obsolete long ago. Under these circumstances, the finding of the Subordinate Judge (accepted by the District Judge) in this case that the rule of exclusion through blindness, though congenital, is obsolete cannot be said to be due to an unconscious bias in the mind of the Subordinate Judge in favour of social reform. I would, therefore, decide the first question in favour of the respondent.

On the 4th question as to the right of the plaintiff to bring this suit as a person having a legal character or right against a person interested to deny it (see section 42 of the Specific Relief Act), I entirely agree with the opinion to be delivered just now by my learned brother and have nothing to add. It becomes unnecessary to consider the other two questions (2) and (3).

In the result, the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—My learned brother has set out the facts in this case and also the questions that arise for decision. I will deal with the fourth question first, namely, 'is the plaintiff as a mere contingent reversioner not entitled to sue for declaration as to the limited nature of the 1st defendant's title.' It is contended for the respondents that as the widow is admittedly entitled to a widow's estate and as there is no allegation of waste or improper alienation, the suit does not lie. This difficult question has been the subject of several decisions both in the Privy Council and in this Court, and it must be admitted that it is not easy to reconcile them all. It seems to me that there are two questions involved which it is best to keep separate for the purpose of arriving at a decision in any particular case. The first is whether a person in the position of this plaintiff is a person entitled to assert his right, and the second is whether any cause of action has arisen. In this case, the first question is, has a reversioner such a position that he can assert his status in any suit other than those specifically provided for in illustrations (e) and (f) of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, namely, where a widow alienates property or adopts a son. The second is, whether the existence of a Will conferring absolute title on a person otherwise only entitled as a widow gives a cause of action. In Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (39) it was held by the Privy Council that the reversionary right is during a widow's lifetime a mere spes successionis, and that where the Indian law permits the institution of a suit, the right to sue is based on the danger to the inheritance common to all the reversioners which arises from the nature of the right. It would follow from this view of their Lordships that no such person can bring a suit except under the provisions of the Statute. In Janki Ammal v. Narayansami Aiyar (29) the Board uses slightly different language, for the judgment contains the following passage :—'It is also true that a reversionary heir, although having only those contingent interests which are differentiated little, if at all, from a spes successionis, is recognized by Courts of Law as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life.' There is another decision of the Board in the same year, Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Narayan Singh (27), where their Lordships consider section 42 of the Specific Relief Act with reference to the position of the alleged reversioner. But when that case is examined, it is clear that the decision of their Lordships against the reversioners' right turned on the fact that the Will which they sought to avoid had been affirmed in a Court exercising appropriate jurisdiction and the propriety of that decision could not be impeached in those proceedings. The Court, therefore, held that there was in fact no intestacy and so the plaintiffs were not reversioners, and so could not sue. The next decision of the Privy Council is reported in Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (26). That was a suit by a reversioner against a Hindu widow for a declaration that a deed executed by her, under which she purported to convey the absolute interest in the property to another reversioner who ranked equally with the plaintiff, was invalid. In holding that the suit lay, their Lordships use the following language: "In these circumstances it appears to their Lordships that this is an exact illustration of that which section 42 of the Specific Relief Act was meant to provide for." It appears to me that the head note* to this case is wrong. The head note is that under section 42, illustration (e), the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration. Their Lordships of the Privy Council do not say so. Illustration (e) deals with alienations made without legal necessity and has reference to the ordinary class of alienations for the widow's own benefit and not to what was in that case a surrender to one of the nearest reversioners. Their Lordships say that the objection that it involves a finding that the plaintiffs in this case are reversionary heirs will not prevent such a suit lying because such a declaration must be given in a case falling within illustration (e). But they do not say that this particular case is within illustration (e). The result of these decisions of the Board seems to me to be that a reversioner, although he only represents the whole body of possible reversioners and although their interest is possibly only a spes successionis, has on their behalf a legal character within the meaning of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and is, in a proper case, entitled to sue.

This seems to be the view taken by this Court in the majority of cases. It was expressly so decided by a Bench in Puttanna v. Ramakrishna Sastri (39), where the learned Judges say that the illustrations do not limit the scope of the section. This was followed in Padmanabhudu v. Buchamma (40), the learned Judges assuming that the brother of a testator had the necessary legal character. We have been referred to a recent decision, Gangadhara Ramarao v. Surya Rao (28), in which Seshagiri Aiyar, J., has used language which seems to throw doubt on this proposition. If the learned Judge really intended to hold that a reversioner has not that character, it seems to me to be at variance with the decisions of the Privy Council and of this Court, which are binding on me.

The next question is in what circumstances is he entitled to sue. The first decision I would refer to is that of the Privy Council in a case reported as Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (17). There the question considered by their Lordships was as to the effect of a nuncupative Will giving power to adopt and a subsequent adoption by the widow as against the claim of the widow's husband's brother. This aspect of the case had not been presented to the lower Courts and their Lordships, therefore, declined to give a definite judgment on that point. But they use the following language:—'It would not probably be disputed that, if a fictitious Will in writing be set up, the heir, upon a proper case being made, might claim to have the document cancelled'. For 'a claim under such a Will is not a bare assertion of title, but the setting up of a specific act by which title to property may be conferred.' This observation is obiter certainly, but it covers the present case exactly, for a title to the property purports to have been conferred and to be vested in the defendant in this suit by virtue of the Will. In Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (30) another decision of the Privy Council has been relied on as inconsistent with that view. There a widow executed and registered a Will purporting to dispose of the absolute estate of her deceased husband. The Privy Council doubted whether this was a proper case for a declaration but declined to interfere. It seems to me that this case does not help the respondents; for a Will is revocable and until the death of the testator it does not pass any property. No interest has vested or been divested. Then as to the decisions of this Court in Sreepada Venkataramana v. Sreepada Ramalakshmamma (41) it was held that the mere fabrication of an authority to adopt will not entitle a reversioner to claim a declaration that the authority is not genuine, the reason given by the Bench being that the document in question merely conferred a power on the defendant which may or may not be exercised by her. She may change her mind and refuse to act according to the document.

I think that this is in entire accord with the principles enunciated in Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (30). It was, however, held by another Bench of this Court in Padmanabjudu v. Buchamma (40) that such a suit does lie. Seshagiri Aiyar, J., rests his decision on that of the Privy Council in Soudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (26), but with great respect, the learned Judge does not notice that in the Privy Council case the widow had actually surrendered the property to one of the reversioners so that there was, as in the case in Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (17), complete vesting of title. Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (35) was a suit to set aside an adoption which, of course, falls within the specific provision of illustration (f) of section 42. The case relied on by the respondent, Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prashad Narayan Singh (27), as one in which relief against an actual Will was refused; has already been explained as founded on the validity of the Will having been established by a competent Court.

On these cases it seems to me that a distinction may be drawn between cases where title is alleged to have vested and where there is only a power given or a right claimed, the actual exercise of which would divest the reversioners. It certainly may be that the setting up by the widow of an authority to adopt is not sufficient to found a cause of action in a reversioner, and I am inclined to that view myself. But whether that is so or not, where the testator has devised the whole interest of his property to a widow, the Will operates at death to vest the property in her, with the result that though she may not be exercising powers higher than that of a widow, she has an absolute title. It seems to me that it is not necessary for her to set up actively her title. The language of the section is: 'Any person denying or interested to deny', and it cannot be disputed that the widow in such circumstances is interested to deny. I am, therefore, of opinion that in the present case the suit lies, and that the appellant's contention on this point must prevail.

Coming now to the main question in the case, my learned brother has formulated it as follows: "Has the rule of Hindu Law which prevents a person born blind from claiming interest along with his brothers as co-owner in ancestral properties become obsolete?" My learned brother assumes that there was at one time a definite and well-established rule to that effect. The case was elaborately argued before us by Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar and Mr. Ramesam, and our attention has been invited to the doctrine laid down by all the sacred writers from Manu to Brihaspati and by the commentators from Viswarupa to the author of the Smriti Chandrika. I agree with my learned brother that the proposition has been established. There remains, therefore, only the question whether the rule has become obsolete. Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar suggested that the rule is founded on three propositions. The first is religious, namely, that such blindness is punishment for unexpiated sin; the second is ceremonial, that such persons are not fit for religious ceremonies; the third is social, that they are incapable of transacting affairs. I have had the advantage of reading my learned brother's exhaustive judgment on the points and, as I agree with it entirely, I will add only a few words.

He has dealt with all the three aspects and has applied these tests to other supposed disqualifications. He has shown that the religious basis has not been uniformly applied to all disqualifications, and has further demonstrated that such religious disqualifications can no longer be held necessarily to affect rights of property. With regard to the second, he has pointed out that in fact the various supposed disqualifications have not prevented the performance of religious ceremonies. There only remains, therefore, the theory that such persons are incapable of transacting affairs. As a basis for deprivation of property this supposed disqualification fails by not being comprehensive, and secondly, is contradicted by experience. It is not comprehensive, because admittedly the disqualification does not cover the case of a child who loses its sight after birth, and is not true in fact because persons suffering from this as well as the other disqualifications to be found in the sacred writings are admittedly perfectly capable of looking after their own affairs. From a social point of view the rule was doubtless of sound application in a primitive state of society, and was as much for the benefit of the person who suffered as for the other members of the family. In archaic conditions of life a blind man could not take his share in cultivation and in protection of the family. It was, therefore, not unnatural that he should be excluded from a share in the property. It was essential, however, that he should not be allowed to starve and, therefore, the rule which required that he should be maintained by the family was a necessary and proper provision. In modern days, however, owing to improved methods of education there is nothing to prevent a person born blind from being taught how to transact business and to take his proper share in the responsibility of family affairs, and there is, therefore, no reason why such a disqualification should still continue.

Our attention has been invited to a number of cases where the various disqualifications have been considered by the Courts in India, and we have been pressed with dicta to be found in those cases. It is a most noticeable fact, however, that in very few cases has an alleged disqualification been upheld and those chiefly where the disqualification is real in fact, such as the case of a deaf-mute from birth, the Courts have always been astute to distinguish. Further than that, we have dicta of learned Hindu Judges in cases that have been before this Court in late years. I refer especially to the decisions in Venkata Subbi Rao v. Purushottam (13), Velanayaga Mudaliar v. Vdammal (14), Kayarohana Pathan v. Subbaraya Thevan (15). The view uniformly expressed by these Judges has been that some ancient disqualifications can be held to be now obsolete. I entirely agree with my learned brother that it is open to this Court to enunciate this view. In so doing Judges are only following the example of eminent Judges in England, who have from time to time declared some old rules of the Common Law to be now obsolete, and as my learned brother has pointed out, there are observations in judgments of the Privy Council tending in the same direction. In my opinion, now that the question has been raised and argued before us at great length with full citation of all the texts and decisions, the time has come for this Court to declare the rule obsolete.

In this view it becomes unnecessary to consider the questions of estoppel and artificial co-ownership, though much might be urged on both those points. I agree, therefore, with my learned brother that the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1347 OF 1917.

March 28, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Panton.

AHAMAD BISWAS AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2—APPELLANTS

BENOY BHUSAN GUPTA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 158B (2)—Sale of holding for arrears of rent—Notice to co-sharer landlords, failure to give, effect of—Sale, validity of.

The provision of sub-section (2) of section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act as to the giving of notice to the co-sharer landlords before the sale of a holding is mandatory and not directory and the provision must be complied with before a co-sharer landlord can bring a tenure or holding to sale in execution of a rent decree, and the failure of the Court to serve such notice would render the sale invalid. [p. 517, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Backergunge, dated the 5th of February 1915, reversing that of the Officiating Munsif, Patuakhali, dated the 22nd of April 1914.

FACTS.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent brought by the plaintiffs claiming rent against defendants Nos. 1 to 9. The plaintiffs were co-sharer landlords, the other co sharers being defendants Nos. 10 to 13. Defendants Nos. 10 to 13 brought another suit for rent against the tenant defendants making the present plaintiffs parties to the suit. The suit was framed under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and a decree was obtained by defendants Nos. 10 to 13 against the tenant defendants in that suit. In execution of the said decree the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 brought the present holding of defendants Nos. 1 to 9 to sale under section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but no notice was served on the present plaintiffs as required under section 158B sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The holding was purchased in execution of that decree by defendants Nos. 10 to 13 and the tenant-defendants took a lease from the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 and began to occupy the land as before. In answer to the present suit for rent by the plaintiffs the tenant defendants pleaded that no relationship of landlord and tenant existed as between them and the plaintiffs, as their holding had been sold by the previous execution sale. The first Court gave effect to the defendants' contention but the lower Appellate Court gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendants Nos. 1 to 2 appealed to this Court.

Babu Upendra Lal Roy (with him Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for Babu Bepin B. Biswas), for the Appellants.—The previous decree obtained against the tenant defendants by the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 had the effect at a rent decree, as the suit was framed under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the present plaintiffs were parties to that suit. By sale in execution of the rent decree thus obtained the holding of the tenant defendants passed to defendants Nos. 10 to 13. The appellants cannot, therefore, now be made liable for rent to the plaintiffs. Sub section 2 of section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be mandatory, and non compliance with it cannot make the whole sale invalid. It was the Court's duty to send the notice of application for execution to the present plaintiffs and if the Court has not done that, it may be said that there was an irregularity which does not make the sale a nullity but merely makes it liable to be set aside. In connection with the similar section of the Civil Procedure Code, old section 248 (now Order XXI, rule 22), the Privy Council in the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) held that non-issue of notice was an irregularity which cannot strike at the root of the sale.

My next point is that section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only where the holding is sought to be sold, but it must be held that by the previous sale at least the right, title and interest of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 in the holding passed and as the said defendants have no interest in the holding, it ought to be held that they are not liable for payment of rents.

Babu Bimal Ch. Das Gupta, for the Respondents—The case in Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) has been distinguished by the later Privy Council case of Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (2), in which it has been held that unless notice is issued under section 245 of old Civil Procedure Code, the sale is a nullity. That case has been followed in several cases of this High Court, one of them being Syam Mandal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (3). Besides, the decision of this Court in Sarip Hochan v. Tilakmani Debi (4) is in point. As regards the second point it is surely not the case of the tenant defendants that they have abandoned the holding. In such a case the landlord would get the right of khas possession. But as long as the tenants do not abandon, the landlord is entitled to sue the tenants for rent.

Babu Upendra Lal Roy briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises outof a suit for rent brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants Nos. 1 to 9, who are the appellants.

It appears that a suit for rent of the holding was brought by the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 who were the co-sharers of the plaintiffs in the year 1911, and that suit was framed as a suit under section 148A.

(4) 43 Ind. Cas. 3.

The present plaintiffs had been made parties to that suit. In execution of the decree obtained in that suit, the holding was put up to sale but the notice as required by section 158B, sub-section 2, was not served on the present plaintiffs, the co-sharer-landlords. The defendants Nos. 10 to 13, decree holders in that suit, purchased the holding at the sale.

The plaintiffs brought the present suit for recovery of rent. The tenant defendants pleaded that the holding had passed by the sale to the defendants Nos. 10 to 13, that they had taken a settlement from the latter and were in possession, that there was, therefore, no relationship of landlord and tenant between them and the plaintiffs and that the suit for rent could not be maintained.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell without the notice required to be served under section 158B and that the sale was of no effect. The suit for rent was accordingly decreed against the tenant defendants.

The tenants have appealed to this Court and it is contended on their behalf that the omission to serve the notice did not render the sale void but that it was a mere irregularity in conducting the sale. Reliance was placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Malkarjun v. Narhari (1).

In that case the sale took place after service of notice under section 248, Civil Procedure Code, upon a person who was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtors. It was held that the judicial sale was not a nullity and although it might be irregular, the sale held good unless proceedings were taken for setting it aside.

The learned Pleader for the respondents relied upon a later case of the Judicial Committee [Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (2)]. In that case their Lordships observed that a notice under section 248 of the Code was necessary in order that the Court should obtain jurisdiction to sell the property by way of execution as against the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. Their Lordships distinguished the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (1) on the ground that in that case "a notice had been served, and the Court had determined, as it had power to do for the purpose of the execution proceedings, that the party served with the notice was in fact the legal representative. It had, therefore, jurisdiction to sell, though the decision as to who was the legal representative was erroneous. There being jurisdiction to sell, and the purchasers having no notice of any irregularity, the sale held good unless or until it were set aside by appropriate proceedings for the purpose." These decisions have reference to section 248, Civil Procedure Code.

The question which we have to consider in the present case is, what is the effect of an omission to serve a notice under section 158B, sub-section (2).

That sub-section lays down: "When one or more co-sharer landlords, having obtained a decree in a suit framed under sub-section (1) or under subsection 148A, applies, or apply, for the execution of the decree by the sale of the tenure or holding, the Court shall, before proceeding to sell the tenure or holding, give notice of the application for execution to the other co-sharers."

The Act makes a special provision for a case where some of the co-sharers obtain a decree for rent under section 148A and proceed to sell the tenure or holding. Sub-section 2 of section 158B expressly provides that before proceeding to sell the tenure or holding, the Court shall give notice of the application for execution to the other co sharers. Having regard to the wording of the section, and to the fact that a special procedure is prescribed by it, we think that the provision is mandatory and not directory. We are of opinion that if a co-sharer landlord wants to have the sale of a tenure or holding, the provision of the sub-section must be complied with before there can be a sale.

In the case of Sarip Hochan v. Tilottama Debi (4) Fletcher and Newbould, JJ. also held that "the provision in section 158B (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act as to the giving of notice to the co sharer landlords before the sale of a holding in execution of a rent decree obtained by one co-sharer is mandatory and not merely directory, and the failure of the Court to serve such notice renders the sale invalid".

It is next contended that even if the sale did not pass the holding by reason of non-compliance with the provisions of that sub-section, the right, title and interest of the tenants passed to the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 who purchased the holding at the previous sale and as the tenant defendants had not got that sale set aside, the sale was operative as against them. But the sale was of an entire holding and the plaintiffs did not consent to the sale. The position of defendants Nos. 10 to 13, therefore, was that of an ordinary purchaser under a money decree.

It is unnecessary to consider whether the plaintiffs were entitled to khas possession of the land to the extent of their share; because they have chosen to treat the holding as still subsisting and they claim their share of the rent from the tenant defendants. The tenant defendants never abandoned their land; they have continued in possession notwithstanding the sale and we think that, in these circumstances, the relation between the plaintiffs and the tenants did not come to an end, the sale at which the defendants Nos. 10 to 13 purchased the holding being inoperative against the plaintiffs.

The result is that the decree of the lower Court is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL NO. 36 OF 1919.

July 31, 1919.

GILL & Co.—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10, applicability of—Stay of suit, when can be ordered—Injunction—High Court, power of, to restrain a party before it from prosecuting suit in Mofussil Court.

Before an order staying a suit can be made under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code there must be substantial identity between the matter in dispute in the second suit and the matter or some of the matter in dispute in the first suit; and there must be a similar substantial identity in the matter of parties. [p. 519, col 2; p. 520 col 2.]

A Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Bombay High Court has jurisdiction to issue an injunction restraining the defendant in a suit before the High Court from proceeding with a suit instituted by him in a Mofussil Court in such a way as to delay or embarrass the trial of the suit in the High Court. [p. 520, col. 2; p. 522, col. 2.]

Appeal from the following order of MACLEOD, J.—The plaintiffs are a firm carrying on business as merchants and commission agents in Bombay. The defendants carry on business as cotton merchants at Bijapur. They consigned cotton to the plaintiffs for sale in Bombay and obtained advances on the cotton so consigned. The market having fallen, the value of the cotton remaining in the hands of the plaintiffs was far less than the amounts due to them by the defendants. Accordingly, on the 25th of March 1919, they filed this suit against the defendants, claiming a sum of Rs. 82,372-1 0 as being due to them.

The defendants now apply that this suit should be stayed under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that they have filed a suit at an earlier date in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Bijapur against the plaintiffs, in which the matter in issue is identical with the matter in issue in the plaintiffs' suit filed in this Court. On reading the plaint filed in the Bijapur Court, I find there are, besides Messrs. Gill & Co. plaintiffs in this Court, seven other defendants and the plaintiff there prays inter alia as under: (a) that the accounts between the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 respectively be taken after determining the rate at which the bales in suit should be valued for the purposes of the account; (c) that a decree be passed against the several defendants awarding the plaintiff such amounts as may legally and properly be found due from the several defendants respectively on the plaintiff paying the proper Court-fee stamp; (e) that the costs of the suit be awarded against the defendants or such of them as may be found liable.

It appears, on the face of it, that the previous suit is not between the same parties, and on that ground it would be sufficient to refuse the defendants' application. It has been mentioned to me that, as a matter of fact, these other seven defendants in the Bijapur suit are not necessary parties, and that the real dispute has to be fought out between Messrs. Gill & Co. and the plaintiff in the Bijapur suit. Then assuming that section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code does apply, Mr. Kanga for the plaintiffs has asked me to make an order in personam against the defendants here restraining them from proceeding with the suit in the Bijapur Court. He refers to the decision of Mungls Chand v. Gopal Ram (1), where Mr. Justice Sale restrained the defendant from proceeding with the previously instituted suit in the Court of Bareily on the ground that justice required that step. Against that it has been urged that the effect of restraining the defendant from proceeding with the Bijapur suit would be to stay the proceedings, and, under section 56 of the Specific Relief Act, an injunction to stay proceedings can only be granted when such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings, and the argument proceeds that if section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code applies then this suit will have to be stayed, and, therefore, there will be no multiplicity of proceedings.

I am prepared to hold that section 10 does not apply in this case from the nature of the suit which the plaintiff in the Bijapur Court has filed, and I am also prepared to hold that in the circumstances of this case justice requires that an order should go against the defendants in this Court in personam from proceeding with the suit in the Bijapur Court. All the evidence required for the purpose of deciding the dispute would be in Bombay, for the defendant's chief objection against the conduct of the plaintiffs is that he was urging the plaintiffs to sell and the plaintiffs declined to listen to his request for sale, so that in the falling market the cotton was not sold and a far greater loss has occurred than would otherwise have occurred. In fact I presume the defendants here will claim that if the plaintiffs had performed their duty the cotton would have been sold at a sufficient rate to cover all the advances made by them.

However that may be, it is quite clear that this case should be tried in Bombay. It would be a most undesirable precedent that commission agents in Bombay, who make advances to up-country merchants on their cotton, should be dragged to up-country Courts in cases of dispute which may occur between them on these transactions.

Therefore, in my opinion, the right order to make is that the defendants be restrained from proceeding with the suit in the Bijapur Court as regards the first defendant. There is no objection to their proceeding against the other defendants. Defendants to put in their written statement within a month. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Mr. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Coltman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—A Bijapur firm filed a suit in the Court of the first class Sub-Judge at Bijapur against Gill & Co. of Bombay. Shortly afterwards Gill & Co. filed a suit in the High Court against the Bijapur firm. The latter applied that the proceedings in the High Court suit should be stayed under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, and Gill & Co. retorted by asking for an injunction restraining the Bijapur firm from proceeding with the suit in the Bijapur Court. The Judge of this Court, who heard the matter, held that section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply and that an injunction should be issued as asked for by Gill & Co. He ordered accordingly, and the Bijapur firm have appealed.

If section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies then the Bijapur suit must proceed, for it was first filed, and the High Court suit must be stayed. Does section 10 apply? In order that it may apply, there must be substantial identity between the matter in dispute in the second suit and the matter or some of the matter in dispute in the first suit; and there must be a similar substantial identity in the matter of parties. There will be found cases where it is clear that the section applies and cases of doubt. This, I think, is a case of doubt, not a clear case. We have to decide the matter on a comparison of the two plaints, for there are no written statements on the record and no issues. The earlier suit is of a complicated character and may have to be greatly modified both as to parties and as to matter. The second suit is simple and undoubtedly the matter it relates to is involved in the earlier suit. But it is so involved that it will have to be disentangled before the Bijapur suit can proceed. It might be disentangled by separating the dispute between the Bijapur firm and Gill & Co. from numerous other claims which do not concern the dispute with Gill & Co. It might be disentangled by omitting the latter altogether and confining the Bijapur suit to the other disputes or some or one of them. We do not know how it will be disentangled, so at the present stage I am not prepared to say that section 10 does apply. I say this on a consideration of the circumstances of this particular dispute and not because I find any great difficulty in apprehending the general purpose of section 10

That being so, we have to consider whether the Judge had power to direct that the Bijapur firm should refrain from proceeding with the Bijapur suit. It seems to me to matter very little whether the injunction remains or is dissolved, for, even in the latter event, I feel very little doubt that the suit in the High Court will be finished before the suit in the Bijapur Court comes to trial. That, however, savours of prophecy; so we must consider the question whether the Judge had power to make the order. The point was not raised in the lower Court or in the memo. of appeal but it has been argued. The appellants' Counsel admits that the Judge has complete jurisdiction over the High Court suit; he can try it and dispose of it. If so, it seems to me the Judge has complete jurisdiction to make all orders appropriate to the trial and progress of the suit. I am unable to understand on what principle he can have only a partial jurisdiction for that purpose. The English Law on the power of a Court of Equity to issue injunctions against persons outside the jurisdiction does not appear to limit the power, where it is to be used against a person who is properly a party to and freely contests the suit. The Calcutta cases to which we have been referred [Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (1), Vulcan Iron Works v. Bissumbhur Persad (2) and Jumna Dass v. Harcharan Dass (3)] were decided by single Judges and the decisions were not uniform. The Bombay case, Narayan Vithal Samant v. Jankibai Sitaram (4), only decides that a Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court cannot order a Mofussil Court to say proceedings, it leaves open the question whether he can order a party to the suit before him to refrain from prosecuting a suit in a Mofussil Court.

Therefore, it seems to me, we have to decide the point by reason and not by authority, for there is not a clear authority though the general trend of the English cases shows that a Judge has full power over the parties properly before him.

The Judge must have that amount of power over the parties which is essential to a prompt and complete disposal of the suit before him. If one of the parties can obtain the production of the accounts, documents, etc., in the Bijapur Court, that will greatly hamper and embarrass the trial of the Bombay suit. Therefore, the Judge must have power to prevent this. The simplest and most complete method of preventing it is by an injunction against the party. But it should, I think, be in a slightly modified form and should only restrain the defendant from proceeding with the Bijapur suit in such a way as to delay or embarrass the trial of the Bombay suit.

Since we heard the arguments it has, in another appeal, been decided that an appeal does not lie against an order refusing an injunction. It was not argued that an appeal does not lie in this case, and as we are dismissing the appeal it does not greatly matter whether it does or does not lie.

Substantially the appeal is dismissed and with costs.

I agree with my learned brother's suggestion as to the date on which the suit should be restored to the Board.

(4) 30 Ind. Cas. 560; 39 B. 654, 17 Bom. L. R. 655.

MARTEN, J.—On the first point I am of opinion, after comparing the plaints in the two suits, that the matters in issue in this suit are not "directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit" within the meaning of section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. I leave open the question whether under section 10 the words "the same parties" mean that the parties in the two suits must be the same, namely, no more and no less. If it had been necessary for me to arrive at a conclusion on this question, I should have had to take into consideration the similar words which are used in section 11 with reference to res judicata.

The second point taken by the appellants is that there was no jurisdiction to order them not to proceed with the Bijapur suit as against the respondents. In my opinion that point is not now open to the appellants. It was not raised in the Court below, nor is it raised in the memo. of appeal and on the merits of the case—so far as they are at present before us—I see no sufficient reason why the appellants should be granted any indulgence. I would, therefore, decide this point against them on this preliminary ground alone.

I cannot, however, entirely ignore the proposition which was urged at considerable length by their Counsel, namely, that the Court of Chancery had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction, unless the defendant either resided or carried on business within the jurisdiction. One short answer to this proposition is that it cannot apply where, as here, the defendants have been served and have appeared in the suit without protest. Thus, in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVII, page 263, Note (g), it is said:

"A foreigner who has appeared to an action in an English Court gives jurisdiction to the English Court to restrain him from proceeding to litigate the same subject-matter in the Courts of his own country."

The authority cited in support of that proposition is Dawkins v. Simonetti (5), a decision of the Court of Appeal in England. That was a case where there were two suits pending for Probate of the Will of a deceased lady, one in England and the other in Italy. The applicant in the Italian suit was the defendant in the English suit; and in the course of his judgment the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel, said as follows:—

"The defendant, after the commencement of this action in England, has begun a litigation in Naples for the purpose (so to speak) of obtaining Probate in solemn form of the Will of 1872. The plaintiff has, under these circumstances, moved to restrain the defendant from proceeding with his action in the foreign Court.

"The question arises whether there is any jurisdiction at all to do so. I am far from saying that where a man has appeared in an English suit he has not thereby given the Court jurisdiction to grant any proper application against him. Therefore, although it might be improper in other circumstances, it may not be improper in this suit. To what sort of cases then is this jurisdiction applicable? Certainly, I think, in a case of 'double vexation'. Under the old practice, when a man was sued in equity as well as at law, the plaintiff was put to his election; and it was just the same where one suit was in an English Court and the other suit in a foreign Court. The practice was to move to stay the proceeding either in the foreign Court or in the English Court. In dealing with such a question the Court prevented double vexation, but it always exercised a discretion. Where there appeared to be good ground for continuing two actions, the Court did not interfere.....It comes to this, then, that it is a matter of discretion, even assuming that we have jurisdiction."

Then, after considering the matter of convenience, the Court came to the conclusion that the Italian suit ought not to be stayed.

I may also refer to Dicey's Conflict of Laws (1903 Edition), page 44, where the learned author considers the following general principle to be sound, although he says "its truth cannot be dogmatically laid down" (page 45), viz:—

'The sovereign of a country, acting through the Courts thereof, has a right to exercise jurisdiction over any person who voluntarily submits to his jurisdiction, or, in other words, the Courts of a country are Courts of competent jurisdiction over any person who voluntarily submits to their jurisdiction."

(5) (1881) 29 W. R. 228 at p. 229; 50 L. J. P. 30; 44 L. T. 266.

Then, at page 43, speaking of actions in personam where the defendant is not in England, he says:

"The Courts of Common Law and of Equity have further always exercised jurisdiction over a defendant who appeared to, or a plaintiff who brought, an action or suit. This again is in strict conformity with the principle or test of submission."

So, too, the Civil Procedure Code refers in section 20 (b) to the acquiescence of a defendant to the institution of a suit, although he may not reside or carry on business within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction.

It seems to me, therefore, that it is erroneous to argue this case on the same lines as if the defendant had not appeared in this action, or, on the other hand, had appeared under protest and moved to set aside the service of the summons upon him.

The appellant based his argument on Carron Iron Company v. Maclaren (6), but there the Scottish respondents were not parties to the English action, nor had they come in and claimed the benefit of the English administration decree. They had only been served with a notice of motion in the English action just as any third party might be, who, for instance, interfered with a Receiver appointed in an administration action. As to proceeding in this way by motion in the suit instead of by a separate suit, the Lord Chancellor said at page 441: "The practice is fully established: its orgin is matter rather of curious speculation than of practical importance."

What Professor Dicey has said as to submission must, of course, be read with his warning at page 212 that "submission cannot give the Court jurisdiction to entertain an action or other proceeding which in itself lies beyond the competence or authority of the Court." It is jurisdiction in this sense to which the Court refers when it considers whether it has any power to authorise a departure from the trusts of a trust deed, and if so, under what circumstances and to what extent [see New's Settlement, In re, Langham v. Langham (7)].

(7) (1901) 2 Ch. 534; 70 L. J. Ch. 710; 85 L. T. 174; 50 W. R. 17.

But that warning does not apply to the Bombay suit itself, for that is an ordinary suit brought by commission agents with leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. Nor does that warning apply, I think, to the particular relief now under discussion, viz., an injunction (in effect) to prevent interference with the speedy prosecution of the Bombay suit.

Even, therefore, if I had considered the point as to jurisdiction was still open to the appellants, I should have decided it against them in this particular case.

The third and the last point is whether the jurisdiction has as a matter of discretion been properly exercised here. As to this, I see no reason to interfere except that I agree in the variation of the form of the injunction which my brother Heaton has stated. The Bombay case came on for hearing as a short cause in the vacation. The defendant did not put in his affidavit till the day of the hearing: and his Bijapur suit with its eight defendants and vague allegations would seem to offer good opportunities for vexation and delay. Under these circumstances, I can well understand an injunction being granted to restrain that vexation and delay so far as practicable.

The Bombay suit was directed to be replaced on Board on 9th June after the defendant had filed his written statement. We can now direct the Prothonotary to effect this for the 5th or 12th August.

In the result, I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE PORT CANNING AND LAND IMPROVEMENT CO., LTD.—APPELLANTS

versus

Srimati KATYANI DEBI—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B C. of 1885), ss. 6, 7, 8, 9

PORT CANNING AND LAND IMPROVEMENT CO. LTD. v. KATYANI DEBI.

—Landlord and tenant—Rent, enhancement of—Reclamation lease—Provision for future enhancement of rent—Presumption that maximum rent provided for is to be fixed rent.

When land is let in Bengal upon a lease for the purpose of clearing jungle or other reclamation, and provision is made for a gradual enhancement of the rent up to a prescribed maximum, a presumption arises that the maximum so prescribed is to be the full rent as long as the tenure subsists The general provisions for enhancement of rent contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act do not apply to such a case. [p. 626, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.), dated March 9, 1914, reported as 25 Ind. Cas. 274, reversing a decree of the District Judge, 24-Pergannahs, and restoring a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Alipur.

FACTS.—The appellants were a Company with registered office at Bombay, the object of which was to reclaim lands in the Sunderbans of Bengal. They carried on their work through an agent named Cowasjee, who in 1885 granted the respondent's predecessors a lease or settlement of 1,000 bighas, subsequently divided into portions, one of which the respondent held. In 1910 the appellants sued to enhance the rent of the land, for which respondent then and for many years previously had been paying 17 annas per bigha. Respondent contended in her written statement that the lease by Cowasjee was a permanent mourasi mokurrari one, and the rent, therefore, not liable to enhancement. She produced a printed form purporting to be granted by Cowasjee (hereinafter referred to as the memorandum) in which it was so described. Plaintiffs denied the genuineness of this, and also alleged that Cowasjee exceeded his powers if he gave a lease on such terms. They also contended that the document was inadmissible in evidence, as being neither stamped nor registered. The plaintiffs' books contained entries of the terms of the tenure agreeing with those in the memorandum.

The Subordinate Judge admitted the document in evidence, holding that it was not a lease or an agreement for a lease, but merely a record of a previous completed transaction. He dismissed the suit.

On appeal, however, his decision was reversed by Mr. Duval, District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs, the material part of whose judgment was as follows:—

"The plaintiff's case is that the rent was not fixed in perpetuity at Re. 1 1 0 and so that it is liable to enhancement. The defendant mainly relies on a memorandum of arrangement, dated Canning the 8th March 1885 and signed by Dwarka Nath Roy, Superintendent, and Cowasjee Edaljee, agent, under which it is stated that the rate, Re. 1-1 0 per bigha, is to be the maximum rate of rent under a mokurrari mourasi tenure. The Company denied the genuineness of this memorandum. They stated that Cowasjee Edaljee, their agent, had no authority to create mourasi mokurrari tenures. It is admitted that this memorandum was not stamped or registered. There is, therefore, no lease or pottah. It deals with the whole 1,000 bighas, and not the tenures now held by the defendant alone. It further appears in respect of some of the lands within the 1,000 bighas, which have now fallen into the share of other members of the original Syndicate or their successors-in-interest, that subsequently mokurrari mourasi pottahs have been granted, but in these pottahs the expense of clearing the land has been thrown on the tenants and is not to be borne by the Company. (Compare Exhibits J and K.) It also appears that under the power-of-attorney granted by the Company, Cowasjee Edaljee had no authority to create mokurrari mourasi pottahs. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that this memorandum of arrangement cannot be held to be binding, but he has found that, as a matter of fact, the Company, though it did not treat this holding in its inception as a mokurrari mourasi one, has by its subsequent conduct bound itself never to enhance the rent. On the facts I do not agree with the learned Subordinate Judge. It appears that the two tenures when still held as one fell into arrears of rent and sale proclamation was issued in respect of it in the year 1895. In that proclamation the judgment-debtor's right was described, no doubt, as mourasi. This fact, however, does not make it mokurrari. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that the rent is not enhanceable as there was progressive rent and mourasi settlement, and land had to be cleared. The facts, however, are that the land was cleared at the expense of the Company and not, as happens in jungle-bari leases, at the expense of the tenant himself. I, therefore, distinguish the position of the defendant in this case from the position of persons who take land on increasing rental and have to pay the cost of clearing the jungle themselves. Compare Huro Prasad Roy Chowdhury v. Chundee Churn (1).

"On my finding of the facts I must come to the conclusion that Cowasjee Edaljee had no authority to execute a mokurrari mourasi lease. No lease was created and the unstamped and unregistered memorandum of arrangement signed by Cowasjee Edaljee, the genuineness of which I do not doubt, cannot be binding on the plaintiff Company. I find, therefore, on these facts that the most that has ever been admitted or proved is that the defendant has a permanent right in the land but not at a fixed rate of rent; she is, therefore, liable to pay rent on the excess area and to pay a fair and equitable rent."

The District Judge remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge for a finding as to what enhancement, if any, should be granted.

The High Court in second appeal restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

On the present appeal

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. Eddis), for the Appellants, submitted that the rent was enhanceable under the ordinary provisions of the Bengal Land Law, which there was nothing to exclude. Respondent was a tenure-holder: section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied. Respondent's contention that the tenure was mourasi mokurrari was not made out. The pottah on which she relied, not being registered, was inadmissible in evidence under sections 17 and 47 of the Indian Registration Act. Cowasjee had no power to grant such a pottah.

Dr. Eddis followed.—The argument from respondent's long payment of 17 annas per bigha that her rent is not enhanceable has no force. Under section 9 of the Bengal Tenancy Act her rent could not be enhanced by the Court till 15 years after the last enhancement by contract.

Sir W. Garth, for the Respondent.—The plaintiffs admit that defendant is their tenant: it was through Cowasjee she obtained possession. Cowasjee's power of attorney authorises him to clear land, and he must incidentally have power to grant such leases as are usual for that purpose. All leases in the Sunderbands are mourasi mokurrari. The document described as a pottah was not a lease strictly so called: a lease was to follow, although not actually given. Formal leases were later on given to two other persons who had other parts of the 1,000 bighas, and in each case they were mourasi mokurrari. The plaintiffs' books also support our case as to the terms of the tenure. The contract here was made before the Bengal Tenancy Act, so no argument can be based on section 9. The fact that we have paid 17 annas for so many years goes far to show that the rent is fixed. In cases like this, where a maximum rent is fixed, it must be presumed, in the absence of anything else that the rent is fixed for all time: Baboo Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (2), Soorasoonderee Dabea v. Golam Ali (3), and Huro Prasad Roy Chowdhury v. Chundee Churn (1).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply.—If the lease were reconstructed, the terms of it would be

1. We will take no premium.
2. In consideration of that, you will bear the cost of clearing over a certain small sum.
3. The holding will be hereditary.

It cannot be argued from this that the rent was to be fixed.

[VISCOUNT CAVE.—The Company has lost the counterpart of the lease, and only have an entry in their books. There may have been terms not expressly stated in the memo. When the Company proceeded on the lease, in 1898, they gave mokurrari to other tenants: also, there is the fact that for years you did not claim to enhance the rent.]

They may have paid a premium. My submission is that it has not been proved by legal evidence that the lease was to be mokurrari.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI —This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff Company in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of the 24 Pergunnahs in Bengal for the enhancement of the rent of a tenure held under them by the respondent. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the rent of the tenure was not enhancible; his judgment was reversed on appeal by the District Judge. On second appeal the High Court of Calcutta came to the conclusion, as an inference of law on the documentary evidence and the conduct of the parties, that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was well founded, and it accordingly set aside the District Judge's order and restored that of the first Court dismissing the suit.

The plaintiff Company, a Syndicate, was formed in Bombay with the object of acquiring from Government grants of land in the Sunderbun jungle tract and reclaiming the same. The procedure that was adopted for the purpose was to carve out the land granted to them by Government into a number of subordinate tenures, to the holders of which was entrusted the actual work of reclamation and the settlement of ryots on land so reclaimed. It would appear from the record that the Syndicate ordinarily gave some pecuniary assistance towards the reclamation, but in the instance in dispute they waived the payment by the tenure holders of the usual premium or salami on account of the heavy cost of the work.

The plaintiff Company, it is admitted, carried on their work in the Sunderbun tract through an agent named Eduljee Cowasjee, who was in their service for a number of years prior to 1885, and continued in that capacity until 1893. The power-of-attorney given to him, which bears date the 20th October 1876, is of the usual character. It gives him, naturally under the circumstances, very wide powers. In exercise of this authority he granted to a number of people collectively, called Teacher & Co., a tenure consisting of 1,000 bighas of land, roughly 333 acres, which subsequently was split up into three lots, one of which, consisting of 193 bighas, is now held by the defendant respondent in the present appeal. The plaintiffs admit that the tenure was mourousi, but they allege that though permanent and heritable, it did not carry with it the incident of fixity of rent as alleged by the respondent The plaintiff Company further alleged that the counterpart of the lease granted to the tenure-holder was lost.

In support of her contention that the tenure then created was non-enhancible, the defendant produced a memorandum executed by Eduljee Cowasjee, which she alleged set out the terms of the contract. To the reception in evidence of this memorandum the plaintiff Company objected, contending that, as it was unregistered, it was inadmissible under sections 17 and 47 of the Indian Registration Act.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection, holding that it was neither a lease nor an agreement for a lease, but only a memorandum relating to a previous and completed transaction by which the tenure-holders had obtained possession of the lands. The learned Judges of the High Court take the same view. Their Lordships are unable to concur with the judgment of the High Court on this point in face of the admission by Ramtrahi Chakravarti, one of the tenure-holders, that he got into possession under the memorandum, which he regards as his lease. Being unregistered, it is inadmissible in evidence, and no effect can be given to it; but the respondent relied also in support of her case on an entry in the settlement books of the plaintiff Company which is in these terms :—

"4 annas in 1295.
"8 annas in 1296.
"12 annas in 1297.
"17 annas in 1298."

The District Judge does not appear to have given much attention to this document, but the Subordinate Judge and the High Court both attach to it, and rightly, in their Lordships' opinion, great importance in judging of the character of the tenancy which Eduljee Cowasjee acting as the Company's agent created in 1835. The document is found in the books of the plaintiff Company, and if it is open to the construction for which the respondent contends, taken in conjunction with other circumstances, their Lordships can arrive only at one conclusion, that the claim of the plaintiff Company must fail.

Before proceeding further their Lordships desire to observe that the plaintiff Company in 1895 put up the tenure in question to sale for arrears of rent. They admit that it is heritable (mouroosi), and by their conduct in trying to bring it to sale, they admitted it to be transferable; in other words, that it is a permanent, heritable, and transferable tenure. The only question is whether the rent is fixed as the defendant alleges, or is liable to enhancement from time to time under the provisions of the Tenancy Act. Ordinarily the two admitted characteristics would create a presumption in favour of the tenant, and throw on the plaintiff the onus of showing that the tenure is wanting in the characteristic of fixity of rent. But assuming that the onus lay on the defendant, their Lordships are of opinion that she has fully discharged it. In the books of the plaintiff Company it is expressly stated that the tenure should not be liable to rent for the first four years. After that it is to carry rent on a progressive scale until in 1298 it reached one rupee one anna. The contract as to progressive rise thus came to an end in 1298, and there is no reference to further enhancement by operation of law. In their Lordships' opinion the clear inference from these facts is that the maximum rent reached in 1298 was the fixed rent of the tenure so long as it lasted. This form of agreement, in the case of reclamation leases, has formed the subject of decision in three cases. In the case of Golam Ali v. Gopal Lal Thakoor (4) Mr. Justice Phear observed as follows :—

"I am led to this (conclusion) in great degree by consideration of the fact that the parties to the contract have carefully provided for a variation of the rent up to a maximum of Rs. 5 per kanee, and have yet been entirely silent as to any possibility of variation beyond that amount, and also that they have minutely prescribed the mode in which the excess lands within the given boundaries are to be assessed at rates rising up to the same amount, Rs. 5, but at the same time have made no allusion to any other ground for the enhancement of the jumma to be paid for the land lease."

This case came up on appeal before the Judicial Committee, and their Lordships agreed with the High Court that the terms of the agreement carried fixity of rent. The words used by the Board in giving their decision on the point are important [Soorasoonderee Dabea v. Golam Ali (3).] Their Lordships observed :—

"The kabuliyat did not contain the term mokurrari or the words 'from generation to generation,' and the kabuliyat was one of modern date, and there was not as in Dhunput Singh's case (2) any long uninterrupted enjoyment at a fixed, unvarying rent. It was, however, admitted by both parties in argument that the tenure was a permanent one. It is unnecessary for their Lordships to express any opinion on that point, and they, therefore, abstain from doing so. Looking at the words of the kabuliyat, their Lordships are of opinion that it was the intention of the parties that in and after the year 1264 the defendant should hold at the fixed rate of Rs. 5 per kanee, and that consequently the rent was not liable to enhancement beyond that rate."

In Huro Prasad Roy Chowdhury v. Chundee Churn (1) Mr. Justice Wilson, afterwards Sir Arthur Wilson (sitting with Mr. Justice Maclean), dealing with the construction of an agreement of a similar character, expressed himself as follows :—

"Now the question is shortly this. When land is let for the purpose of clearing jungle or other reclamation and on this ground or any other ground mentioned in the lease a reduced rent is provided for the first few years and it is said that the rent is to be at such and such rate, a sum as the full rent, does that mean, as the words seem to import, that the full rent is to be the full rent as long as the tenure subsists, or is such a rent liable to enhancement under the provisions of the rent law. We agree with the lower Appellate Court in thinking that the decision of the Privy Council in Soorasoonderee Dabea v. Golam Ali (3) is an authority for holding that the former view is the true one, and that in the present case the rent cannot be enhanced."

Counsel for the plaintiffs were asked if they knew of any case in which a contrary view had been taken, and they frankly admitted that they had found none. Nor are their Lordships aware of any.

The conduct of the plaintiff Company supports the respondent's case. There can be little doubt that the plaintiff Company must have been fully aware of their agent's transactions; not only is there a presumption that he must have faithfully carried out his duties and kept them informed of his dealings with the tenures, but there are the outstanding facts that they received an unvarying rent for nearly seventeen years; that when the original tenure was split up they confirmed to two of the grantees two of the plots at the fixed rent reached in 1298, and that they allowed the defendant to raise permanent structures on the tenure and to materially alter its agricultural character, although they must have known of her acts, as they had admittedly a branch office at Mutla not far from where the lands lay.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court is correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Decree, adjustment of—Certification of adjustment—Compromise, whether new contract—Oral evidence, admissibility of, to prove compromise—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25.

Where in execution of a decree the parties effect a compromise and in consequence certify the adjustment of the decree to the Court, whereupon the execution case is struck off on the ground that the decree is fully satisfied, the order of the Court is binding on the parties and there is no longer an operative decree in existence. The fact that the liabilities under the decree form the consideration for the compromise, does not prevent that compromise from being a new and independent contract which may form the basis of a suit and which may be proved by oral evidence, and such evidence would not amount to "contradicting, varying adding to or subtracting from" the terms of the decree. [p 528, col. 2.]

First appeal against the decree of the Sub. Judge, Akola, dated the 31st January 1918.

Mr. R. N. Mudholkar, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff obtained a decree on the 29th July 1910 for Rs. 6,485 (six thousand four hundred and eighty-five) and costs, the decree carrying interest at six per cent. per annum. On the 22nd September 1911 two of the judgment-debtors entered into a compromise with the decree-holder. The amount due under the decree was found by the parties to be Rs. 7,628 (seven thousand six hundred and twenty-eight). The plaintiff agreed to accept Rs. 7,200 (seven thousand two hundred) in full satisfaction of the decree. Bashiruddin, one of the judgment-debtors, paid Rs. 3,600 (three thousand six hundred) and the defendant, another judgment-debtor, executed an acknowledgment in the plaintiff's books for the same amount. On the following day the decree-holder's Pleader certified the adjustment and the execution case was struck off, as the decree was fully satisfied. The defendant had dealings with the plaintiff and the suit has been brought for the balance due which includes this item of Rs. 3,600 (three thousand six hundred). The lower Court has disallowed this item on the ground that the suit, so far as this item is concerned, is based on a mere acknowledgment. It is, however, conceded before me by the learned Advocate for the respondent that the further pleadings of the parties have elicited all the material facts bearing on this claim and that the suit is not liable to be dismissed on this technical ground.

The argument on behalf of the respondent is that the acknowledgment is not a promise to pay and that evidence of subsequent oral agreement to modify or rescind the decree is inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act. It may, however, be fairly urged on the other side on the authority of the Privy Council judgment in Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1) that such an acknowledgment implies a promise to pay, though it cannot be an express promise to pay, a barred debt, within the meaning of section 25 of the Contract Act. Some such distinction between an express promise and acknowledgment is necessitated by the terms of section 19 of the Limitation Act when compared with section 25 of the Contract Act, as was held in Gobind Das v. Sarju Das (2). But even apart from the acknowledgment I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to prove the compromise of the decree by oral evidence in this suit.

The respondent relies upon Karan Singh v. Kanhai Lal (3), where it was held that section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872 forbids proof of a distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify a decree, whether or not such decree be an embodiment of a 'disposition of property' within the meaning of that phrase in the said section. I agree with my learned predecessor that a decree is neither a contract nor a grant or other 'disposition of property.' I do not see how it can be regarded as a document embodying the terms of a 'disposition of property.' It merely embodies the result of an adjudication. I also agree that proviso 4 cannot be called in aid to allow oral evidence regarding an adjustment of a decree, if such evidence is excluded by section 92 itself. Proviso 4 seems to lay down merely a rule of restriction by disallowing evidence of subsequent oral agreement where the contract, grant or disposition of property is required by law to be in writing or has in fact been registered.

With due respect it appears to me that the question, which has not received sufficient consideration in the judgment, is whether an adjustment of a decree is an agreement by way of 'contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from' the decree, though it is an agreement to 'rescind or modify it.' A contemporaneous oral agreement does not 'rescind or modify' a written agreement but it 'may contradict, vary, add to or subtract from' its terms. A subsequent agreement 'rescinds or modifies' them but does it contradict, nay add to or subtract from the prior agreement, within the meaning of section 92? It is, however, unnecessary to pursue this subject any further so far as this case is concerned.

The adjustment of the decree was certified to the Court on the 23rd September 1911, and thereupon the execution case was struck off on the ground that the decree was fully satisfied. This is proved by the record of the execution case, and not by oral evidence. The order of the executing Court is now binding on the parties. There is, therefore, no longer an operative decree in existence. The fact that the liabilities under the decree form the consideration for the compromise sued upon, does not prevent that compromise being a new and independent contract which may form the basis of a suit and which may be proved by oral evidence. The plaintiff in the present suit cannot be said to be giving oral evidence contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from' the terms of the decree.

Under section 257A of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, such a compromise without the sanction of the Court, when sought to be enforced by a separate suit, was valid according to all the High Courts except that of Bombay. That section is repealed in the present Code and, therefore, there is no objection to the plaintiff's claiming interest at a higher rate than that allowed by the decree.

Some evidence has been given on behalf of the defendant to prove that he was not to be held liable for any amount above Rs. 2,500 (two thousand five hundred) and that in any case he was not to pay interest on the amount of Rs. 3,600 (three thousand six hundred). I agree with the Court below that the evidence regarding this alleged agreement is unreliable. The fact that there was a subsequent acknowledgment signed by the defendant for Rs. 5,400 (five thousand four hundred) in which interest was calculated on Rs. 3,600 (three thousand six hundred) at the rate of ten annas per cent. per mensem, shows the understanding of the parties as regards the rate of interest and the extent of the defendant's liability.

The result is that the plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 3,600 (three thousand six hundred) with simple interest at ten annas per cent. per mensem from the 22nd September 1911. The decree of the lower Court is accordingly modified by allowing an additional sum of Rs. 4,891-8-0 (four thousand eight hundred and ninety-one rupees and eight annas). This sum will carry interest at six per cent. per annum from the date of suit till realisation. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs on Rs. 4,891-8-0 in both Courts and bear his own costs.

Decree modified.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 283 OF 1918.

May 28, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould.

RAM KUMAR BHOWAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

CHANDRA KANTA CHAKRABARTY—DEFENDANT RESPONDENT.

Assam Land Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), ss. 23, 154—Deputy Commissioner, whether has power to settle boundary dispute coming to his knowledge otherwise than in course of settlement proceedings—Civil Court, whether can entertain suit regarding boundary dispute in respect of which Deputy Commissioner has passed order—Jurisdiction of Civil Court, when ousted.

In order to give a Settlement Officer jurisdiction under section 23 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation there must be a report by a Survey Officer concerning a boundary dispute that has come to his knowledge in the course of his survey. The Regulation gives a Deputy Commissioner no power to settle a dispute which arises long after the settlement proceedings and which comes to his knowledge on an application from one of the parties concerned. [p. 530, col. 2; p. 531, col. 1.]

Where the order of a Deputy Commissioner deciding a boundary dispute on the application of one of the parties concerned does not appear to be one which is final by reason of its having been passed under section 23 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, nor does the order show under what section the Deputy Commissioner purported to act, the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit regarding the dispute. [p. 530, col. 2.]

The question whether the Civil Court has jurisdiction or not depends on whether the order of the Deputy Commissioner was or was not passed under section 23 of the Regulation. [p. 530, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lakhmipur, dated the 13th October 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Dibrugarh, dated the 12th May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. S. C. Basak, (with him Babu Asita Ranjan Chatterjee) for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court without going into the merits of the case dismissed the suit, holding that by virtue of a certain order of the Deputy Commissioner relating to the matter in suit the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to interfere. The order of the Sub-Deputy Collector is dated 21st May 1916. The order of the Deputy Commissioner is dated 8th June 1916. Then there was an application by the plaintiff for review, which was decided on 8th July 1916.

Babu Gunada Chara Sen, for the Respondent.—The last order is not an exhibit in the case, and so the appellant cannot, in second appeal, rely on that order.]

The order though not marked as an exhibit is on the record. Upon a proper construction of the orders of the 8th June and 8th July it would appear that the order was subject to any decision of the Civil Court in the matter. The Civil Court has got jurisdiction to entertain a suit relating to the boundary dispute in question, because the order of the Deputy Commissioner is not final. The dispute was not brought to the knowledge of the Deputy Commissioner in the course of survey and settlement proceedings and so the order cannot be treated as final. Refers to sections 23, 154 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation 1886.

Babu Hun da Charan Sen, (with him Babu Surendra Nath Das Gupta), for the Respondent.—The Deputy Commissioner is a Settlement Officer under section 138 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, 1886, and the only section under which he could have acted is section 23, which provides that the order of the Deputy Commissioner exercising the powers of a Settlement Officer is final and is not open to revision by the Civil Court The view taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct. Under the corresponding Bangal Act V of 1875, it has been held that in such a case the order of the Deputy Commissioner is final.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, in reply, contended that there was nothing on the record to show that the order was one under section 23. Under the circumstances the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decision dismissing a suit for recovery of possession of a small piece of land in the town of Dibrugarh. The land in suit is a piece of land between the homesteads of the plaintiffs and the defendant and the dispute between the parties is a boundary dispute. There was a survey and settlement in 1911, in which the boundary between the lands of the two parties was laid down by the settlement authority. In 1915 the Sub-Deputy Collector held an enquiry and found that the defendant had encroached on the plaintiffs' land to the extent of 33 links and that the plaintiffs had encroached on the defendant's land to the extent of 3 links, and the Sub-Deputy Collector referred the plaintiffs to a Civil Court for redress, on the 21st May 1916. Then I find that the parties appeared before the Deputy Commissioner, but whether they made an appeal from the Sub-Deputy Collector's order or put in a fresh application regarding the boundary dispute does not appear from the papers that have been filed in these proceedings. The Deputy Commissioner passed an order that the parties must abide by the existing boundary. On the record of the first Court there was also a copy of the later order of the Deputy Commissioner dated the 8th July 1916 in which he says:—"He must adhere to the boundaries fixed at the last re settlement unless he can get a decree of a Civil Court altering them". Though this document was on the record, it was not marked as an exhibit and no reference was made to it in either of the lower Courts. In the suit brought by the plaintiffs with reference to this boundary dispute, the Munsif went into the merits and decided in favour of the defendant and also held that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction having regard to the provisions of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, 1886. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court only decided the question of jurisdiction and confirmed the order of dismissal of the suit. Obviously if, as is contended, the order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated the 8th July 1916 was in review of his order dated the 8th June of the same year, it cannot be treated as a final order ousting the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. But this order has not been properly proved, nor did I allow it to be put in in evidence in accordance with rule 27 of Order XLI, Civil Procedure Code, though I might have done so, if I had not held that the appeal would succeed on other grounds.

Whether the Civil Court had jurisdiction or not depends on whether the order of the Deputy Commisioner was passed under section 23 of the Regulation. That section provides: "Whenever, in the course of survey, it comes to the knowledge of the Survey Officer that any boundary dispute exists, he shall notify the same to the Settlement Officer who shall proceed as follows". Then the section lays down how the Settlement Officer shall proceed to determine the boundaries in the case of different classes of boundary disputes. Sub-section (2) of that section provides that the order of the Settlement Officer determining any boundaries or any dispute under two of the clauses of that section shall be final. Section 154 of the Regulation provides that any matter respecting an order expressly declared by this Regulation to be final shall be excluded from the jurisdiction of a Civil Court. It appears to me that this appeal must succeed, on the ground that the defendant has failed to show that the order of the Deputy Commissioner deciding this boundary dispute was one which was final by reason of its having been passed under section 23. Copies of the orders passed do not show under what section the Deputy Commissioner purported to act. Further, it will appear that at the time when the order was passed no settlement operation was going on. Section 23 is a part of Chapter III of the Regulation, which deals with settlement and resumption. In order to give the Settlement Officer jurisdiction under that section, there must be a report to be made by a Survey Officer of the dispute that has come to his knowledge in the course of his survey. The Deputy Commissioner's powers as a Survey Officer are given him by section 138 of the Regulation. That section empowers the Chief Commissioner to invest any officer with all or any of the powers of a Settlement Officer during the currency of a settlement and further provides that if no Settlement Officer is appointed, the Deputy Commissioner shall have all the powers conferred by this Regulation on a Settlement Officer or Survey Officer. The learned Vakil for the respondent has not been able to show me that there is any section in the Regulation which empowers a Settlement Officer to settle disputes other than those which come to the knowledge of the Survey Officer in the course of a settlement proceeding. It will appear that the Regulation gives the Deputy Commissioner no power to settle a dispute, such as is the dispute in the present case, which arose long after the settlement proceedings and which came to the knowledge of the Deputy Commissioner on an application from one of the parties concerned. Taking this view, I must hold that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in dismissing the appeal before him on the ground that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction.

The appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for a decision on the merits. If the order of the Deputy Commissioner of the 8th July 1916 had been properly put in in evidence and the learned Subordinate Judge's attention had been drawn to it, it seems to me unlikely that the learned Judge would have held that the Civil Court's jurisdiction had been ousted.

As the appellants failed to do this they must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

REVENUE REVISION No. 24 OF 1918-19.

May 29, 1919.

KISHAN CHAND AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 56, 59, 60, 111, 112—Occupancy tenancy, alienation of—Agreement recorded in settlement record, whether can override provisions of Act—Intention of parties—Precedents, value of—Subordinate Courts, duty of.

The provisions of the Punjab Tenancy Act in regard to the alienation of, and succession to, an occupancy tenancy may be overridden by an agreement valid according to the provisions of sections 111 and 112 of the Act. [p. 533, col. 1.]

An agreement entered in a settlement record must be interpreted in a reasonable manner, and as a whole with due reference to all the provisions which it contains: it cannot be construed so as to give in perpetuity to an occupancy tenant, his heirs and assigns an unrestricted power of alienating his tenancy, unless such an intention is expressed in clear and unambiguous language, uncontradicted by other provisions such as those regarding the treatment of the tenancy on failure of heirs. [p. 533, col. 2.]

It is always open to the subordinate Revenue Courts to consider previous decisions of the highest Revenue Court which appear to be relevant to the decision of a case pending before them and it is desirable that they should follow such decisions, even when unpublished, where it is perfectly certain that the facts are in all respects similar and the issue is the same. But unpublished rulings must be treated with more caution than published rulings. [p. 534, col. 1.]

Revision from the order of the Commissioner, Jullundur, dated the 9th September 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Beechey and Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard the Counsel for the parties. The principal question is whether certain entries in successive administration papers of the village of Malout constitute an agreement whereby the applicants (who are occupancy tenants but not under section 5) are at liberty to alienate their occupancy rights without the previous consent in writing of the landlord, which section 56 of the Punjab Tenancy Act makes a normal condition of such alienations.

The entries in question are these. In clause No. IV of the administration paper of 1857 the following passage occurs:—

"The tenants cultivating the land for more than 10 years have been classed as qadim and those of less than 10 years' standing have been classed as jadid. The qadim tenants can either cultivate their tenancies themselves or can derive a profit by having them cultivated by others. They can sell or alienate their right of cultivation (haqq kasht). The jadid tenants cannot have their lands cultivated by others." This is the document upon which the names of some of the landlords appear and the natural construction to be put upon the passage cited is that it defines the conditions upon which tenants may, or may not, pass on the right of cultivation to others. The Settlement Officer's final robkar dated September 12th, 1858, uses similar language regarding the power of transfer of the right of cultivation (hoqq kasht). And in a later passage of the robkar the Settlement Officer goes on to say that the tenancy shall go to the landlords, in the absence of descendants or co-tenants, on the death of a tenant, whether qadim or jadid.

An entry similar to that of the robkar above cited is repeated in the administration paper of 1882, with a preamble setting forth that the entry is made in accordance with section 2 of the Tenancy Act of 1868 (which provided that entries in the record of a regular settlement sanctioned by the Local Government before 1871, regarding alienation of occupancy tenancies among other matters, were to be deemed to be agreements, remaining operative in spite of anything contained in the Act of 1868). In clause No. 19 of the administration paper of 1900-01 the following is the language employed: –

"The tenants of more than ten years' standing are classed as qadim and those of less than ten years' standing are classed as jadid in accordance with (the entries in past Records of Rights). The qadim tenant..... ...is entitled to sell or transfer his cultivator's right (haqq kashtkari)."

These successive entries have the superficial appearance of being virtually verbatim repetitions of one and the same set of statements. But it was a very different thing to be a tenant of ten years' standing in 1882, from being a tenant of ten years' standing in 1857. And it was a still more widely different thing to be a tenant of ten years' standing in 1900-01. Plainly, the drafters of the paper of 1882, and, still less, those of the paper of 1900-01, did not mean what they said when they assigned large powers and a special security and a special devolution of tenure to persons who had been occupying land for ten years at each of these two dates respectively. The laxity of the language employed shows that former entries were repeated without any serious consideration of the significance to be attached to them The later entries must be left entirely out of account in determining whether the occupancy tenants of the land now in dispute had or had not a right of alienating the tenancy, without the landlord's consent. If such a right exists, it can only exist in virtue of the entries of 1857 and 1858, authorizing the tenant, as successor-in-interest of persons who were "qadim" tenants at the date, to exercise it.

Throughout the proceedings in this case Hira v. Muhamadi (1) has been cited as an authority for the view that an entry in the administration paper of a village constituting an agreement under section 111 or 112 Punjab Tenancy Act is in force only for the term of the settlement. What the Chief Court in that case actually said was that, in the absence of an express intention to the contrary, agreements recorded in a settlement record are not intended to take effect after the expiry of the period of the settlement. The learned Judges cited in support of this view Fateh Bakhsh v. Lehna (2) (a case in which the agreement was expressly limited to the term of one settlement) and Musammat Narain Devi v. Hira (3) (where the record did not fulfil the conditions of section 112, Punjab Tenancy Act, because it was prepared after 1871).

I have examined a number of rulings, Ranjha v. Dhukar (4), Jowahir Singh v. Asa (5), Lehna v. Chetu (6), Phina Singh v.

Mahtab Khan (7), Jiwan v. Ibrahim (8), Puran v. Mamun (9), which show that, in the matter of alienation of or succession to occupancy tenancies, the Chief Court of the Punjab had not, prior to the ruling in Hira v. Muhamadi (1), dealt with the question of the validity of entries in a village administration paper, regarded as agreements under the Punjab Tenancy Act, after the expiry of the term of the settlement for which the administration paper was prepared. Nor has the unpublished ruling of the Financial Commissioner in Revision No. 150 of 1895-1899 any bearing upon this particular point; because in that case it was held that the agreement of 1857 had been repeated in the Settlement of 1882. All that emerges from all these rulings is this: that the provisions of the Tenancy Act in regard to the alienation of, and succession to, an occupancy tenancy may be overridden by an agreement valid according to the provisions of sections 111 and 112 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. They do not decide for how long a period such an agreement is to be regarded as remaining valid, or whether there is any term to its validity: and Hira v. Muhamadi (1) stands alone as an authority on this subject.

In Allah Ditta v. Achhru Mal (10) it was pointed out that an entry in an administration paper regarding a rule of succession to an occupancy tenancy may be viewed either as a record of custom or as an agreement under section 111 or 112, Punjab Tenancy Act. As a record of custom, no doubt such an entry would at all events purport to be of permanent significance and there would be nothing surprising or suspicious about it if it appeared to be peculiarly favourable to one of two parties concerned. But custom cannot override the provisions of the statutory law in regard to the alienation of, or succession to, an occupancy tenancy. As an agreement, the learned Chief Judge went on to point out, an entry of this kind must be interpreted in a reasonable way: and when it employs vague language (as, e.g., in saying that the succession should go to "bhaiya karabati"), a reasonable interpretation is to be put upon that language. Now, in order to enable this Court to accept the contention that the occupancy tenants were entitled to alienate in the present case without the landlord's consent, it would be necessary to hold that the language of the records of 1857-1858 was intended to make for an unlimited period the concession of complete liberty of alienation of their tenancies to all persons who had at that time held them for ten years: and that it was intended for an unlimited period to provide the holder for the time being of such a tenancy, whether a holder by succession or by purchase, with the power to defeat, by alienation, that right of the landlords, which is clearly set forth in the same record and almost in the next sentence, to succeed to the tenancy when descendants or co-tenants fail. Though an agreement of this one-sided character would have been less surprising in 1857, when tenants were possibly not easily obtained, than at a later date, it does not appear to this Court that this is a reasonable interpretation to attach to the records of 1857 and 1858: and there does appear, on the contrary, to be an irreconcilable contradiction between the interpretation for which the applicants contend and that clause in the Record of Rights which affirms the rights of the landlord in event of the failure of heirs.

Without, therefore, affirming that in the absence of an expressed intention no agreements recorded in a settlement record are intended to take effect after the expiry of the period of the settlement, I hold that such entries must be interpreted in a reasonable manner, and as a whole with due reference to all the provisions which they contain: and that they cannot be construed so as to give in perpetuity to an occupancy tenant, his heirs and assigns an unrestricted power of alienating his tenancy, unless such an intention be expressed in clear and unambiguous language, uncontradicted by other provisions, such as those regarding the treatment of a tenancy on failure of heirs. In the present case the view taken by the Commissioner, that the provisions of 1857 were an attempt to define in a rough manner some form of fixity of tenure, at a time when there was no statute law regulating the incidents of occupancy tenancy, appears to be the correct and reasonable view. They constitute what is technically an agreement under section 112, Punjab Tenancy Act. But the agreement does not bear the construction which it is sought to put upon it.

In the first ground of revision it is urged that it was the duty of the learned Commissioner to decide this case in accordance with the ruling of the Financial Commissioner in Revision Case No. 150 of 1898-1899. In that case it had been definitely held that the entries of 1857 were repeated in the record of 1832. In other respects the facts appear to have been similar to those of the present case: but, as is very natural in an unpublished ruling, they are not set forth with that fulness which can alone enable a Court to satisfy itself that it has before it a ruling applicable to the facts of the case which it is considering. It may be taken for granted that a Court whose decisions are binding upon subordinate Courts, will, when declaring a ruling upon a question of law upon which previous authoritative decisions are lacking, take steps to publish its decision. In such a case the facts will be set forth in full detail, so that subordinate Courts may find the guidance which they require. As I have pointed out above, the Financial Commissioner's decision in revision No. 150 of 1898-1899 did not purport to decide anything more than that an agreement regarding the right of alienation recorded in the Settlement Record of 1852 was valid as between the landlord and the occupancy tenant in 1898. From that view I do not dissent: but that is not the point upon which the decision of the present case turns. It is always open to the subordinate Revenue Courts to consider previous decisions of the highest Revenue Court which appear to be relevant to the decision of a case pending before them: and it is desirable that they should follow such decisions, even when unpublished, where it is perfectly certain that the facts are in all respects similar and the issue is the same. But there are obvious reasons for treating unpublished rulings with more caution than published rulings.

There appears to be no ground for the contention in head 6 of the petition of revision that the plaintiffs respondents were by their own acts and conduct estopped from questioning the alienation in dispute.

The application for revision is rejected.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

July 1, 1919.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Lord Buckmaster, Lord Dunedin.

Rani HEMANTA KUMARI DEBI—APPELLANT

THE MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARI COMPANY, LIMITED—RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 2 (7), 17, 49—Agreement to grant lease on happening of contingency, whether agreement to lease—Registration, whether necessary—"Decree" in s. 17 (2) (vi), meaning of—Agreement adjusting suit relating to matters beyond subject-matter of suit, whether compulsorily registrable—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 375—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3.

An agreement that upon the happening of a contingent event a lease will be granted is not an agreement to lease within the terms of section 2 (7) of the Registration Act, and does not, therefore, require registration under section 17 (1) (d) of the Act. To fall within these sections a lease or an agreement to lease must be a document which effects an actual demise and operates as a lease in præsenti [p 538, col 2.]

Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra, 6 Ind. Cas. 443; 37 C 803; 14 C. W N. 874, approved.

The word "decree" in section 17 (2) (vi) of the Registration Act must be construed in connection with the purpose of the statute, which was to provide for the public registration of documents. It is not confined to so much of a decree as may be operative [p. 538, col. 2; p 539, cols 1 & 2.]

Where, therefore, an agreement adjusting a suit went beyond the subject-matter of the suit by providing that in a certain contingency lands not included in the suit should be leased, and such agreement was recorded in a decree framed under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882:

Held, (1) that the agreement did not fall within section 17 (1) (b of the Registration Act and that though it would otherwise fall under section 17 (1) (b of the Act it was excepted by the words "any decree of a Court" in sub-section (2) of the section; [p. 538, col. 2; p. 539, cols 1 & 2.]

(2) that even though the decree might be incapable of execution as a decree outside the lands of the suit, it might still be received in evidence of the agreement which it embodied. [p. 540, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, (Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Beachcroft), dated the 6th July 1914, reported as 28 Ind. Cas. 879, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia.

FACTS.—In 1895 the present appellant, Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi, instituted two suits to recover possession of certain lands as reformations in situ of her zemindari. Of these suits No. 72 was against the Government, and No. 73 against Robert Watson and Co. Both suits were contested, but on the 20th September 1897 the latter suit was settled by a compromise, the terms of which were embodied in a decree of the same date. Its eighth paragraph was in the following words :—

"If in future by the final adjudication of the Court the plaintiff obtains a decree against Government in Suit No. 72 of 1895, which the plaintiff has instituted in this Court against the Government and which is now pending, for getting possession of plaintiff's 2 annas 15 gundas share of the contiguous accretions, to the south of the lands claimed mentioned above of the said joteshai appertaining to my zemindari right and mentioned in the compromise petition, then the plaintiff and the heirs and representatives of the plaintiff and her husband shall grant jote settlement to the defendants Sahibs upon the conditions mentioned above of the lands falling in the plaintiff's 2 annas 15 gundas share out of (the whole of) the said decretal lands for the purpose of making cultivations, etc., and shall continue to realize from the said Sahibs and their heirs and representatives the jamma that would remain as balance after deducting collection charges at the rate at which Government would allow collection expenses from the jamma that would be fixed by Government from time to time according to jamabandi on the occasion of assessment of rent of the said land during the term of each successive settlement granted by Government."

The lands which were the subject-matter of the suit (No. 72 of 1895) against the Government were entirely outside the scope of the suit against the Company, and the former suit was finally decided in favour of the appellant by a decree of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, dated the 4th April 1906.

In 1909 the plaintiff Company (respondents), who were the successors-in-interest of Robert Watson and Co., instituted the present suit against the appellant for specific performance of the agreement contained in paragraph 8 of the compromise above recited. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that the alleged agreement was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, and that anyhow it was of such a nature that a Court of Equity would not enforce it.

The Subordinate Judge of Nadia, who tried the suit, held that in making a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise, the Court acted without jurisdiction so far as such decree affected the agreement relating to property outside the scope of the suit: and that such decree was "a nullity" in so far as the agreement was concerned. But he also held that the agreement itself did not require registration, as in his opinion it did not of itself create any interest in the property: he, therefore, gave effect to it and decreed the suit.

Defendant appealed to the High Court, but the learned Judges of that Court dismissed his appeal, though on different grounds, Mookerjee, J., holding that though the compromise was not exempt from registration under section 17 of the Registration Act, it had rightly been received in evidence in proof of the agreement to lease, not being a present demise: while Beachcroft, J., held that the petition of compromise on which the decree was based was not itself an agreement to lease, but merely a statement to the Court that the parties had made such an agreement, and that the proceeding of the Court did not require registration. The material portion of his judgment was as follows :—

"I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, though my reasons for considering the compromise petition and the decree in Suit No. 73 of 1895 admissible in evidence differ somewhat from those given by my learned brother. The view, which I take, is that the petition was not an agreement to lease and, therefore, section 49 of the Registration Act can have no application. It was a petition presented on behalf of the then plaintiff, defendant in the present suit. It is headed 'the petition of the plaintiff Rani Hemanta Kumari, and runs as follows:—'Being apprehensive as to the future result of the said Suit No. 73 of 1895 which I have instituted in this Court against Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., Ld., for the lands mentioned in the schedule and which is still pending, now with the consent of both of us this suit is compromised according to the manner mentioned below * * *.' Then follow the terms set out in 8 paragraphs. The effect of these terms is that the plaintiff's title as proprietor to the lands in suit is recognised, the Company will be given a lease of those lands on certain terms, and also be given a lease of the lands, the subject-matter of Suit No. 72, in case of a successful termination of that suit against Government. Then follows the prayer, 'Hence by filing this solehnama with the consent of the defendant Sahibs it is prayed that after going through the above statements the present suit may be decided in terms of the aforesaid terms'. Then follow the schedule of the boundaries and the signatures of the managing agents and the Pleader of Messrs. Watson & Co. as consenting to the petition.

"To my mind this simply amounts to a statement to the Court by the plaintiff that the parties have come to certain terms, the accuracy of which statement is accepted by the managing agents and Pleader of the Company, accompanied by a prayer that the suit may be disposed of accordingly. The document itself is not an agreement to lease but a statement of fact, accompanied by a prayer, in a petition to the Court.

"If the terms had been stated orally to the Court, the Court would have been bound to make a record of the whole of them, under section 375 of Act XIV of 1882, though the decree of the Court would have been final only so far as it related to the subject-matter of the particular suit. For the convenience of the Court or for the purpose of ensuring accuracy, the terms were put on paper, but that fact does not alter the real nature of the petition, or convert what is really a prayer to the Court into an agreement to lease.

"The decree was equally admissible in evidence. As already remarked, the Court was bound to record the whole of the terms of the compromise. The promise to give a lease of the land, which was the subject-matter of Suit No. 72, was part of the consideration to the Company for consenting to a decree in Suit No. 73. If any authority is required for the proposition that the decree would be evidence, it may be found in the case of Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1). The Privy Council remarked: 'If the parties, after agreeing to settle the suit of 1885 on the footing that they were each to take a half share of the lands involved in that suit, and also a half share of the lands now in dispute, had informed the learned Judge that these were the terms of the compromise and had invited him by reason of such compromise to dispose of the conclusions of the suit of 1885, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the order of the learned Judge, if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise, would have been judicial evidence, available to the appellant, that the respondents had agreed to transfer to her the moiety of the land now in dispute.' That language applies to the circumstances of the present case.

"Section 17 of the Indian Registration Act does not to my mind create any real difficulty. It is true that the documents, referred to in clauses (e) to (n) of that section are excepted only from the provisions of clauses (b) and (c) and not from the provisions of clauses (a) and (d); but that is because the documents enumerated in clauses (e) to (n) come within the description of documents in clauses (b) and (c) only and not within the description of documents in clauses (a) and (d)."

Hence this appeal.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and Dube, for the Appellant.—The petition of compromise was an agreement to lease, and not having been registered, was inadmissible in evidence—section 49 of the Registration Act. "Lease" includes "agreement to lease"—section 2 (7). Registration of leases is compulsory under section 17 (1) (d).

Section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that when a suit is compromised, the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final. The property in question was outside the scope of Suit No. 72 and the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the decree in regard of it was a nullity: Fajaleh Ali Miah v. Kamaruddin (2).

Reference was also made to Sarat Chandra Ghose v. Sham Chand Singh Roy (3).

The agreement to lease contemplated in section 17 of the Act need not operate as a present demise. The decision in Satyendra Nath Bose v. Anil Chandra Ghosh (4) is erroneous. The contrary view has been taken in several other cases: — Hurjivan Virji v. Jamsetji Nowroji (5), Purmanandas v. Dharsey Virji (6), Syed Sufdar Raza v. Amzad Ali (7).

Reliance cannot be placed on sub-section (2) of section 17, which excepts from registration "any decree of a Court". To fall within that exception the decree must be one which the Court had power to make under the Civil Procedure Code. That part of the decree which related to the agreement was not within the competence of the Court under section 375. The test is whether the decree-holder can execute it: if he could, there is no need for this suit for specific performance. The exact point did not arise in Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1) and it was not necessary to decide it: section 17 (2) was not referred to. The exception created by that sub-section applies only to "proper" judicial proceedings. Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (8).

Even if the Court has discretion to decree specific performance, it would be inequitable to do so under the circumstances of this case: the agreement of compromise was made on the understanding that Robert Watson & Co. would not assist Government against appellant in the other suit, but as a matter of fact they did assist Government.

Mr. E. B. Raikes (with him Mr. De Gruyther, K. C.), for the Respondents.—The decree in the 1895 suit was a declaratory decree, and was within the jurisdiction of the Court making it. That decree can be used as evidence of the agreement, even though it cannot be put in execution. The matter is concluded by Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1), where the Board fully considered the effect of section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The agreement for a lease which requires registration must be an actual demise in praesenti which operates as a lease: it does not include an agreement to demise upon the happening of a contingent event.

He relied on Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal (9), Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra (10), Raghubans Mani Singh v. Mahabir Singh (11), Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Narayana Reddi (12).

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The real question on this appeal is whether an agreement made in writing between Robert Watson & Company, Limited, and the appellant, incorporated in a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia but not registered, is admissible in evidence. The appellant contends that it is not, and the respondents assert that it is.

The determination of the question depends mainly upon the construction of the Registration Act of 1908, but before considering the terms of this statute it is desirable to state shortly the facts which have led up to the dispute. In 1895 the appellant instituted two suits in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia, the one against the Government (No. 72 of 1895) and the other against Robert Watson & Company, Limited, being No. 73 of 1895. The object of each of these suits was to obtain possession of land claimed by the appellant. The land had been diluviated owing to encroachments of the river Padma and had then subsequently re-appeared and formed the areas which were the subject of controversy. The Suit No. 73 of 1895 was compromised, the terms of the compromise being that Robert Watson & Company, Limited, were to retain possession of the land they occupied, but that the ownership of the appellant was to be recognised and Messrs. Watson & Company's possession was to be upon certain agreed terms as to payment of rent and otherwise. It was also provided that if in Suit No. 72 the appellant succeeded in obtaining a decree against the Government, she should grant a jote settlement of the lands in such suit to Robert Watson & Company upon the same conditions as those agreed with regard to the land that was in their possession. This agreement was reduced into writing, a petition of compromise based upon it was filed by the appellant in Suit No. 7.{, and on the 20th September 1897 judgment was given in terms of the compromise and a decree was drawn up in pursuance of the judgment on the same date. This decree recites the claims in the suit and the petition for compromise and grants a decree in the terms of the compromise, which are then set out in full.

The appellant pursued her claim against the Government and the litigation proceeded through all the Courts until by His Majesty's Order in Council of the 4th April 1906 the appellant was declared entitled to the land. Meanwhile, the rights of Messrs. Watson & Company had been sold to Messrs. Crawford and Gregson, and they, on the 3rd December 1906, conveyed all their rights to the present respondents. The appellant refused, for various reasons which are not now material, to recognise the obligations into which she had entered by the compromise to grant a jote settlement of the lands the subject of Suit No. 72, and the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen were instituted by the respondents claiming specific performance of the agreement in this respect.

Apart from matters which need not now be considered, the appellant's defence rested upon the ground that the compromise could not be given in evidence, firstly, because, treated as an ordinary contract, it had not been registered, and secondly, if it were regarded as a decree, the decree was inoperative in relation to the lands in dispute, as they did not relate to the suit in which the decree sanctioning the compromise had been made.

With regard to the first, the Registration Act of 1908 provides that "lease" includes an agreement to lease, and by section 17 enacts that leases must be registered, the penalty for non-registration being imposed by section 49, which provides that, if not registered, no document shall affect immoveable property which it comprises or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property. If the document in question can be regarded as a lease within the meaning of this definition it could not be received in evidence. Their Lordships are of opinion that it cannot be so regarded. An "agreement for a lease," which a lease is by the statute declared to include, must, in their Lordships' opinion, be a document which effects an actual demise and operates as a lease. They think that Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra (10) correctly stated the interpretation of section 17 in this respect. The present agreement is an agreement that, upon the happening of a contingent event at a date which was indeterminate and, having regard to the slow progress of Indian litigation, might be far distant, a lease would be granted. Until the happening of that event it was impossible to determine whether there would be any lease or not. Such an agreement does not, in their Lordships' opinion, satisfy the meaning of the phrase "agreement for a lease," which, in the context where it occurs and in the statute in which it is found, must in their opinion relate to some document that creates a present and immediate interest in the land. So far, therefore, as this decision depends upon the need for registration of the document as a lease, the Registration Act places no obstacle in the respondents' way. By section 17 (1) (b), however, it is also provided that other non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100, and upwards, to or in immoveable property, need registration. But this is subject to the exception provided in sub-section (2) of section 17, which states that "Nothing in clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) applies to," among other things,

"any decree or order of a Court." If, therefore, the decree in the present case can be regarded as a decree within the meaning of that exception, there is nothing in the Registration Act to affect the matter. It is urged that it cannot be so regarded for this reason, that by section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) it is provided:—

"If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final, so far as relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction."

The terms of this section need careful scrutiny. In the first place, it is plain that the agreement or compromise, in whole and not in part, is to be recorded, and the decree is then to confine its operation to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement. Their Lordships are not aware of the exact system by which documents are recorded in the Courts in India, but a perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of this section would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit, or it could introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree; but in either case, although the operative part of the decree would be properly confined to the actual subject-matter of the then existing litigation, the decree taken as a whole would include the agreement. This in fact is what the decree did in the present case. It may be that as a decree it was incapable of being executed outside the lands of the suit, but that does not prevent it being received in evidence of its contents.

Turning now to the Registration Act of 1908, and considering the meaning of the word "decree" in section 17 (2) (vi), this must be read in connection with the purpose of the statute, which is to provide a method of public registration of documents, and there is, therefore, no reason why a limit should be imposed upon the meaning of the word so as to confine it to the operative portion only of the decree.

This conclusion is in agreement with the view expressed by Lord Watson in Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1) on a point in close resemblance to that raised in the present appeal. In that case a suit was originally raised for possession of certain land, and certain other lands were expressly excluded from the ambit of the claim. That suit was compromised by two documents, the one being styled a razinamah, or agreement of compromise, and the other an agreement of union. The agreement of union, which related to the lands outside the suit as well as those within, was not registered and was not submitted to the Subordinate Judge before whom the litigation depended. The razinamah was produced in the suit on a petition asking:—"That a decree may be passed in accordance with the razinamah which they have presented under section 375 of the Civil Procedure Act, after settling." It contained, in the first place, a detailed description of the lands which were in controversy in the suit of 885, and stated that the parties had agreed to share these lands in certain proportions. It also independently set out the effect of the agreement as to the lands outside the suit, and described them in a schedule named Schedule D, but the order made did not include and had no reference to these lands. The parties acted upon the entire agreement, and in a subsequent dispute as to the land outside the suit of 1885 the question arose as to whether the razinamah could be given in evidence. This Board decided that, so far as it was acted upon by the learned Judge, it was properly admissible, but that as the order made had not in fact referred to or narrated the terms of the compromise, the razinamah being unregistered could not be received in evidence. But in expressing the judgment of the Board upon this point Lord Watson made the following statement:—

"If the parties, after agreeing to settle the suit of 1885 on the footing that they were each to take a half-share of the lands involved in that suit, and also a half-share of the lands now in dispute, had informed the learned Judge that these were the terms of the compromise, and had invited him, by reason of such compromise, to dispose of the conclusions of the suit of 1885, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the order of the learned Judge, if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise, would have been judicial evidence, available to the appellant, that the respondents had agreed to transfer to her the moiety of land now in dispute. But their Lordships are unable to find that any such course was taken, either in the razinamah or in the judicial order which gave effect to it. The razinamah merely referred, by way of remark, to the lands now in dispute; and the Judge was only asked to give effect to a compromise which related to the lands then in dispute before him. This order, accordingly, merely concerns the latter, and has no reference whatever to the lands described in Schedule D of the razinamah. So far as regarded these lands the compromise was not submitted to the learned Judge, but was deliberately left by the parties to stand upon their unregistered agreement of union."

Section 375 and its effect were clearly under the consideration of the Board, and the judgment thus expressed showed that, merely regarding the question as a question of evidence and not as to the effect of the decree on lands outside the subject of the suit, such a document as that in the present case when incorporated in a decree was clearly admissible as judicial evidence. Though this judgment does not in terms refer to section 17 (2) (vi) of the Registration Act, it gives full effect to the opinion that their Lordships have formed as to its interpretation. The decree in the present case is a decree which makes no difference whatever in its language between one part and another part of the compromise; it incorporates the whole; and it is, in other words, a decree which, though affecting the lands in the suit as a decree, incorporates the whole of the agreement which led to the suit being compromised. For this reason their Lordships think that the registration of the agreement was unnecessary and that the decree is sufficient evidence of its terms.

The learned Subordinate Judge, before whom this matter was first heard, treated the decree as a nullity and based his judgment in favour of the respondents upon the view that, when once the agreement was held not to be a lease, there was nothing to compel its registration. He regarded the document as outside the provisions of section 17 (1) (b). Their Lordships are unable to take this view. They think the document did purport to create a contingent right or interest in immoveable property, and they do not think that in treating the decree pro tanto as a nullity the learned Subordinate Judge has given effect to the difference between receiving the decree in evidence as a decree and executing its terms as against property outside the suit. Mr. Justice Beachcroft in the High Court took the view on this point which their Lordships think accurate, and they are of opinion for the reasons they have given that the appellant's contention cannot succeed.

The appellant further raised a question relating to the circumstances under which the document was executed. She said the agreement was come to upon the basis that Watson & Company should not assist the Government in their defence of the appellant's suit and that they did in fact render active assistance, and thereby rendered it inequitable on their part to ask specific performance of an arrangement which was only come to on the terms that such assistance should not be afforded. Upon this point it is important to observe, in the first place, that if this really were a term of the arrangement, it is not to be found in the agreement; and secondly, that, if it affects the contract, it must affect it in toto, and that it is impossible for the appellant, having accepted and received the advantage of the compromise so far as it related to the lands in the suit, now to resist its effect upon the other portion of the lands to which it related.

For these reasons their Lordships think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Shaikh Pokan v. Rajani Kamal Chakravarty, 50 Ind. Cas. 285; 23 C. W. N. 614, distinguished.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Dacca, dated the 2nd October 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Narainganj, dated the 28th February 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.—The question for decision is whether the defendant No. 1 is a raiyat or a mere labourer or servant. The Court of first instance, upon the construction of the Burga lease, came to the conclusion that the defendant had been let into the land as a raiyat and not as a mere labourer and held that the plaintiff was not entitled to khas possession. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge, putting a different construction on the lease, allowed the plaintiff recovery of khas possession. The lease is before your Lordship, and your Lordship will find that the terms of the lease make it clear that the rights of the defendant under the lease are not merely those of a hired labourer or servant, that the contract between the parties was one of letting out the land for the purpose of cultivation. The lower Appellate Court has, therefore, erroneously held that the defendant did not acquire the rights of a raiyat in the land but that he was a mere servant or labourer under the plaintiff.

Babu D. N. Chakrabarty (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Chakravarty), for the Respondent.—Upon the construction of the lease the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the contract between the parties was one of service, and that the defendant, not having acquired the right of a raiyat in the land in question, is liable to ejectment. Burgadars ordinarily do not acquire any interest in the land. Their position is that of mere labourers or servants. The terms of the lease show that plaintiff did not intend to give him any interest in the land. By virtue of the lease the defendant cannot claim to have acquired the rights of a raiyat. Refers to Shaikh Pokan v. Rajani Kumal Chakravarty (1) and Kade Mandal v. Ahadali Molla (2).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of khas possession. The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that the defendant was an occupancy raiyat of the land and could not be ejected. The lower Appellate Court held that the defendant's position was that of a labourer or servant under the plaintiff and decreed the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge in deciding the appeal also held that if it could be found that the defendant came into possession of the land as a tenant, he was holding the land as a raiyat and was, therefore, not liable to be evicted from the land. The defendant in this case is admittedly a settled raiyat in the village and consequently, as held by the lower Courts, if he came into possession of the land as a tenant he at once acquired the right of occupancy and was not liable to ejectment. The document under which the plaintiff came into possession is a registered kabuliyat in the following terms:—

"To

The worthy of remembrances Srijukta Brahmamayi Barmani, wife of Ram Bux Roy, inhabitant of Balla, Thana and Sub-Registry Monohardi, District Dacca, by caste Kshetria, occupation Talukdari and Mahajani.

I, Sheikh Mansur, son of late Sheikh Sudan, by race Musulman, occupation cultivation, inhabitant of Majidia, Thana and Sub Registry Monohardi, District Dacca, execute this Burga kabuliyat for a term of eleven months to the following effect:—

That you are the superior malik of the land described in the schedule below,

(1) 50 Ind. Cas. 285; 23 C. W. N. 614.
(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 594; 14 C. W. N. 629.

situate in Mouza Bir Majdia, generally known as Mouza Majidia, being the Taluk Sahebram Rai Ranjit, appertaining to the Zamindari Hissya 9 annas of Purgana Bhowal, under Police Station and Sub-Registry Monohardi, District Dacca, and you, having purchased this land together with other lands at a public auction sale and held in Execution Case No. 116 of 1914 of the fourth Court of Munsif at Narayangunge and having taken possession thereof by taking sale certificate, have been the malik thereof. As I applied to take Burga settlement of the said land in half bhag, you have granted my application and have agreed to grant me Burga settlement of the said land for a term of eleven months commencing from the month of Baisakh and ending in the month of Falgun this year. I, therfore, execute this Burga kabuliyat for a term of eleven months and promise hereby that, keeping the metes and boundaries of the under-described land intact, I will with due care plant, sow crops and reap them and whatever crops I will grow, I will take to your house or in the house of any other person as you may order, and after threshing the same I will take the half share thereof to your house and give it to you to your satisfaction and I shall take the remaining half share of the crops as my remuneration. I will give the seeds that may be required for sowing the land and I will give you a half share of the Kuts to your satisfaction. I shall take advice from you as to which crop should be sown in which season, and sow crops accordingly. I will give up the land without notice, on the expiry of the term. I shall not be at liberty to raise any objection on the ground of cultivation or possession, and if I raise any, it will be disallowed by Court. Further if I do not sow or reap crops in proper time and if you suffer any loss for any act done by me, then I shall pay to you Rs. 48 on account of compensation, and if I do not do so, then you shall be competent to institute suit and realize the said amount by taking out execution of the decree (passed in that suit). To this effect I execute this Burga kabuliyat for a term of eleven months, out of my own will and in sound state of my senses."

The learned Subordinate Judge has held on this agreement that the defendant acquired no tenancy right in the land. I am unable to agree with him. He cites in support of his decision the case of Kale Mandal v. Ahadali Molla (2). But in that case, though it was held that a suit against a Burgadar for recovery of the price of the produce was maintainable in a Small Cause Court, it threw very little light on the circumstances which distinguish a Burgadar who is a tenant and a Burgadar who is a servant. In that case the terms of the contract were not proved and the finding that the Burgadar was a servant was based to some extent on the custom of the Pabna District. My attention has been drawn to the decision of this Court in the case of Shaikh Pokan v. Rajani Kamal Chakravarty (1), where it was held that the kabuliyat which was set out at length in the judgment was a contract for service and was not a document creating a tenancy. But there is a marked difference between the contract in that case and in the present case. Here there is no reference to agricultural labour and by the document, the settlement of the land for a term was created. In the case cited, the grantor of the kabuliyat had a right to decide where crops were to be grown and the grantee was declared unable to grow any crops according to his own will. Here the kabuliyat only provides that the executant thereof shall take advice, which is a very different matter from taking an order. Finally, there is a provision to give up the land without notice on the expiry of the term. On the document itself, I would hold that the contract was one of letting out the land for cultivation and was not a mere contract for service. On this construction of the document and the findings of the lower Courts the plaintiff could have no right to eject the defendant.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is decreed, the judgment and the decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the Munsif dismissing the suit restored.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal decreed.

Landlord and tenant—Agricultural holding, whether transferable—Tenant right, transfer of—Transferee, position of—Transfer by limited owner, effect of.

An agricultural holding is a personal right, not transferable unless expressly declared to be so by contract or by statute. In Berar there is no law which permits an annual tenant of an agricultural holding to transfer his right. [p. 543, col. 2.]

Under the Berar Land Revenue Code a tenant right is heritable and transferable as "property", but a transferee of a tenant right by contract who does not make any fresh contract with the landlord obtains only the right, title and interest of the transferor, and if the transfer is from a woman with a limited interest, his right to occupy the land would come to an end on her death or re-marriage. [p. 544, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 121 of 1915, dated the 20th September 1915, arising out of Civil Suit No. 24 of 1914, decided by the Subordinate Judge, Malkapur, on the 22nd April 1915.

The Hon'ble Sir Bipin Krishna Bose and Mr. Lal Mohan Vivian Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the owner of a Jagir in Berar. The defendant is in possession of land which was formerly occupied by a tenant named Ananda. This tenant died a few years ago, and on the 29th May 1912 his widow, Musammat Lakshmi, executed a document whereby she purported to sell the tenant right to the defendant. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to evict the defendant as a trespasser. The defendant pleaded that Ananda was the holder of a hereditary and permanent tenant right, which his widow had inherited from him and transferred to the defendant, who, therefore, claimed to be a permanent tenant and, as such, not liable to be evicted. This original pleading was further evolved into the plea that Ananda was an ante-Ijara tenant.

The Courts below found that an ante-Ijara tenancy was not proved, but that by reason of the antiquity of the tenancy no satisfactory evidence of its commencement and term is forthcoming. They ruled, therefore, that the tenancy was permanent, by which I understand them to have applied section 78 (2) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, and to have held that the term of the tenancy is co-extensive with the duration of the plaintiff's Jagir as such. The Courts below have further found that the tenant right is alienable and declaring the defendant to be a permanent tenant have dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has, therefore, made this second appeal. Two main grounds are put forward on her behalf, namely—

(1) that the tenant right was not alienable; and

(2) that in any case the defendant has only purchased the limited interest of Musammat Lakshmi.

The learned Advocate for the appellant felt himself unable to press the first of these grounds in the face of the decision of Mittra, Additional Judicial Commissioner, in Bhiwaji v. Tukaram (1), in which the same learned Advocate had successfully sustained an opposite contention. For that reason I abstain from deciding the point in this case. I must confess to feeling considerable doubt, with all due respect, to the correctness of the assumption that because there is no law in Berar which expressly forbids an annual tenant from transferring his rights, therefore, such rights are transferable. There is abundant authority for the view that an agricultural holding is a personal right, not transferable, unless expressly declared to be so by contract or by statute. Therefore it seems to me that it would be more correct to say that there is no law in Berar which permits an annual tenant of an agricultural holding to transfer his rights. Under the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1859, which was the predecessor of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1883, inter alia, it was generally held that an agricultural tenancy was not transferable. No doubt section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which was applied to Berar in 1907, enacts that property of any kind may be transferred. But the Act avoids any definition of the important word property, and, as pointed out by Dr. Gour at page 121 of the 4th Edition of his work on the Transfer of Property, it is necessary to construe the word with circumspection. A wife is the property of her husband in the eye of the law, but she is not ordinarily transferable. However there is a good deal to be said on the other side, and as the contention is not pressed before me I see no reason to come to any finding which might possibly be in conflict with the published ruling.

For the purposes of this appeal, therefore, I will assume, without any decision of my own on the point, that the tenant right of the late Ananda was heritable and transferable in the ordinary way. The provisions of the Berar Code are not very clear in their applicability to tenancies in alienated land as compared with tenancies and other forms of holdings in unalienated land. No doubt some attempt is made in section 222 to set out a general rule; but section 224 provides exceptions thereto which are rendered somewhat vague by use of the words "as far as may be." Moreover, is a tenant in an alienated village included in the category of "holders of alienated land", or is he a tenant from a holder of such land? For if sections 72 and 73, while applying to the alienee from Government, do not apply to his tenants, then the heritability and alienability of an Ijara tenancy becomes extremely doubtful. Section 223 contains express provisions for the protection of an ante-alienation tenant; and that suggests that post-alienation tenants are left to make their own terms with their landlords and receive no statutory protection independently of their contracts. But I am inclined to hold that Chapter VII of the above Code is one of general applicability, and that section 78, with which that Chapter opens, applies as much to tenants in alienated villages as to tenants in unalienated lands. Therefore, I accept the finding of the Courts below that the tenant right of Ananda was of the kind provided for by section 75 (2) of the Berar Code.

We have it, then, that Ananda held a tenant right which was heritable and transferable, for a term co-existent with the duration of the plaintiff's Jagir as such. But section 72, which deals with the devolution and transfer of occupancy of unalienated land, can only apply, as far as may be, to a tenant from a holder of alienated land like the plaintiff. The Deputy Commissioner can "recognize" heirs and transferees of occupancies held directly from Government. But, obviously, he cannot take that course in regard to the tenants of a private proprietor. Therefore, we can only apply section 72 to such cases as the present by holding that the tenant right is heritable and transferable as "property." The difference is very substantial. Each transferee of an occupancy who is recognized by the Deputy Commissioner becomes a fresh occupant, and holds with all the rights of an original occupant. It does not matter in his case that the occupant for whom he has been substituted was a woman with a limited interest, or the last of a line of holders, on whose death the occupancy would have lapsed. The new occupant becomes the first of a fresh line of devolution until another transfer again starts yet another line of proprietor and successors. But a transferee of a tenant right by contract who does not make any fresh contract with the landlord, obtains only the right, title and interest of his transferor. In the present case, following the assumption already made as to the tenant right of Ananda being heritable, it was inherited by his widow Lakshmi Bai. The defendant bought the right, title and interest of Lakshmi Bai, and nothing more. He stands in the shoes of his vendor, and his right to occupy the land comes to an end on her death or re-marriage, I, therefore, modify the decrees of the Courts dismissing the suit by adding the words "became the defendant as the transferee of the right, title and interest of the tenant Laxmi Bai, widow of Ananda, is entitled to occupy the land as a tenant of the plaintiff until the death or re-marriage of his vendor, the said Lakshmi Bai."

I make no order as to the costs of this appeal. In the Courts below costs will be paid as ordered by the lower Appellate Court.

Landlord and tenant—"Ijara," meaning of—Lessor and lessee, rights of, inter se—English Law, principles of, whether applicable Sub-lease granted in contravention of provisions of lease, validity of Re-entry, right of, when can be exercised.

The word "ijara" has no settled meaning which would make its use inconsistent with the interest of a tenure-holder. The usual meaning of "ijara" is a lease for a term. [p. 546, col. 1.]

The general rights between the lessor and the lessee as laid down in the English Law would govern cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, unless that Act contains anything to the contrary. [p. 546, col. 1.]

Where the terms of a lease give the lessor a right of re-entry in case of a breach of covenant in the lease, unless and until that right is exercised, a sub-lease granted in breach of the terms of the lease would operate as valid [p 545, col. 2.]

Plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of khas possession of land, basing their title on a raiyati lease granted by persons who had obtained a lease from the superior landlord for six years and by which they covenanted with their lessor not to assign, underlet or part with any part of the parganah in which the land in suit was situate:

Held, that the plaintiffs' raiyati lease, even if granted in breach of a covenant in the head lease, was not void but voidable at the option of the head lessor and that a third party could not challenge the rights of the plaintiffs, who were entitled to succeed on the basis of their raiyati lease. [p. 545, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Tipperah, dated the 5th of December 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Kasba, dated the 25th of September 1916.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra, for the Appellants.

Babu Upendra Kumar Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants sued the defendants-respondents for recovery of khas possession of certain land upon establishment of their raiyati title thereto. The plaintiffs base their title on a raiyati lease of the disputed land granted to them by certain persons who obtained a lease for a term of six years of the Pergannah Gangamandal to which the land in suit appertains. This lease was granted to them by the Official Receiver of the estate. By this lease the lessees covenanted with the lessor, among other things, that they "will not, save and except for the purpose of granting dur ijara settlements to dur ijaradars or other tenants or persons by means of which the rents of the said Pergannah or the greater portion thereof may be collected as heretofore, assign, underlet or otherwise part with the possession of the said Pergannah or any part thereof and will not enter into any partnership with any other person or persons in respect of the said Pergannah or any part thereof or charge or assign the lessees' interest under those presents or any part thereof without the previous consent of the lessor." The lower Courts have held that the lease to the plaintiffs in breach of that covenant is void and consequently the plaintiffs have no title on which they can support an action in ejectment.

On behalf of the appellants-plaintiffs it is contended that this lease, even if granted in breach of covenant in the head lease, is not void but voidable at the option of the head lessor, and that a third party cannot challenge the rights of the plaintiffs. This contention seems to be sound. The terms of the head lease give the lessor a right of re-entry, and until this right is exercised, the sub-lease granted to the lessees would appear to be valid. In Foa's Landlord and Tenant, 5th Edition, it is stated that "a very common covenant in leases is one by which the lessee undertakes not to assign or underlet or part with the possession of the premises demised to him, at least without the license or consent of the lessor." "When this covenant exists, the landlord's consent must be obtained before an assignment or underlease may be made; nor will the mere fact that the landlord has not objected at the time to the assignee taking possession, be held to amount to such consent. But the assignment itself will not, unless the lease be expressly made to be determinable upon its taking place and the lessor determine it accordingly, be invalid without such consent." Here though the lease is made determinable upon the taking place of the breach, the lessor has not determined it and the lease granted to the plaintiffs has not become invalid.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this is authority under the English Law and the present case is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is nothing in that Act which goes against the principle there laid down, and the general rights between the lessor and the lessee would govern cases under Bengal Tenancy Act, unless that Act contains anything to the contrary.

It is further contended that the lessors of the plaintiffs, being ijaradars, were not tenure holders and had no interest in the property, that they were farmers of rent and that they were, as represented by the learned Vakil for the respondents, only dignified tahsildars.

For the appellants, it is pointed out that there is no mention in the lease that the interest created is that of an ijaradar. This point appears to me to be of no importance. By implication the lessees are described as ijaradars, as under the covenant, they have authority enabling them to grant dur ijara leases to dur ijaradars and none but ijaradars can create a dur ijara interest. But there is no settled meaning of the word "ijara" which would make it inconsistent with the interest of a tenure holder. The usual meaning of "ijara" is a lease for a term. Though the interest of an ijaradar may be limited to collection of rents, it cannot be held to be so in the present case. It is stated in the lease that "he, the lessor, doth hereby demise and lease unto the lessees all that Pergannah Gangamondal, etc." This surely grants to the lessees a greater interest than that of a mere rent collector. Though the subsequent covenant to some extent restricts his rights, the original nature of the interest has not altered from that of a lease holder to that of rent collector. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the suit solely on this issue, the first Court stating that "as the plaintiffs' suit fails on the decision of these two issues, no further evidence has been recorded".

It is, therefore, necessary that the case should be re-heard on the other points that arise. I accordingly decree this appeal, set aside the decrees of both the lower Courts and remand the case to the Court of the Munsif at Kasba for a re-hearing and decision of the other points in this case. Costs will abide the result.

An agreement made at the time of effecting an adoption by a widow under which the adoptee assents to his adoption, but the vesting of the estate in him is postponed till after the death of the adopter, is binding upon the adoptee, and it is not open to him to contest an alienation made by the adopter. [p. 548, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Tatta.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff appellant claimed to have been taken in adoption by his uncle's widow, Tharibai (respondent No. 2), and sued to set aside a sale of a house made by her in favour of the respondent No. 1 and to recover its possession.

The defence raised was that the adoption was invalid, that in any case it was made subject to an agreement between the appellant and respondent No. 2, by which the vesting of the estate in the former was postponed till after the death of the latter and that, therefore, he was not competent to dispute the validity of the alienation.

The Subordinate Judge held that the adoption was proved and valid, but he decided that the agreement made at the time of effecting adoption precluded appellant from disputing the alienation. That being so, he did not decide whether the sale was one justified by legal necessity, as further pleaded in the written statement. He, accordingly, dismissed the suit with costs. The appeal raises the issue whether the lower Court erred in holding that the agreement relied upon was binding on the appellant and barred him from disputing the alienation.

The appellant's adoption is shown by the evidence to have taken place on the 25th of August 1901, with ceremonies which continued for two days. On the 27th of August a registered adoption deed was executed by Tharibai in the admitted presence of the appellant. The Subordinate Judge says it is clear to him that the terms of the deed were settled before the adoption took place and that it was under the knowledge of the agreement and in pursuance of it that the adoption took place. I concur in this finding of fact. Tharibai in her deposition says that the terms reduced to writing in this deed had been settled at the outset, and this is probable and not contradicted by any reliable evidence. The adoption, under the circumstances, was one made subject to the conditions stated in the deed of adoption to which the appellant assented. I agree, therefore, with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that there is no force in the contention that under the adoption the appellant got a vested right to the estate of Tharibai's deceased husband, and that this estate could not be affected by the subsequent deed of adoption. Nor do I think that there is any force in the contention that the agreement is void for want of consideration. On the finding of fact mentioned above, there was clearly consideration for appellant agreeing to Tharibai's control of the property during her lifetime, in view of the benefits otherwise conferred on him by the adoption. Nor was any such objection mentioned specifically in the plaint.

But two arguments were addressed to the Court by Mr. Tahilram for the appellant, which deserve fuller notice. The first is that the agreement confers nothing more on Tharibai than an ordinary widow's estate and gives her no right of alienation except the ordinary one of a Hindu widow, namely, for legal necessity, and my attention was drawn to two rulings that in construing deeds of gift or Wills, the presumption is that the widow takes only an ordinary widow's estate. But, in the present case, although the deed makes no express mention of an absolute power of alienation, yet I think that clause 4 distinctly implies such a power. It says that after her death the kharkhana, cash and all moveable and immoveable property, which she may save and which remains after her spending and eating, will belong to the appellant. This can only be construed as implying that the immoveable property also might be alienated by Tharibai in the course of her spending and eating. Nor does it appear to have occurred to the plaintiff's Pleaders in the lower Court to construe the document in any other way.

The second argument is that the agreement, so far as it gives the respondent No. 2 a power of alienation in excess of that allowed to a widow under the ordinary Hindu Law, is invalid, as being repugnant to Hindu Law. This point has been fully considered by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment, and he has distinguished the present case from those in which a bargain is made between the adopting widow and the guardian of a minor adopted son, diminishing the estate which the adopted son is to take. In these latter cases it has been held that whether the agreement is valid depends on its being a reasonable one in the interest of the minor; and it has been held that stipulations giving the widow an absolute power of disposition over the property are unreasonable. But in the present case appellant was of full age when he was adopted, and the Subordinate Judge's view that the agreement is binding upon him is supported by Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tatya Genu Pawar (1). As inthat case, so here, the appellant deliberately accept-ed the arrangement under which he was adopted and has derived a considerable advantage therefrom and he must, therefore, be held bound by his agreement. This also is the view taken in Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 261, where some old Bengal decisions to the same effect are cited. There is only one argument to the contrary which seems to me to be substantial. This is whether the adopted mother is entitled to enlarge her estate by an arrangement with the adopted son. Such an argument was raised in the case of Vyasacharya v. Venkubai (2) but no opinion on this point was expressed by the Full Bench. Nor, do I think, is it necessary to decide it in this case. The appellant is suing in the capacity of an adopted son, and is bound by the terms of an agreement under which he himself assented to his adoption being made, on the principle of "volenti non fit injuria", as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge. It may be that the next reversioner could object to the alienation on the ground that this agreement does not bind him and was invalid, so far as it purported to give Tharibai a larger power of alienation than a Hindu widow ordinarily possesses. But the plaintiff-appellant is not suing in this capacity. And even supposing he is the next reversioner, it is possible that the consent given by him to the terms of the adoption deed might be held to cover this particular alienation and raise a suffi-cient presumption of its propriety under the rulings of this Court in Jiwanmal v. Nihalchand (3) and Jiwatmal v. Gianibai (4)

I, therefore, agree with the lower Court's conclusion and see no reason to interfere. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The effect of allowing an appeal to be heard and a decree passed in ignorance of the death of one of the joint plaintiffs is to render the judgment and decree a nullity. [p. 549, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Jessore, dated the 2nd of February 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Jhinidah, dated the 29th of November 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Narain Bagchi (with him Babu Jatindra Narain Bagchi), for the Appellant.—The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their title and that the suit was time barred. On appeal the suit was decreed, but the ques-tion of limitation was not gone into by the lower Appellate Court. During the pendency of the appeal one of the appellants, Kailash Majhi, died but the appeal was heard and decided about a month after the death of Kailash without his heirs being brought on the record. So I submit that the decree for joint possession in favour of Kailash is bad, because he died before the hearing of the appeal and his heirs were not brought on the record. The decree of the lower Appel-late Court is invalid—it is a nullity—because one of the plaintiffs-appellants was dead before the hearing of the appeal.

Babu Bhudar Haldar (with him Babu Nirode Bandhu Roy), for the Respondents.—The appeal was heard within a month of Kailash's death, and so the substitution could not be made by the heirs of Kailash who were entitled to six months' time for substitution. Our remedy was to apply for an amendment of the decree—the objection taken now is a mere technical one. Even if there was any irregularity, that would not affect the merits of the case. Even assuming that the appeal abated so far as the heirs of Kailash are concerned, still under Order XLI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, the lower Appellate Court was competent to hear and decide the appeal because the appeal proceeded on a ground common to all the plaintiffs. Further, your Lordships are competent under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to bring the heirs of Kailash on the record. The right in this case was a joint right and under the provisions of Order XXII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, after the death of Kailash the other appellants are competent to maintain the appeal.

Babu Upendra Narain Bagchi, in reply, referred to Sriram Chandra Naik v. Hridoy Nath Gupta (1).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by six plaintiffs for recovery of possession of a homestead on declaration of their title thereto. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif on the 29th November 1915. Against that dismissal all the plaintiffs jointly preferred an appeal in the Court of the District Judge of Jessore. That appeal was argued before that Court on the 31st January 1917, and the judgment was delivered on the 2nd February 1917. But it is admitted that the first plaintiff-appellant, Kailash Manjhi, died on the 1st January 1917. The information of his death was not given to the lower Appellate Court. As the plaintiffs pleaded a joint title, the right to sue was one which did not survive to the surviving plaintiffs. The result consequently was that rule 3, Order XXII, Civil Procedure Code, came into operation, and the suit, that is to say, the appeal before the lower Appellate Court abated under the second clause of that section. No application was made by the other plaintiffs-appellants to have the legal representatives of Kailash Manjhi made parties to that appeal at any time within six months of his death. The learned District Judge decreed that appeal and passed a decree in favour of all the plaintiffs in ignorance of Kailash Manjhi's death. Against that decree the sole defendant appealed making all the plaintiffs, as they appeared on the record, respondents. Notice was served on the living respondents on the 20th November 1917, and the notice on Kailash was returned unserved with the report of his death, and that, according to the defendant-appellant, was the first time he learnt of his death. He then made the heirs of Kailash parties to the appeal before this Court, and they appear and we have heard the learned Vakils for the appellant, for the survivors of the original plaintiffs and for the heirs of Kailash.

It is contended that Order XLI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, operates in favour of the surviving plaintiffs. But we think that when a plaintiff prefers an appeal in which other plaintiffs are interested, that section does not authorize him to proceed with the appeal without making other plaintiffs parties to the appeal. In the present case, they, all the plaintiffs, are necessary parties.

It is futher contended that as the heirs of Kailash are now before this Court, the appellant defendant cannot say the appeal has abated. But the effect of allowing the appeal to be heard and the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court in ignorance of the death of one of the joint plaintiffs was that that judgment and decree became a nullity. The heirs of Kailash might have applied, within six months from the date of their father's death, to have the decree set aside and the appeal re-heard, but they having taken no action, the whole appeal must be held to have abated.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court being a nullity, the original judgment of the first Court must stand and the suit must be dismissed in accordance with that decree.

The appellant will get his costs in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal decreed.

Custom—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, effect of—Burden of proof—General law, modification of.

In order to get rid of the binding effect of a custom recorded in a wajib-ul-arz, the person seeking to avoid it must show that the custom has been modified by contract or otherwise. [p. 551, col. 2.]

The general law as regards the ownership of trees standing on tenancy land is inapplicable where there is an express provision in a wajib-ul-arz that such ownership is with the tenant. [p. 552, col. 1.]

Revision of the judgment and decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Bilaspur, in Civil Suit No. 689 of 1918, dated the 4th January 1919.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and G. R. Deo, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The plaintiff-applicant, who is the malguzar of Mouza Deori, Bilaspur, sued the defendant-non-applicant in the Court of Small Causes, Bilaspur, for damages, being the value of certain trees of spontaneous growth alleged to have been felled by the non applicant, who is an ordinary tenant in the village. The suit was dismissed by the lower Court, on the ground that under the current wajib-ul-arz the general law as regards the ownership of trees resting in the landlord had been modified and that the custom represented in the terms of the wajib ul-arz had not been rebutted by sufficient evidence. The clause of the wajib-ul-arz, referred to, read as follows :—

"Cultivators have a right to cut all trees of spontaneous growth or which have been planted by them on land included in their holdings but in the absence of agreement to the contrary, they cannot cut fruit trees which were not planted by them, except with permission of the lambardar."

The first contention urged on revision is that the entry in question in the current wajib-ul-arz is based on an erroneous view of the law and does not represent the correct custom, and that, in the circumstances, the plaintiff-applicant is not bound thereby. It may be of interest to glance at the corresponding entries in the earlier wajib-ul arzes of the Bilaspur District. In Fuller's Compilation of Wajib-ul-arzes, dated 1885, the corresponding clause was,—

"Trees of spontaneous growth are the property of ourselves and co-sharers, but they shall not be cut without the consent of all the co-sharers. Cultivators, however, may, with our permission, continue to cut Babul trees required for agricultural purposes, without being required to pay anything for doing so. All existing rights over trees or their produce shall be maintained and shall not be interfered with. All persons who have hitherto enjoyed the right of cutting trees planted by themselves shall continue to do so. In future, however, any person planting trees within the village limits shall have no right to the trees so planted as soon as he is dispossessed of the land on which he may have planted the same. Such trees shall in this case become our property."

Coming to the Settlement of 1886-90, paragraph 97 (3) of the apposite report shows that the cultivators' right to cut the trees planted or sown by them was recognised, as also their right to cut trees of spontaneous growth with the permission of the lambardar and, in case of the malguzar's refusal, they could apply to the Deputy Commissioner for permission. It is obvious that a considerable difference emerges between these earlier wajib ul-arzes and the terms of the current one in this connection. The learned Counsel for the applicant has referred me to paragraph 8 of Letter No. 253/XI-13 2, dated the 24th August 1908, from the Chief Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces, to the Commissioner of Settlement, in which the current wajib ul arz for the Bilaspur District was approved. The following remarks occur in that letter with regard to the clause in question of the wajib-ul-arz :—

"As regards the right to trees, the Chief Commissioner is not sure whether the clause represents the actual custom in Mungali, or whether it represents the ideas of the Settlement Officer at the last Settlement as to what these rights should be, and has been accepted by the present Settlement Officer on the same consideration. The Chief Commissioner understands the universal custom to be that a cultivator may cut trees of spontaneous growth within his holding and trees which he has planted himself, but he shall not without the permission of the lambardar cut fruit trees which he has not planted himself, and if this is so, that is all that need be said in the wajib-ul-arz. It is undesirable in such a matter to enter anything in the wajib-ul-arz in regard to which a definite custom is not established but it is better to leave it to the ordinary presumption of the ordinary law. Subject to anything the Settlement Officer may wish to urge, the clause has been amended accordingly."

The present village, I may note, is situated in the Bilaspur Tahsil, but the term of the wajib-ul-arz with which we are concerned would appear to be identical with that mentioned in the letter just quoted. Now, it has been urged on behalf of the applicant that the letter from the Chief Secretary to the Chief Commissioner proceeds on a view of the law which was erroneous, and that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz do not in effect enunciate the custom. I have, in this connection, been referred to various decisions, like those in Kasim Mian v. Banda Husain (1), Kausalia v. Gulab Kuar (2) and Ganga Dei v. Badam (3), laying down the proposition that, ordinarily, the property in timber on a tenant's holding rests in the landlord. In our own Provinces we have the decision of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Hiria v. Mahomed Sirajuddin Khan (4). The learned A. J. C. there remarked as follows :—

"It is now well established that the ownership in trees standing on tenancy lands is always with the landlord, and whenever such trees, or any parts thereof, are severed from the soil, under the general law, such trees and parts can be taken away by the landlord. This general law may of course be controlled and varied by contract or custom, but in the absence of these it is the law to be applied."

The case for the applicant, therefore, is that he is not, in the circumstances, bound by the entry in the wajib-ul-arz referred to, and that under the ordinary law the right to cut the trees which are in question in this case rested in himself. On the other hand, it has been urged on behalf of the defendant-non-applicant that the plaintiff is bound by his acceptance of the assessment of the village and that as no suit was filed under section 83 of the Land Revenue Act of 1881, he cannot now question the apposite entry in the wajib-ul-arz. In the present case I am unable to see that the ordinary legal presumption does not still arise from the entry in question. It is impossible to treat the document as a nullity merely because of the alleged erroneous view of the law taken by the Local Administration but even as I read the passage from the letter, dated the 24th August 1908, it seems to me that whether or not the view of the law taken was correct, the Chief Commissioner desired to see that the entry in the wajib ul arz should be nothing more than a mirror of what was the actual custom. In this connection I would also point out that a gradual change in the custom may have crept in since the old settlement. In any event, I am of opinion that the present plaintiff-applicant cannot question the entry in the wajib ul arz in the incidental way in which he desired to do so in the present case. There has been no express suit for a declaration that the entry in question was erroneous and I think, so far as the present suit is concerned, he is so far bound by it unless he can show that in the particular case the custom has been modified by contract or otherwise. Still further, it would be impossible for me to disturb the finding of the lower Court to the effect that there has not been sufficient evidence to disprove the terms of the wajib ul arz and, as I have already stated, the ordinary presumption seems to me to arise from these terms.

The next point urged on revision is that even if the terms of the wajib-ul-arz are correct, it does not deal with the further question of whose the property in the felled timber should be; I, however, feel no doubt on this question. The wajib-ul-arz is not a document embodied in strictly technical or legal terms and it seems to me perfectly plain that the presumption must be that the property in the timber belongs to the person entitled to fell it.

GHULAM MAHOMED v. LAL CHAND.

Had the intention of the wajib-ul-arz been rightly or wrongly that the tenant could fell the trees but the property in the trees so felled should pass to the landlord, this would most certainly have been stated. It would, of course, have been open to the plaintiff-applicant to prove that in the particular case the custom had been modified or otherwise altered to the extent now alleged, viz., that the tenant could fell but the trees so felled would belong to the landlord. No such plea, however, was taken in the lower Court and cannot be considered now. So long, therefore, as the wajib-ul-arz stands and is not disproved in the particular case by evidence to the contrary, the general law as regards the ownership of trees standing on tenancy lands is inapplicable in the present case. These finding dispose of the application, which is dismissed. The applicant must bear the non-applicant's costs. Pleader's fees Rs. 60.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 144, O II, r. 2—Restitution, application for, when can be made—Declaration that decree is null and void—Omission to ask for restitution—Application, subsequent, for restitution, maintainability of—Estoppel.

No restriction is contained in section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code as to the manner in which a decree should be varied or reversed, and none can be read into it, except it be "in accordance with law." [p. 553, col. 1.]

The omission to ask for restitution in a suit for a declaration that a decree is null and void, does not amount to a representation that the right to restitution is relinquished. Even if it does amount to such a representation, it would not operate as an estoppel, being a mere statement of intention or promise de futuro. [p. 553, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—Appellants obtained a decree declaring that another decree, in execution of which respondents recovered Rs. 4,393 from them and their mother, was null and void against them. They then applied under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, for restitution of their share of Rs. 4,393. The Sub Judge held that the decree under which respondents obtained the Rs. 4,393 was superseded by the later decree, so far as appellants were concerned, and that section 144, Civil Procedure Code, applied, but that as they had omitted to seek such restitution in the suit in which the superseding decree was obtained, they must be held to have relinquished their claim to this relief. Appellants appeal from this decision.

I agree with the lower Court as to the applicability of section 144 in this case, which is supported by Tangutur Subrayuduv. Yecrramsetti Seshasani (1). The Legislature has evidently intended to widen the scope of section 144 as compared with section 583 of the former Code, and the presumption is that it has put the power to order restitution on the general basis, which enabled a Court to exercise an inherent power in this respect in accordance with Privy Council rulings of 1865 and 1871. No restriction is contained in the section as to the manner in which the decree should be varied or reversed, and, in my opinion, none can legitimately be read into it, except of course that it be "in accordance with law."

On the second point, the Sub-Judge, in my opinion, is clearly wrong. Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to the case, because this and section 12 only forbid a subsequent suit, and the appellants are not precluded from adopting any other remedy the law gives them to enable them to obtain restitution, cf. Rajah Eswara Doss v. Venkataroyer (2). Moreover, if they had asked for restitution in their suit to declare the decree against them void, they would probably have been successfully met by the objection that such relief was barred by section 144 (2). If so, it was not part of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make within the meaning of Order II, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code. Apart from Order II, rule 2, the Sub-Judge's view can only be justified by principles of res judic ta or estoppel. But neither of these bars can apply to the present case. Explanation IV to section 11, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply, (1) because for the above reasons this particular claim could not have been made in that suit, and (2) because it contemplates only every ground, which could and ought to have been urged in support of the claim actually made in the suit: cf Ramasuami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (3). And no question of estoppel arises as the omission to ask for restitution in the suit does not amount to a representation that appellants relinquished their right to restitution, and even if it did, there is nothing to show that respondents altered their position to their prejudice in consequence. Even treating it as a representation that they would not apply for restitution under section 144, this could not operate as an estoppel being a mere statement of intention, or a promise de futuro, cf. Jethabhai v. Nathabhai (4) and Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, 6th Edition, page 758.

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 739; 40 M. 299; 3 L. W. 236; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 155; 30 M. L. J. 366; 19 M. L. T. 235.
(2) 21 M. 236; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 522.

I would, therefore, reverse the lower Court's order rejecting the application, and under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, remand this case for readmission and disposal according to law. Respondent to bear appellant's costs of this appeal.

PRATT, J. C.—I concur as to the application of section 144. The case is similar to that of Shiam Sundar Lal v. Kaisar Zamani Begam (5) where restitution was ordered on reversal of a declaratory decree. This was done under the inherent power of the Court to right a wrong done by order of the Court and the section has been widened to give recognition to this power.

Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are a little complicated, but when they are clearly understood there should be no difficulty in deciding the case. As stated in the plaint, 3 Kanis 2 Karas of land, including 1 Kani 14¼ Gandas, formed a Taluq standing in the names of Mati Bibi and Banu Bibi at an annual Jama of Rs. 17-8. The predecessor of the plaintiffs took a settlement of the 1 Kara 14¼ Gandas in Topa interest (which is an under-tenure) at an annual Jama of Rs. 9. That was in July 1854. Subsequently the Taluq was sold by auction and Becha Gazi purchased it. The predecessor of the plaintiffs purchased a share of that Taluq, i.e., 1 Kani $14\frac{1}{4}$ Gandas, from Becha Gazi in November 1862. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the heirs of Becha Gazi and defendant No. 5 is the transferee from defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The proprietary rights having been sold, and bought by Kamal Krishna Banik defendant No. 1, he brought a suit for rent against the heirs of Becha Gazi and obtained a decree. He threatened to bring the whole Taluq to sale in execution of that decree and the plaintiffs in order to stop that sale, acting presumably under section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, paid the amount into Court. They then filed this suit in order to set aside the decree in Kamal Krishna Banik's suit on the ground of fraud and also to obtain refund of the amount which they had deposited in Court with costs, amounting in all to Rs. 146-10-3. They asked for a declaration of their title to the land, and they contended that they were in exclusive possession and denied the title of defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The Munsif found against the plaintiffs on the ground of fraud. He found in their favour on the ground of title, that is to say, that they were really co tenants along with defendant No. 5 who had acquired the interest of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. He accordingly decreed the suit declaring the plaintiffs' Taluka and Topa interest and giving the plaintiffs also a declaration that the decrees in question were not binding upon them. He disallowed their claim for refund and also refused (very properly) to go into the question of contribution by defendant No. 5. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the learned Subordinate Judge, the decree of the Munsif was varied and the plaintiffs were given a decree for the refund of the money which they had deposited in Court or for repayment of that sum by defendant No. 1 in case he had withdrawn it. Against that decree the present appeal is preferred. Both the Courts have found against the plaintiffs on the question of fraud. That finding is conclusive and neither side attempted to go behind it. There cannot be any doubt as to the title of the plaintiffs as I have stated it. The only question really before this Court is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a refund by the defendant No. 1 of the money deposited by them. It is argued for the plaintiffs that the matter comes under section 72 of the Contract Act or is so similar as to be governed by that section. But that argument overlooks the fact that the plaintiffs were undoubtedly tenants of the defendant No. 1 and were bound equally with defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to pay rent in respect of this Taluk. They cannot, therefore, be said to have made this deposit by mistake or under coercion or under stress of legal process. They obviously made the deposit under the provisions of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Whatever their rights may be as to contribution from their co-debtors, there can be no question that this money being due to the defendant No. 1 as landlord under the decree, though that decree was not binding against the plaintiffs, they were liable nevertheless for a share of that sum as rent, and liable moreover to the defendant No. 1. It would, therefore, be quite unjust that they should be allowed to deposit the amount in Court simply to stop the sale for the time being and then get their money back again. The outstanding fact in the case, that they were tenants as well as defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and thus liable for the rent, was overlooked by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff in his argument, but once that fact is made clear, there is no doubt as to what the decision should be. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

RAJAMANIKKATHAMMAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 2, 3, 5 AND 6—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow—Compromise of suit effected by widow—Reversioner, whether bound by compromise.

Where there is a litigation pending in the subject-matter of which a Hindu widow is interested, she has a discretion as to how to conduct that litigation and to come to an arrangement with her opponent, if she believes that it would be in the interests of the estate. But a reversioner is entitled to show that the compromise was not arrived at with due care and caution and was such as really showed negligence on the part of the widow, and if he succeeds in showing that, the compromise will not be binding upon him. [p. 556, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 41 of 1916.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, K. S. Ganesa Aiyar and Sundara Rou, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The first question raised in the appeal relates to the effect of a compromise in a previous proceeding between the 2nd defendant, the widow of Krishnaswami Konar, his father, Karuppanna Pillai, his brother, Perumal, and the 1st defendant. Krishnaswami Konar who died in 1907 had, by his first wife, two daughters, the plaintiff, and another daughter now deceased. After the death of his first wife he married the 2nd defendant, Muthukannammal. Karuppanna, his father, died in 1912 and Perumal, his brotner, died in 1910. The first defendant is the son of Perumal. It is not necessary to refer to the other defendants, for these are the principal parties concerned.

It would appear that, on the death of Krishnaswami Konar, his father and brother laid claim to the properties standing in his name as belonging to the joint family They applied for succession certificate and the 2nd defendant, the widow, apparently acquiesced at that time in their claim and made no objection to the grant of a certificate to Perumal. Then apparently she changed her mind not long afterwards, for we have got a number of notices, MM series, which she gave to the debtors of her husband; they were asked not to pay over outstandings to Perumal because he was making a fraudulent attempt to secure the moneys which did not belong to him. Thereafter the parties seem to have come to an amicable understanding, for a deed of maintenance was executed in 1909. Under that document the widow accepts Rs. 20 a month for her life as maintenance and also a right of residence in the family house. But again apparently she fell out with her husband's relations, for we find that Karuppanna, Perumal and the 1st defendant instituted a suit, Orignial Suit No. 44 of 1910, for recovery of debts due under certain bonds in the name of Krishnaswami Konar, and in that suit the 2nd defendant filed a written statement alleging that the properties were the separate property of her deceased husband, being his self-acquisitions. Then apparently there was an attempt at mediation by common friends, with the result that a document, Exhibit XVIII, called settlement Sridhanam deed, was executed under which Perumal assigned to the plaintiff and her deceased sister hypothecation bonds to the value of Rs. 2,300. This was on 28th May 1910. The suit was compromised by a Razinamah petition Exhibit XX. In that petition the 2nd defendant expressed herself as satisfied with receiving Rs. 3,200 cash in quit of all her claims to the property of her deceased husband. A decree based on that petition, Exhibit XXI, was passed, the Court sanctioning the compromise on behalf of the minor 3rd defendant (1st defendant in this suit). The present plaintiff or her sister was not a party to that suit; and the Court's sanction was naturally not obtained on behalf of them, who were also minors at the time, for the compromise. It is the effect of Exhibits XX and XXI that we are mainly concerned with in this appeal. I might also mention another suit which was filed (Original Suit No. 3 of 1915) by the 1st defendant seeking to set aside the settlement in favour of the plaintiff and her sister under Exhibit XVIII. The plaintiff in this suit filed a written statement, Exhibit GG1, contesting that suit.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the compromise evidenced by Exhibits XX and XXI was in the nature of a family settlement arrived at by the widow and, therefore, binding on the plaintiff, the presumptive reversioner. No doubt the father and brother of Krishnaswami did make allegations that the properties standing in the name of Krishnaswami were joint family properties and that the 2nd defendant was a member of the joint family, and it may be taken that the 2nd defendant, the widow of Krishnaswami, acquiesced in that allegation on several occasions and even accepted the allegation as true. But any such statement of hers cannot amount to an estoppel by which the plaintiff would be bound and it is not so contended. These various statements of the 2nd defendant have been referred to only as showing that there was a bona fide dispute and that the Razinamah was executed in settlement of that dispute. The most significant fact, however, is that in the very Razinamah petition all the properties are alleged by the parties as belonging to Krishnaswami himself and not as belonging to the joint family. There is no allusion whatever either in Exhibit XX or XXI to any claim by Perumal or by Karuppannah that Krishnaswami was a member of the joint family, that the properties belonged to the joint family and that the parties were adjusting their disputes in the manner stated in Exhibit XX. In Exhibit XXI also, the decree, they, in more than one place, speak of the properties as belonging to the deceased husband of the 2nd defendant. How came these documents to be drafted in that way it is impossible to tell, because no evidence has been brought to our notice which furnishes any explanation. In the face of those documents it is impossible to say that the 2nd defendant was adjusting a bona fide dispute in regard to the estate, and the facts which have already been mentioned show clearly that the 2nd defendant was not making any attempt to protect the interests of the reversioner. All that she was content with was a sum of Rs. 3,200, and for that amount she parted with all the properties of her husband amounting to about Rs. 20,000. These documents really are in the nature of an alienation purporting to be made by the widow of her husband's properties and not a settlement of a bona fide dispute as to the title of these properties. We have been referred to a ruling of the Privy Council on the subject of compromise by widows in Khunni Pal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1). All that their Lordships lay down is to this effect, "that a compromise is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is." Such an agreement is altogether wanting in this case, for it proceeds on the assumption not that Karuppanna and Perumal had any title to those properties but that they belonged solely to the 2nd defendant's deceased husband. Further, as pointed out by a Bench of this Court in a case reported as Muthukumarasami Odayar v. Subramania Iyer (2), a compromise effected by a widow, in order to be binding, must be shown to have been made with due care and caution. "When there is a litigation pending, the widow is also interested in the subject-matter of the litigation and she must have a discretion as to how to conduct that litigation and to come to an arrangement with her opponent, if as a matter of fact she believed that it would be in the best interests of the estate. On the other hand, the reversioner is entitled to show that the compromise was not arrived at with due care and caution and was such as really showed negligence on the part of the widow." In this case, as already stated, the 2nd defendant cannot be said to have taken any caution whatever to protect the interests of the reversioner. All the evidence points to the conclusion that she was from time to time acting either at the whim of the moment or at the advice of persons who happened to surround her at the time. I, therefore, agree in the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge on this point.

Then Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Ayyar appearing on behalf of the appellant argued that the finding that the family was divided and that these properties were the self-acquisitions of Krishnaswami is wrong. He did not in fact attempt to take us through the entire evidence in the case which has been fully dealt with by the Subordinate Judge, but he brought to our notice what apparently he thought was the most important evidence in favour of his client in this connection and as we did not think that that evidence in the light of the admitted facts of the case showed that the family was joint and the properties in dispute were properties of the family, he did not think it would serve any useful purpose to go further into the matter. I shall assume that he has succeeded in showing that Exhibit CC, which is a mortgage of the two houses for Rs. 3,000, alluded to two previous mortgages, Exhibits BB and Z. The mortgage under Exhibit Z for Rs. 1,000 purports to be in favour of Karuppanna, the father of Krishnaswami. But Exhibit CC does not, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, say that part of the consideration was a previous mortgage in favour of Karuppanna.

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 477; 33 A. 356; 15 C. W. N. 545; 8 A. L. J. 552; 13 C. L. 575; 11 Bur L. R. 427; 10 M. L. T. 28; (1911) M. W. N. 432; 21 M. L. J. 645; 38 I. A. 87 (P. C.).

(2) 33 Ind. Cas. 687; 31 M. L. J. 87.

Whether Exhibit Z was a Benami transaction or whether there is some other explanation forthcoming as to how that is included in Exhibit CC, if that be a fact, we are not in a position to determine because no evidence has been given as to the circumstances under which Exhibit CC was executed, and as to how it referred to Exhibit Z even though it purported to be in favour of Karuppanna. It would be going much too far to say that these transactions showed that Krishnaswami was joint at their date with Karuppanna and Perumal. Krishnaswami admittedly left the family house in 1889, and he carried on separate business in contracts in his own name. A long list of documents which have been filed stand in his name alone. Similarly Karuppanna had a business in his own name and Perumal also was earning money and acquired properties separately. There cannot be any doubt whatever that the finding of the Subordinate Judge that Krishnaswami had separated from the family and all these properties were his self-acquisitions is correct.

The next question relates to the appointment of a Receiver. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that in the circumstances disclosed the best thing for the parties was that there should be a Receiver to collect the outstandings due to the estate of the deceased Krishnaswami. The 2nd defendant parted with her interest in the properties as a widow in favour of Perumal and Karuppanna now represented by the 1st defendant. It is so held by the Subordinate Judge and although she is represented by a Pleader in this appeal, she takes no objection to the finding of the Subordinate Judge to that effect. She, therefore, has no interest in safeguarding the estate of Krishnaswami. As the bulk of the property of the estate consists of outstandings, the Subordinate Judge was right in the circumstances to appoint a Receiver. At the same time the 1st defendant, who, it may be pointed out, is still a minor though he will attain majority soon, is entitled to make the best use of the money which he is entitled to hold during the lifetime of the 2nd defendant, and the learned Pleader for the 1st defendant has asked us, therefore, to modify the decree by directing that as soon as the Receiver has collected a sum of Rs. 1,000 or thereabouts he should hand over the amount to the 1st defendant on his (1st defendant's) furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Court after due notice to the plaintiff. This, I think, is reasonable.

With that modification the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs of the plaintiff.

As regards the memorandum of objections, the first point urged by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff was that, as a matter of fact, the 2nd defendant did not alienate her interest in the properties to Perumal and Karuppanna. But the 2nd defendant herself, though there is, as already pointed out, the decree against her so far as her interest is concerned, does not contest it and even in this Court her Pleader is content with the decree. It is not open to the plaintiff to dispute this part of the judgment of the lower Court.

The same answer applies to the second point urged in the memorandum of objections, namely, that the suit comprised properties other than those set out in the schedule to Exhibit XXI, the decree on the compromise and, therefore, at least with respect to those properties, the 1st defendant has no right even during the lifetime of the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant in Exhibit XX, the Razinamah, says that she has relinquished all her rights to the estate of her husband. As she does not raise any question before us as regards any item of the properties, the memorandum of objections must be dismissed with costs of the 1st defendant.

SPENCER, J.—The plaintiff is the daughter and nearest heir of the deceased Krishnaswami Konar, who died in 1907. The 2nd defendant is plaintiff's step-mother and Krishnaswami Konar's 2nd wife. Plaintiff sued to obtain a declaration that the decree in Appeal Suit No. 44 of 1910 on the file of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly was not binding on the reversioner. The first point argued in appeal was that when the 2nd defendant entered into the compromise in Original Suit No. 44 of 1910, she represented the estate of her deceased husband and that the compromise should be upheld as a bona fide settlement of family disputes and as binding on the plaintiff. I feel quite clear that the widow, 2nd defendant, did not represent any interests but her own when she entered into the compromise embodied in Exhibits XX and XXI in Original Suit No. 44 of 1910. What Muthukannammal got out of that arrangement was a lump sum of Rs. 3,200 in quit of all her claims on the estate of her deceased husband and a right of residence for her lifetime in a certain house. This she took "absolutely and for her sole and exclusive benefit," as stated in Exhibit XX. If any one represented the reversionary interest in that suit, it was rather the plaintiff in that suit, as may be seen from the words "that the plaintiffs or other reversionary heirs of the said Krishnaswami Konar be entitled to the house after her." Beyond the words "other reversionary heirs of the said Krishnaswami Konar," there is no indication that the future claim of the reversioners to Krishnaswami Konar's estate was even considered at the time; much less that steps were taken to protect the interest of those minors.

Although the leave of the Court was obtained under Order XXXII, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure for the present appellant Gangamirdham, who was then as now a minor, entering into that compromise, Rajamanikkathammal (plaintiff in this suit) and her sister Meenammal (now deceased) were not personally made parties to that suit and no similar permission was obtained on their behalf for compromising it, although they were then minors. It would be manifestly unjust to hold the plaintiff and her sister bound by the acts of their step-mother in that suit.

On the other questions argued before us I have noting to add to what my learned brother has said and I agree in the order proposed by him.

Execution of decree—Order dismissing application for execution—Appeal—Judgment-debtor, whether has right of appeal against finding —Res judicata.

A judgment-debtor has no right of appeal against an order dismissing an application for the execution of a decree on the ground that the decree would only be capable of execution on the decree-holder complying with its terms by executing and registering a lease in favour of the judgment-debtor. In order to give the judgment-debtor a right of appeal not only must he be aggrieved by the reasons given by the Judge, but the finding must be one that would operate as res judicata. [p. 559, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, 24-Perganas, dated the 22nd of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury (with him Babu Surendra Mohan Ghose), for the Respondent, raised a preliminary objection that the appellant, being a successful party in the lower Court, was not competent to prefer the appeal.

Babu Monmohan Bose, for the Appellant.—The first point raised in the lower Court, viz., whether the decree, which contains matter extraneous to the subject-matter of the suit, is enforceable should be decided finally, and the lower Court having decided that point against me I can prefer an appeal to this Court. If the lower Court had decided the first point in my favour, then it would not have been necessary for the lower Court to decide the second point, viz, whether without performing his part of the agreement the plaintiff was competent to execute the decree. The first point having been decided against me, I can prefer an appeal to this Court taking legal objections to the decision of the lower Appellate Court.

[FLETCHER, J.—The executing Court must take the decree as it is.]

Yes. But it can decide whether the decree is enforceable, and any party who is dissatisfied with any decree or order against which an appeal lies, may appeal from the decree or order. If a party is aggrieved by the decision of any point he may prefer an appeal. Refers to Krishna Chandra Goldar v. Mohesh Chandra (1), Lachman Singh v. Mohan (2), Ran Golam v. Sheo Tahal (3).

Babu Sarat Chander Roy Chowdhury briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the defendant. The plaintiff, who is a Hindu widow and the owner of 8-annas of a certain property with a limited interest, brought a suit against the brother of her husband to whose property she succeeded. The matter was referred to arbitration and agreement was arrived at between every body and was approved of by the arbitrators, and a decree was made with the consent of the parties. It was provided by the decree that the plaintiff had to execute in favour of the defendant a lease of the property in suit and on her doing so she would get certain nazars and certain rents. She then applied for execution of this decree. The application failed. The defendant, being successful, has appealed against the order of the learned Judge dismissing the application for execution, and the reason for the appeal is this, that although the learned Judge in dismissing the application remarked that it was premature for the plaintiff to apply to execute the decree unless and until she had performed the duty cast upon her by the terms of the decree by executing and registering the lease in favour of the defendant, yet the learned Judge stated that if and when that happened, the decree was one that was capable of being put into execution. That is what the Judge means, because the Judge could not adjudicate on what would happen to the decree when the plaintiff had performed the duty cast upon her by the decree. The foundation of the appeal is this: The defendant says that he is aggrieved by the Judge having found that the decree was one which could at some subsequent date, if and when the plaintiff complied with the terms cast on her by the consent decree, be capable of execution. But in order to give the defendant right of appeal not only must he be aggrieved by the reasons given by the Judge but the finding must be one that would operate as res judicata. It seems to me quite clear that the finding could by no possibility operate as res judicata. The Judge held that this application was premature and could not be determined by the Court until the plaintiff had complied with the conditions mentioned in the decree. Directly the Judge held that the plaintiff had not performed the duty cast upon her by the decree, the other remark that he made as to what would happen when the plaintiff had complied with the terms of the decree—whether the decree would be capable or incapable of being executed—is clearly not binding on the defendant and is obiter. I think there is no appeal in this case. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs; hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 3, 8, O. XVII, rr. 2 to 4—One of several defendants not served—Adjourment for ascertaining whereabouts—Default of appearance—Dismissal of suit for default, legality of—"Hearing," meaning of—Procedure.

Several adjournments were granted in a case to enable the plaintiff to discover the whereabouts of one of the defendants who had not been served with notice. On the last date of hearing neither the plaintiff nor his Pleader appeared, while the Pleader for the defendants, except the one who had not been served, was present. The Court dismissed the suit for default, and subsequently refused an application to set aside the dismissal. The plaintiff applied in revision:

Held, (1) that Order XVII, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, applied to the case, and that the original order of dismissal was a legal order. [p. 560, col. 2; p. 561, col. 2.]

(2) that the negligence of the plaintiff's Pleader resulting in the non-appearance of the plaintiff was not "sufficient cause" under Order XVII, rule 4, of the Code for setting aside an order of dismissal for default. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Per Pratt, J. C.—Where the conditions laid down in rules 2 and 3 of Order XVII of the Civil Procedure Code coincide, the procedure laid down in rule 2 of the Order must be followed inasmuch as the consequences of non-appearance have a natural precedence over the merits. [p. 560, col. 2.]

Per Fawcett, A. J. C.—The word "hearing" in rules 3, 6 and 8, Order IX, of the Civil Procedure Code is not necessarily equivalent to a "hearing of evidence," and the words "the defendant" in rule 8 of that Order must be construed as "the defendants who have been served." [p 561, cols. 1 & 2.]

Application for revision against the order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, for the Applicant.

Mr. Bup Chand Bilaram, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed on the 28th October 1915 against five defendants and summonses were issued for the 29th November 1915. On that date 4 defendants were served and appeared by Pleader. This Pleader promised to file a power for the absentee, defendant No. 4, and the case was adjourned to the 14th December 1915. As no vakalatnama was filed, order was made on the latter date for summons to issue for defendant No. 4 for the 28th January. There were nine subsequent adjournments at the request of plaintiff's Pleader for the whereabouts of defendant No. 4. The last was for the 4th August and the suit was dismissed for default.

Application was made to restore the suit to the file, on the ground that plaintiff's Pleader had made a mistake as to the date. The lower Court refused the application and the plaintiff applies to this Court for revision of that order, which was made on the 17th February 1917.

It is said that the order dismissing the suit for default is an order that the Sub-Judge was not competent to make and the 4th of August was not a date of hearing. The case of Debi Sahai v. Saraswati (1) is referred to, but the facts of that case are different. There the suit had been fixed for hearing on a specified date and an intermediate date had been fixed for an interlocutory application. It was held that the suit could not be dismissed for default on the intermediate date. But here there was no intermediate date and as Order XVII, rule 1 (2), requires the date of hearing to be fixed whenever it is adjourned or time granted to a party, the 4th August must have been the date of hearing and it is so shown in the diary—and so also on the nine other dates for whereabouts.

It is also contended that the Sub Judge should have proceeded under Order XVII, rule 3, and not Order XVII, rule 2, as plaintiff had been granted time to perform an act necessary to the further progress of the suit. It is true that Order XVII, rule 3, is in this view applicable but plaintiff made default of appearance, and when both these conditions coincide, we agree with the decision in Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (2) that Order XVII, rule 2, should have preference for the consequences of non appearance have a natural precedent over the merits. This view is also in accord with the decision of the Bombay High Court in Shrimant Sagajirao v. Smith (3).

The Sub Judge was, therefore, right in applying Order IX and the order of dismissal operated in case of defendant No. 4 as an order under rule 3 and in the case of the other defendants as an order under rule 8.

In the case of the other defendants the remedy was by way of appeal under Order XLIII, rule 1 (c), and in the case of defendant No. 4 we need only observe that the Pleader's negligence is not sufficient cause under rule 4.

I would, therefore, reject this application with costs.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—In the suit out of which this application for revision arises defendant No. 4 had not been served with a summons, and several adjournments had been given to the plaintiff "for whereabouts" of this defendant. The other defendants had appeared and put in their written statement, and an application for a prohibitory order had been made and decided, but otherwise no progress had been made with the suit, when on the 16th June 1916, to which date the hearing of the suit had been adjourned, the case was again adjourned, at the request of the plaintiff's Pleader "for whereabouts of defendant No. 4" to 4th August 1916. On that date, however, plaintiff and his Pleader were absent, while the Pleader of the defendants (except defendant No. 4) was present. The Court, thereupon, dismissed the suit with costs for plaintiff's default of appearance. The Sub-Judge has refused an application to set aside the dismissal, and plaintiff appeals.

The first contention of applicant is that the lower Court erred in dismissing the suit for default, as it was not set down for hearing on the 4th August. It is to be noted that rules 3, 6 and 8 of Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, all refer to appearance or non-appearance, "when the suit is called on for hearing;" and as noted in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Civil Procedure in British India, 2nd Edition, page 753, these words appear to have been inserted so as to limit the rule to the first day of hearing and mark the distinction between these provisions and those of Order XVII, rule 2. "Hearing", however, is not necessarily equivalent to "hearing of evidence", as is clear from the proviso to Order XVII, rule 1 (2), and as stated in the latter rule, the Court in every case where it grants an adjournment has to fix a day for the further hearing of the suit. Therefore, though time was granted to the plaintiff for finding the whereabouts of defendant No. 4, a date had to be fixed for the further hearing of the suit, and the 4th August 1916 was accordingly entered in the diary as the "date to which hearing is adjourned." It is not a case where the hearing has already been fixed for a particular date, and an intermediate date is fixed for disposing of an interlocutory matter, as in the instance of the rule nisi to plaintiff for 21st January 1910 though the hearing of the suit had been fixed for 1st February 1910, given in the Form of Diary at page 154 of the Sind Courts' Civil Circulars. For the same reason it is not a case like that of Debi Sahai v. Sarasvati (1) where the hearing for settlement of issues had been fixed for 25th July 1907, and the disposal of the guardianship application for 16th July 1907 on which date the suit was dismissed for default of plaintiff's appearance. In such a case, the suit could not be said to be "called on for hearing," and, therefore, Order IX, rule 8, could not be appealed under Order XVII, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code.

I think, therefore, that the 4th August was a day to which the hearing of the suit was adjourned and that the case falls, therefore, under Order XVII, rule 2. It clearly does not fall under Order XVII, rule 3, because that rule applies only where there has been a default of the kind referred to, which leads to the Court's order, and not a non-appearance, cf. Shrimant Sagarirao v. Smith (3) and Chandramathi Ammal v. Narayanasami Iyer (2).

The next question is what rule, if any, of Order IX was applicable to the case. I think it is clearly rule 8. In a case where there are several defendants, one or some of whom have not been served with the summons, the words "the defendant" in that rule must be construed as "the defendants who have been served," for otherwise there is no obligation on a defendant to appear under Order V, rule 1, and Order IX, rule 1. The principle underlying rule 8 is one of punishment in respect of a default by a party to a cause [cf. Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (4)], (4) 19 Ind. Cas. 526; 35 A. 331; 17 C. W. N. 829; 11 A. L. J. 625; 18 C. L. J. 9; 15 Bom. L. R. 640; 25 M. L. J. 148; 14 M. L. T. 33; (1913) M. W. N. 563; 16 O. C. 194; 40 I. A. 150 (P. C.).

and the rule is inapplicable to the case of the non-appearance of a suitor, who has not been served with a summons, just as it is to one who is dead. The non-appearance of defendant No. 4 was, therefore, immaterial: the case otherwise fell under Order I, rule 8, and the Court not only had the power, but was bound, under that rule, to dismiss the suit. The Sub-Judge appears to have treated the case as falling under Order IX, rule 3, but this is obviously wrong. It would only fall under that rule, if defendant No. 4 were the sole defendant.

The contention that the original order of dismissal was illegal, therefore, fails. On the merits, also, the Sub-Judge is clearly right in holding that "sufficient cause" for plaintiff's non-appearance on the 4th August had not been shown. Nor is it, in my opinion, a case to which the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, can be properly applied.

I agree that the application should be rejected with costs.

Application rejected.

Srimati ABEDA KHATUN SAHEBANI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS— RESPONDENTS.

Appeal—Mortgage suit—Mortgage executed by husband under power-of-attorney from wife—Power-of-attorney not proved—Remand, whether can be ordered.

Where in a suit upon a mortgage purporting to have been executed by the husband of a lady on her behalf under a power-of-attorney from her, the plaintiff does not take any step for the production of the power or to prove it, or to give secondary evidence of its contents, the case ought not to be remanded to give him the opportunity of producing and proving the power. [p. 563, col 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 26th of November 1917, affirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 23rd of January 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastagir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitter), for the Appellant.—The property belongs to defendant No. 3. Though defendant No. 3 did not herself execute the mortgage-deed, the said deed was executed by defendant No. 4, the husband of the lady, under a power-of-attorney from her. The lower Appellate Court ought to have granted a remand to give the plaintiff an opportunity to produce and prove it. In justice to the plaintiff your Lordships should give the plaintiff an opportunity to prove the deed.

On the point of limitation decided by the lower Appellate Court, I submit that the plaintiff is entitled to get the benefit of section 18 of the Limitation Act. And so the suit cannot be held to be barred. The fraud was perpetrated upon the plaintiff, inasmuch as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 conspired with defendant No. 4 in persuading the plaintiff to believe that defendant No. 3 had really authorised the mortgage of the property in question. Plaintiff's knowledge of his right to proceed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in a law Court was kept away from him with a view to defraud him of his legitimate right. The whole business makes out a clear case of remand and re-adjudication.

Babu Upendra Lal Roy (with him Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta), for the Defendants-Respondents.—It is now too late in the day to ask for a remand. At the very first stage the plaintiff should have taken good care to get the mortgage-deed produced and properly proved. There was no examination of the Sub Registrar even.

The claim against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is of a purely personal nature. Plaintiff perfectly knew that his rights were against these two persons who admittedly took the money. The plaintiff has shown no fraud which concealed from him his knowledge to sue defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The written statement says the lady, i.e, defendant No. 3 whose property was mortgaged, did not give any authority.

Babu D. L. Kastagir replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on a mortgage executed by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and

4. The property mortgaged belongs to defendant No. 3. Defendant No. 1 is the son of defendant No. 3. Defendant No. 2 is her husband's brother. Both the Courts have held that defendant No. 3 never executed the document. It is not alleged by the plaintiff that she personally executed the mortgage deed, but he said that the document was executed by defendant No. 4, the husband of the lady, under a power of-attorney from her. The power-of-attorney was not produced. It was pressed upon the Appellate Court that a remand ought to be granted to give the plaintiff an opportunity to produce and prove it. But having regard to the delay that had taken place in connection with that matter, the Appellate Court did not think fit to grant a remand. That point has again been urged before us. We do not think that we can accede to that prayer. The plaintiff did not take any steps to have the Sub Registrar examined in respect of that power of attorney, nor has he attempted to give secondary evidence as to what that power contained. We do not think that at this stage we can accede to a prayer of this nature.

The next question argued is this, that it has been held by the Appellate Court that the suit is barred by limitation so far as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are concerned. The money was admittedly taken by them and it is said that fraud having been committed on the plaintiff, he is entitled to the benefit of section 18 of the Limitation Act. That overlooks this fact, that the claim against these two persons was of a personal nature. The property which was mortgaged belonged to defendant No. 3 and the plaintiff knew that his rights were as against these two persons, he knew at the time the mortgage was executed. He now says that fraud was committed upon him inasmuch as they conspired with defendant No. 4 in persuading him to believe that defendant No. 3 had really authorized the mortgage of this property. It appears that defendant No. 1 in his written statement said that defendant No. 3's property was included in the bond without her knowledge and consent simply at the request of the plaintiff, and through fear of the plaintiff it was done and to please him and that it was at the wrongful request of the plaintiff, defendant No. 2 included defendant No. 3's property in the deed. It was open to the plaintiff to go into that question at the trial as to whether any fraud had been practised upon him and to amend his plaint. There is no fraud shown by which the knowledge of his right to proceed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was kept back from him. We, therefore, think that there is nothing in that contention.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 2nd November 1917.

Mr. Imam Din, for the Appellant.

Mr. Amar Nath Monga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from an order under the Guardians and Wards Act. The facts out of which it has arisen are:—One Khuda Bakhsh, a resident of the District of Amritsar, died leaving a widow and two little minor girls, Ta

PRAVAKAR MAJUMDAR v. UPENDRA NATH.

Bibi and Lachhmi. The age of the latter is only seven years and that of the former about 11 years. Shortly after the death of Khuda Baksh his widow Musammat Ajhunda also died and the children were left alone in the house. Musammat Murad Bibi, the maternal grandmother of the minors, who lives in the District of Lahore, then went to Amritsar and brought the girls to her own house. They arrived at Lahore on the 23rd June 1917 and ever since then have been living with their maternal grandmother and under her care and protection.

On the 11th July 1917 after the girls had been with her for less than a month Musammat Murad Bibi made an application to the Court of the District Judge of Lahore under the Guardians and Wards Act, asking the Court to appoint her the guardian of the person and property of the minors. She mentioned in the application the names of other persons who are related to the minors. They were (1) Umar Din, and (2) Ghulam Muhammad, nephews of Khuda Bakhsh, being the sons of his brother Nur Muhammad, deceased, and (3) Pir Muhammad, (4) Ata Muhammad, and (5) Maula Bakhsh, the brothers of Musammat Ajhunda, the deceased mother of the minors. The application was transferred to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Lahore by an order dated the 17th of July 1917. Notice of the application was sent to the relations mentioned in the application. The maternal uncles did not raise any objection but the nephews of Khuda Bakhsh orally raised an objection on the 2nd of November 1917 to the effect that the application should have been made to the District Court of Amritsar where the minors "ordinarily resided" and where the property of the minors was situated; section 9, clause (1), of the Act was relied upon. The Senior Subordinate Judge, Ganga Ram, held that the ordinary residence of the minors being at Amritsar he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. He ordered that the application be returned for presentation to the Court at Amritsar. Against this order the present appeal has been filed. A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that an order made under the 1st clause of section 9 of the Act is not appealable. Clause (b) of section 47 allows an appeal from an order made under section 9, sub-section (3), returning an application. Apparently it was not intended by the Legislature to allow an appeal under sub section (1) of section 9. I am, therefore, constrained to hold that the present appeal does not lie.

I am asked by the learned Counsel of Musammat Murad Bibi, the appellant, to treat the memorandum of appeal in this case as a petition for revision and to set aside the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge returning the application. He relies on the provisions of section 43 of the Act and argues that this Court is competent to take up the matter on its revisional side and pass a proper order. Powers of revision, however, are not to be exercised in all cases where a question of jurisdiction is raised. It has been repeatedly held that where other remedies are open to a petitioner the extraordinary powers of revision are not to be exercised. In this case the appellant can present her application for the appointment of a guardian in the Court at Amritsar. No doubt she will be put to some inconvenience as is argued by the learned Counsel, but that is no reason for the exercise of this exceptional power. I, therefore, refuse to accede to the prayer of the learned Counsel and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

UPENDRA NATH (CHANDRA IN VAKLAUTNAMAH) BHOWMIK—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Holding, purchaser of—

PRAVAKAR MAJUMDAR v. UPENDRA NATH.

Failure to get possession of one plot—Suspension of rent—Abatement.

Lands appertaining to three jotes were sold in execution of rent decrees and were purchased by the defendant, who was subsequently recognized by the plaintiff as tenant of the jotes. Before the defendant's purchase the plaintiff was in possession of a plot of land included in one of the jotes and he settled it with another party after the defendant's purchase and after his recoguition as a tenant. In a suit for rent in respect of the said jotes, the defence was that the defendant had not obtained possession of a plot of land included in the jotes and so there ought to be a suspension of rent:

Held, (1) that this was not a case of a demise by the plaintiff and the latter could not, therefore, be held responsible for giving possession to the defendant and the question of suspension of rent did not arise, although if the subsequent settlement was bad, the defendant could set that aside; [p. 566, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to rent of the plot of land of which the defendant had not got possession. [p. 566, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 18th January 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, Suri, dated the 25th May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Broio Lal Chakarabarty (with him Babu Santimoy Majumdar), for the Appellants.—The landlords instituted three suits for arrears of rent in 1907. All the suits were decreed. There is no question of suspension of rent. They never got possession and made no settlement with defendant. There can be suspension when the landlord has turned out or interfered with possession. It is not a case of demise by the plaintiff to the defendant. The purchaser of the holdings derived his title from his purchase.

Babu Baranashibashi Mukherjee (with him Babu Surat Chandra De), for the Respondent.—The plot from which my client has been dispossessed is a rent paying land. The landlord, although he remains in khas possession, has granted a demise to a third party. Refers to Piggott v. Birtles (1) (referred to in Foa on 'Landlord and Tenant') and Holgate v. Kay (2). There must be full possession of the thing demised, see Foa, pages 168, 169, 5th Edition.

The finding is that the landlord was in khas possession and he did not give me full possession. At the time when the lands were settled with me, I was not given full possession by the landlord; he made settlement with another. This is practically eviction.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakarabarty, in reply.—The plots are not identical. He claims under the purchase of 1910. I got possession in 1908. I allowed his name to be registered in my sherista. The first question to be decided is—did I grant a lease? Is there any suspension under the circumstances? It was not a lease granted by me to him. I only registered his name. See Foa on Landlord and Tenant, page 163. In this case the lease has not come into operation. The question of suspension arises only in case of eviction and not of dispossession. Upon the pleadings here there is no question of eviction. His title is under the sale certificate which he can execute and take possession. Nobody can be heard against the sale certificate. There is no delinquency on my part. There is no mala fides in my conduct. Dispossession plus mala fides have always been the ground for suspension of rent. The principle of mala fide conduct has been discussed in Rai Charan Das Mazumdar v. Administrator General of Bengal (3), Annada Prosad v. Mathura Lal (4) is similar to the present case. The tenant cannot complain if he can enforce his legal right. He can assert his title on the strength of the sale certificate. Even the landlord's getting kabuliyats from sub-tenants won't matter—Srimati Moni v. Kalachand Gharami (5).

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff appears to have brought three rent suits in respect of certain holdings, being Suits Nos. 523 of 1907, 525 of 1907 and 529 of 1907, and obtained decrees in all. So far as the holding in Suit No. 523 is concerned, the plaintiff purchased it as decree-holder in 1908 and settled it with a tenant in 1913. Then in respect of the holdings in the two other suits, being three jotes, they were sold in 1910 and bought by the defendant. It appears that in 1911 the plaintiff recognised the purchaser as tenant and recorded his name in his sherista. These three holdings, which are covered by Suits Nos. 525 and 529, were consolidated into one jote and the plaintiff sued for rent in respect thereof. The defence was that the defendant had not obtained possession of a plot of land in that jote amongst others, a plot measuring 4 bighas and 7 cottahs.

It was found by the learned Munsif that the plaintiff was in possession of this disputed plot before the defendant's purchase and that after the defendant's purchase he settled it with another party. He also holds that this plot really belongs to the holding covered by Suits Nos. 525 and 529, whereas the plaintiff apparently dealt with it as a plot covered by Suit No. 523. Therefore, the facts as found by the learned Munsif and the Appellate Court are these: that the three holdings which are covered by Suits Nos. 525 and 529 include the plot of land 4 bighas 7 cottahs, that the plaintiff recognised the defendant as his tenant, that he was in possession of it before the defendant's purchase and after the defendant's purchase and recognition of him as tenant, settlement was made with another party. It was thereupon held by both Courts that there ought to be a suspension of rent as the defendant is said to have been dispossessed by the plaintiff.

It has been contended before us that it is not a case of demise by the plaintiff to the defendant, that these holdings were put up to sale under rent-decrees, that the holdings were sold by the Court and the purchaser derived his title from his purchase and that nothing further was necessary to perfect his title and the recognition of him as tenant by the plaintiff did not add to the title which he had acquired in consequence of the purchase. It is contended that this not being a case of demise by the plaintiff and not being a case in which he can be held in any way responsible for giving possession to the defendant, who could assert his right in the execution proceedings or obtain it through Court, the question of suspension of rent does not arise.

We agree this is not a case for suspension. Nothing has been found to indicate that there was any mala fide dealing by the plaintiff There is nothing to show that he caused any eviction or ejectment of the defendant in respect of this plot of land. There is no tortuous act alleged against him. The utmost that can be said is that he made a mistake in settling the plot he purchased in 1903. If the subsequent settlement is bad, the defendant can set it aside. The plaintiff did not bring him on the land, or induced him to come. In view of these circumstances we are unable to hold that Dwijendra Nath Roy v. Aftabuddi (6) is of any avail as against the plaintiff's claim. It is also to be noticed that so far as these plots are concerned, although these have been consolidated, they are mentioned as three definite holdings with three different rentals, and there is no difficulty in separating the plot in dispute. Since the defendant has not obtained possession of that plot, it ought to be held that the plaintiff is not entitled to rent of that plot of land from the defendant.

It is also urged before us that the defendant is not in possession of other plots of land, that the utmost that can be said is that he was in possession of 21 bighas only. The Munsif deals with it and says that he is not prepared to accept the statement of the defendant in that respect. He comes to a definite finding with regard to the plot, which we have dealt with. This does not seem to call for a remand having regard to the finding arrived at by the Munsif.

Having regard to those findings we think that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for rent with the exception of the plot of land above mentioned, that is to say, he will have a decree for Rs. 31-2 annas per year with cess and damages and costs in proportion.

Order accordingly.

MUSAMMAT SHAHNDO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pre-emption, right of, nature of—Sale—Vendor entitled to only a portion of property sold—Pre-emptor, whether entitled to proportionate abatement in price.

A right of pre-emption is a right of substitution, and the pre-emptor steps into the shoes of the vendee in respect of all the rights and obligations in respect of the sale transaction. [p. 567, col. 1.]

APARNA CHARAN CHABRI v. GOPI NATH SAMANTA.

In the case of a sale of landed property where the vendor is found later to have owned only part, the purchaser, if he has acted bona fide, is not compelled to surrender the remnant portion of his purchase to a pre-emptor at a less sum than that which he paid for the entirety of his purchase, if the purchaser elects to abide by his bargain and retain the residue at the amount he paid for the whole.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 18th October 1917.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the pre emption of one-third share of a joint khata sold by Musammat Bishni to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for Rs. 300. During the pendency of the pre emption suit, the other co sharers in the khata brought a suit that the vendor was entitled to only one ninth share and not to one-third share, and obtained a decree in their favour.

The contention on behalf of the pre-emptor is that, considering that he cannot get more than one-ninth of the joint holding, he is liable to pay not the price mentioned in the deed but only one-third thereof. To this contention I am unable to accede. It has been repeatedly held that the right of pre-emption is a right of substitution, and that the pre-emptor steps into the shoes of the vendee in respect of all the rights and obligations arising out of the sale transaction. Indeed, a judgment in N. W. P. Sudder Dewanni, Adawlat, 1863, at page 394, lays down that "in case of landed property, where the vendor is found later to have owned only part, the purchaser, if he has acted bona fide, is not compelled to surrender the remnant portion of his purchase to a pre-emptor at a less sum than that which he paid for the entirety of his purchase, if the purchaser elects to abide by his bargain and retain the residue at the amount he paid for the whole."

Mr. Nanak Chand for the appellant places his reliance upon an unreported judgment in Civil Appeal No. 1C 2 of 19 6 which is to the effect that a condition in the deed of sale, by which the vendor guarantees his title in the land solely to the vendee and agrees to compensate the latter, if disturbed, is one which does not enure for the benefit of the pre-emptor. The learned Counsel consequently argues that as his client is not entitled to bring a suit against the vendor for damages caused by the breach of the covenant of title, he should not be compelled to pay the whole price. In view of the nature of the right of pre-emption, I am doubtful whether that ruling should be regarded as sound law. At any rate, I do not think that there is any valid reason why I should not follow the decision of the Agra Court, which is directly to the point and lays down a principle which has my entire concurrence.

The learned Counsel's prayer for the extension of time for the payment of money cannot be accepted. The appeal, therefore, fails, but, in view of the novelty of the point involved, the parties are directed to bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

In a suit for rent by the plaintiffs, who were co-sharer landlords, the defendants sought to use a judgment in a previous rent suit between other co-sharer landlords and themselves in which the plaintiffs in this suit were pro forma defendants:

Held, that the decision in the previous suit for rent could neither be binding on the present plaintiffs nor operate as res judicata against them on matters which were not or could not be in issue in that suit between them as pro forma defendants and the principal defendants [p. 568, col. 1.]

Evidence not tendered before the primary Court ought not to be admitted by the Appellate Court, unless on examining the evidence as it stands some lacuna or inherent defect becomes apparent, and not merely because a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it, [p. 569, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 29th of November 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 11th of September 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarada Charan Maity, for the Appellants, submitted that in reversing the decision of the Munsif the lower Appellate Court relied on a judgment in a previous rent suit between the present defendants and the co-sharers of the plaintiffs. It held that the question relating to the jama purchased by the defendants was res judicata because of the decision in the previous rent suit to which the present plaintiffs were added as pro forma defendants. The lower Appellate Court erred in allowing the document to be used in evidence at the appellate stage without recording sufficient reason for so doing as required by Order XLI, rule 27, Civil Procedure Code. The lower Appellate Court could not admit such document in evidence without fulfilling the conditions laid down in Order XLI, rule 27, Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1), Garden Reach Spinning & Manufacturing Co. v. Secretary of State for India (2) The decision of the Court of Appeal below was vitiated by the admission in evidence of the judgment in question.

On the question of res judicata the view taken by the learned Judge was also incorrect. The present plaintiffs could not be held bound by any decision in the suit for the conduct of which they were not in any way responsible. The doctrine of res judicata could not be applied to the facts of the case. The present plaintiffs had been merely pro forma defendants and there was no contest between them and the principal defendants. Section 11, Civil Procedure Code, was referred to.

Babu Satcouri Pati Roy, for the Respondents, contended that the lower Appellate Court had discretion to admit the additional evidence in question, and it did so under Order XLI, rule 27, sub-rule (1), clause (b). The admission of the judgment in the previous rent suit did not vitiate the decision of the lower Appellate Court. Ambuja Amma v. Appadurai Mudali (3) was referred to. On the question of res judicata the lower Appellate Court rightly held that the finding in the previous rent suit that the defendants did not hold the land of the disputed jama as a part of their ancestral holding was res judicata as between the plaintiffs and the defendants in this suit. This question was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit, and there was adjudication upon the question in the presence of the plaintiffs who were present before the Court as pro forma defendants. The plaintiffs, therefore, were bound by the decision in the previous suit on the question relating to the purchased jama.

Babu Sarada Charan Maity briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent brought by the co sharer landlords. The plaintiffs' case was that the defendants held 4 bighas of land at a rental of 2 aras and $3\frac{1}{2}$ mans. The defendants alleged that they held the 2 bighas of land only at a jama of 14 kuris. The defendants admittedly held their ancestral jote of 2 bighas at the rent admitted by them. The dispute between the parties was whether they also held another jote which had formerly belonged to one Sharif Patar and which is said to have been purchased by the defendants in 1296. The Munsif held that the defendants held the lands in both the jamas and were liable for the full amount of the rent claimed. The lower Appellate Court held that the question relating to the purchased jama was res judicata and modified the Munsif's decree and granted the plaintiffs a decree in accordance with the defendants' admission. In deciding this issue of res judicata the lower Appellate Court relied on the judgment in a previous rent suit which had not been put in in evidence before the Munsif. In admitting this judgment in evidence the learned District Judge failed to record reasons for its admission in accordance with the provisions of clause 2 of rule 27 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is nothing on the record to show that the admission of this evidence was justified. It was not certainly justified under clause (a), sub-section (1) of that rule, since the document had not been tendered and there was no refusal to admit it in the first Court. As regards clause (b) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) laid down the conditions under which evidence should be admitted for the first time in the Court of Appeal. The legitimate occasion for this rule is when on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, and not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. It will be necessary for the case to be sent back to the lower Appellate Court for re hearing, and at the re-hearing the learned District Judge will consider whether this document will be required to be produced and the learned Judge will in the exercise of his discretion decide either to admit or to refuse this document.

Then as regards the question of res judicata the learned District Judge seems to have overlooked a very important point. The plaintiff in the previous suit was not the plaintiff in the present suit but one of his co-sharers. The plaintiffs in the present suit were the pro forma defendants in that suit. But as pro forma defendants, though the decision might be binding upon them as to their claim to any share of the rent for the years for which the rent was claimed in that suit, the decision cannot be binding upon them on matters which were not or could not be in issue between them as pro forma defendants and the principal defendants. They were not responsible for the conduct of the suit and should not be held responsible for their co sharers' act in that suit. The only point in which they were interested was whether their share of the rent for these years had been paid and if they did not think it necessary to enter appearance in that suit in order to insist on their claim, there was no duty cast upon them to take any action in connection with that suit. It is pointed out that the last year for which the rent was claimed in that suit is the first year in which the rent is claimed in the present suit and so far as the claim for that year is concerned, it would appear that the plaintiffs' suit is barred. But as regards the subsequent years the finding in the previous suit that the defendants did not hold the land of the disputed jama as a part of their ancestral holding is not res judicata as between the plaintiffs and the defendants in the present suit.

As other points were raised on behalf of the respondents in the lower Appellate Court and it left them undecided, the suit will be remanded for the determination of those issues as well as the issue of res judicata as regards the rent of the year 1919. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the suit remanded to the lower Appellate Court for re hearing in accordance with the above directions.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Co-sharers—Joint khata*—Possession of one co-sharer, whether can be disturbed by another—Remedies of dispossessed co-sharer—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s.* 9.

The peaceful possession of a person is a substantial right the infringement of which gives rise to a cause of action and although if he is dispossessed, he has the right to sue under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, he is not bound to do so. [p. 570, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the case of a joint khata of agricultural land one co-sharer ordinarily cultivates one field and other co-sharers cultivate other fields, but one co-sharer cannot dispossess the other against his will from the field of which he has possession. Where such dispossession takes place, the dispossessed co-sharer can sue to recover possession of the plot of which he has been deprived. [p. 570, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 31st January 1918.

Mr. Rup Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for recovery of possession of 4 biswas and 14 biswansis of land out of a joint holding from which it is alleged the plaintiff-appellant was dispossessed against his will by defendant Ibrahim. The parties are joint owners in the holding. It is admitted that the plaintiff has for the last 14 or 15 years cultivated 2 bighas 10 biswas and 14 biswansis through Nanda as tenant. In January 1917 the defendant is said to have taken illegal possession of the land in suit. The first Court gave a decree for possession of the land but the lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit. It held that the suit would have been maintainable under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act if brought within six months of the date of dispossession. As it was brought seven months after that date, the plaintiff has no remedy but to apply for partition.

Mr. Rup Ram on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant cites Wazir Singh v. Mehtab Singh (1) and Jhangi v. Ramzan (2) as authorities for the proposition that one co-sharer may, under certain circumstances, take and keep exclusive possession of a portion of shamilat land for his own use until partition, and that another joint owner is not by reason of the land being shamilat necessarily entitled to disturb his possession. For the respondents it is contended that these rulings are not applicable as the land in suit is not shamilat deh. In my opinion the principle of those rulings is applicable. In the case of a joint khata of agricultural land one co sharer ordinarily cultivates one field and other co-sharers cultivate other fields, and it is certainly not the law that one sharer can dispossess the other against his will from the field of which he has possession. In Jhangi v. Ramzan (2) it was stated that in accordance with well-known law and custom as to possession of plots of shamilat by individual co sharers, the defendants in forcibly dispossessing were qua plaintiff mere trespassers. In accordance with this principle I hold that plaintiff appellant's peaceful possession was a substantive right, the infringement of which gave rise to a cause of action. As pointed out, in that case also the plaintiff might have sued under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act but he was not bound to do so. Plaintiff cultivated cheri in the land in Kharif 1916 and it may very possibly have been lying vacant in the succeeding Rabi. That fact alone would not, however, entitle defendant to take possession without the plaintiff's consent. I hold that plaintiff is entitled to recovery of possession.

As to the claim for Rs. 7-8-0 on account of damages, I do not think that plaintiff can recover that amount in the Civil Court. It is a sum which would apparently be recoverable under section 14 of the Punjab Tenancy Act.

I accept the appeal so far as to give plaintiff a decree for possession of the land claimed. As plaintiff has only partially succeeded, I order that the parties should bear their own costs throughout.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 167—Notice to annul incumbrance—Service of notice, mode of—Personal service, whether necessary—Appeal, second—Finding as to service of notice, whether finding of fact.

A notice annulling an incumbrance under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act must, wherever practicable, be served personally. Other methods of service can only be adopted where personal service cannot reasonably be effected [p. 571, col. 2; p. 572, col. 1.]

A finding of the lower Appellate Court that a notice annulling an incumbrance under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was properly served, is not a finding of fact and can be questioned in second appeal. [p. 572, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 14th of August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Sadar, dated the 26th of May 1916.

RAM GOBINDA v. RAJANI KANTA DAS.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen), for the Plaintiff Appellant.—Defendant No. 13 only contests this suit of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 13 was one of the purchasers of the equity of redemption from the defendants first party who executed the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 13 was also landlord of the tenures. Now the material question which has to be decided is whether there was a proper service of notice to annul the encumbrance. Defendant No. 13 says that the mortgaged property was sold under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act in execution of a rent decree and purchased by him. He says he has annulled the encumbrance by a proper notice served under section 167, Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit the encumbrance has not been annulled, as there was no proper service as required by law. The notice ought to have been served on the plaintiff, who is a practising Pleader, at Hathagari personally. Here the service is clearly bad. As regards mode of service, refers to S. C. Sen's Bengal Tenancy Act, Appendix I, page 2, rule 2, and also Order V, rule 12 and rule 15. Rule 12 of Order V, Civil Procedure Code, is quite clear on the poin: it distinctly says that wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person.

Babu Khitish Chander Sen, for the Defendants-Respondents.—The finding is that the encumbrance was annulled and this being a finding of fact, the question was no longer open. The service of notice was perfectly good as the notice was served at the plaintiff's residence at Sikarpur.

[FLETCHER, J.—The man must be served.]

The point cannot, I submit, be re opened here, as it has been found as a fact by the learned District Judge that there was a proper service.

[FLETCHER, J.—He was a practising lawyer, it was practicable to serve him.]

Dr. Basak was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the plaintiff against the judgment of the learned District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 14th August 1917, reversing the decision of the Third Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff brought the suit to enforce a mortgage which was executed in his favour by the defendants first party. The defendants second party subsequently purchased the equity of redemption. Only one of them, namely the defendant No. 13, contested the suit. He was also the landlord of the tenure and his case was that the mortgaged property had been sold under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act in execution of a rent decree and purchased by him and the other defendants second party and that proper notice had been served under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to annul the encumbrances. The question, therefore, is: "Was the encumbrance annulled?" The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found that the encumbrance was annulled, and it is said that that is a finding of fact not open to question. I do not agree. The learned Judge has found facts from which he infers that proper notice complying with the terms of the Statute was served. What he has found is this. That the plaintiff is a Pleader and he ordinarily practises at a place called Hathagari where apparently he also resides, and the notice was not served on the plaintiff himself but was served on a blind man who had a house jointly with the plaintiff at a village called Sikarpur. The learned Judge, however, makes this finding that no doubt it would have been the better course to have served the Pleader himself at Hathagari. The learned Judge thought that the service at the residence that he had at Sikarpur with his uncle was a perfectly good service. The statutory rules that have been framed by the Government of Bengal under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act are quite clear on this matter. Rule 2 provides that except as otherwise prescribed, a service of notice shall be effected in the manner prescribed for the service of summons on a defendant under the Code of Civil Procedure. So, one has got to look at the Civil Procedure Code and Order V, rule 12, is quite clear that where it is practicable, the service should be made on the defendant in person. Now, in this case, the Judge has found that it was practicable to serve the notice on the defendant in person. He says it would have been better to serve the Pleader at Hathagari. So obviously, in his opinion, it was quite practicable to serve him there. If it was practicable, the other method of service does not apply, as provided by the Code in the event of the defendant not being found. It seems to me quite clear in this case that there was no proper notice served on the plaintiff to annul the encumbrance. In that view of the case, we must set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge and restore the decree passed by the Munsif with costs both in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 19th February 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur dismissing their suit for a declaration that the defendant has not got under-proprietary rights or any kind of right in respect of 69 Bighas 1 Biswa in the village of Bhain, Sultanpur district. They alternatively ask for a decree for possession, but in appeal it is admitted by their Counsel that they cannot get this in a Civil Court. By this admission their Counsel must also be held to give up the claim for a declaration that the defendant has no sort of right, as the admission implies that the defendant is at least a tenant. The allegations on which the suit was brought are these :—

The village Bhain is divided into two Mahals—one the Mahal of Asghar Ali Khan and the other that of Wazir Ali Khan. It is with the latter only that we are concerned in this suit and it will be called in this judgment "the Mahal." One-half of the Mahal Wazir Ali Khan was owned by the three sons of Nawazish Ali Khan, Mehndi Husain Khan, Abid Husain Khan and Yusuf Husain Khan (hereinafter called the three brothers). The other half was owned by Hadi Husain Khan, but his half was also in the possession of the three brothers under a charge securing them the possession of it until the money charged was paid. The defendant Binda Prasad was a tenant of 69 Bighas 1 Biswa in the Mahal. On the 16th October 1890 the whole Mahal was mortgaged to one Baiju, who was succeeded in his interest by Ramanand. The mortgage was for the sum of Rs. 19,000 and was a possessory mortgage. The brothers mortgaged thereby their own half share of the Mahal and also their possessory rights as charge-holders in the other half share. In the year 1903 Ramanand mortgagee issued a notice of ejectment against Binda Prasad defendant in respect of the 69 Bighas 1 Biswa. Binda Prasad contested the notice by a suit under section 56 and set up a perpetual lease, dated the 6th June 1863. On the 15th June 1903 the Assistant Collector, who was trying the case, held the lease to be invalid and a fictitious document, but cancelled the notice of ejectment owing to certain formal defects in it. Ramanand appealed to the Commissioner from this decision and was successful, the ejectment of Binda Prasad being ordered on the 23rd July 1904. A second appeal to the Board of Revenue was filed by Binda Prasad but failed. After this adverse decision in the Rent Courts Binda Prasad filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur asking for a declaration not merely that he was a perpetual tenant but that he had under-proprietary rights by virtue of the lease of 1363, that is to say, he claimed that under the lease he had both a heritable and transferable interest. In this suit Ramanand mortgagee was the chief defendant, but the three brothers were also impleaded as having an interest by reason of their right to the equity of redemption. It is admitted by Counsel on both sides that in Oudh such a declaratory suit can be filed by a tenant notwithstanding a Rent Court decree for ejectment. When this suit was filed, the three brothers put in a written statement confessing judgment. Ramanand, however, contested the suit. On the 5th June 1905 during the pendency of the suit the three brothers executed a second mortgage of the half of the Mahal of which they were the owners to one Lala Hingu Mal, the brother and predecessor-in-interest of plaintiff No. 1. This mortgage was not possessory. Out of the total consideration of Rs. 6,000 a sum of Rs. 5,720 was left in deposit with Hingu Mal, for the purpose of being paid to Ramanand by the mortgagors in redemption of his prior possessory mortgage and (after seven days) on the 12th June 1905 taking this money out of deposit the mortgagors redeemed Ramanand's mortgage. Nine days after the execution of this mortgage Binda Prasad's suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur was dismissed, it being held that the lease of 1863 conferred no heritable and transferable interest. Binda Prasad appealed to the District Judge of Rae Bareli, the respondents being the three brothers and Ramanand. On the 18th September 1905, Ramanand put in an application asking to be struck off as a defendant, on the ground that his mortgage having been redeemed he was no longer interested in the suit. Then the three brothers and Binda Prasad filed a compromise wherein, in consideration of the raising of Binda Prasad's rent from Rs. 105 to Rs. 150, the brothers admitted the claim of Binda Prasad to be an under-proprietor. The District Judge on the 18th September 1905 passed a decree declaring Binda Prasad to be an under-proprietor. It is this decree which is stated to be void on the ground of fraud. Subsequently Hingu Mal, the predecessor-in interest of plaintiff No. 1, brought a suit on the foot of his mortgage of the 5th June 1905 and obtained a decree for sale of the one-half of the Mahal mortgaged to him thereby. The date of the decree is the 12th January 1912. On the 14th February 1914 in pursuance of this decree the mortgagee, Hingu Mal, himself purchased the half of the Mahal. Later on the possessory right of the three brothers as charge-holders of the other half of the Mahal was sold in execution of a simple money decree due to some other creditor and was purchased by plaintiff No. 2 on the 29th May 1915. Thereafter plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 issued another notice of ejectment against the defendant Binda Prasad, who in spite of the previous decree for his ejectment by the Commissioner of Fyzabad of the 23rd July 1904 had avoided ejectment by filing the declaratory suit mentioned above. This time Binda Prasad resisted the notice of ejectment on the strength of the decree of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated the 8th September 1905, and on the 30th of October 1916 succeeded in getting the notice cancelled by the Assistant Collector who was trying the case. This decree was upheld on appeal by the Commissioner of Fyzabad. Hence this present suit, asking for a declaration that Binda Prasad defendant has no under-proprietary rights and that the plaintiffs are not bound by the compromise decree of the 18th September 1905.

The learned Sudordinate Judge of Sultanpur has dismissed the suit on the following findings :—

(a) that the decree of 18th September 1905 was neither collusive nor fraudulent:

(b) that neither plaintiff No. 1 nor plaintiff No. 2 had any right to maintain the suit, inasmuch as the former obtained his interest in one-half of the Mahal as mortgagee after the institution of the suit which ended in Binda Prasad being declared to have under-proprietary rights and the latter was merely a purchaser at a much later date of the rights of the brothers qua charge-holders to hold possession of the other half of the mahal:

(c) that Binda Prasad was an under-proprietor by virtue of the decree of the 18th September 1905 behind which it was unnecessary to go:

(d) that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 120 of the Limitation Act, it really being a suit to avoid the decree of the 18th September 1905 and six years having elapsed from the date of that decree:

(e) that under the principle of lis pendens as set forth in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff No. 1 could not sue on the strength of his mortgage of the 5th June 1905, because that mortgage was executed during the pendency of the suit which ended in Binda Prasad being declared an under proprietor.

It may be conceded to the appellants that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff No. 1 had no right to maintain the suit because his interest as mortgagee came into existence after the filing in 1905 (or at the end of 1904) of the declaratory suit by Binda Prasad in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur. Assuming that the compromise decree of the 18th September 1905 was obtained by fraud against the plaintiff No. 1 and had the effect of defrauding him, that decree had the same effect as if the three brothers had assigned to Binda Prasad under-proprietary rights on the date of the decree. Such an assignment would obviously diminish their mortgagee's existing security. Again the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act was a bar to the plaintiff No. 1 impeaching the decree of the 18th September 1905. It is true that the mortgage in favour of Hingu Mal was effected by the three brothers while Binda Prasad's declaratory suit was pending and as such it could not affect the rights of Binda Prasad under that decree. There is, however, no question of the transfer per se affecting those rights. Section 52 cannot be held to have the effect that a transferee during the pendency of a suit from one party to the suit is debarred from impeaching the decree on the ground of fraud by the parties to the decree effected by acts done after the transfer. Again the Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs were not in a position to claim that Binda Prasad's assertion of under-proprietary rights affected their rights as persons in possession of the Mahal until they had acquired such possession. It may be that the plaintiffs are unable to obtain a decree that the defendant has not got under-proprietary rights in the 69 Bighas 1 Biswa until they get rid of the decree of the 18th September 1905, but this will not prevent them bringing a suit for declaration that Binda Prasad has no under-proprietary rights. It will only mean that such a suit cannot be successful. Again, the Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the failure of Hingu Mal, when he sued to enforce his mortgage, to implead Binda Prasad as a person interested would debar him from maintaining that Binda Prasad had not under-proprietary rights. Binda Prasad's under-proprietary rights could not be adversely affected by any decree for sale, nor were they admitted by Hingu Mal to exist. The ruling quoted by the lower Court does not appear to be applicable.

At the same time the plaintiffs' suit must fail on various grounds. The Subordinate Judge was clearly right in holding that the plaint fails to indicate on what grounds it is claimed that the decree of 1905 was obtained by fraud or to set forth facts from which fraud may be directly and conclusively inferred. The appellants invoke paragraphs 10 and 15 of the plaint, but it is clear that these paragraphs fail to state certain facts which it is necessary to establish before the decree of 1905 can be held to be fraudulent. For instance, if Hingu Mal was aware at the time of taking his mortgage that the three brothers had already confessed judgment by their written statement and if he was also aware that this suit for a declaration by Binda Prasad was in progress, he cannot plead that the decree was obtained behind his back. Neither paragraph 10 nor 15 of the plaint sets forth that he was not aware of these things: nor has any evidence as a matter of fact been furnished by the plaintiffs to show that he was unaware. That the plaint did not set forth the facts on which the allegation of fraud was based with sufficient clearness is also evident from the difficulty which the appellants' Counsel has found in stating those facts in argument in appeal. He has had to change his ground two or three times Ultimately the position he appears to take up is this. The three brothers had determined to acknowledge Binda Prasad's under-proprietary rights by virtue of the lease of 1863. They knew that the first mortgagee Ramanand who was in possession would not admit these rights. They, therefore, determined to get Ramanand's mortgage redeemed by Hingu Mal, and at the same time keep Hingu Mal in ignorance that this case was in progress. The redemption of Ramanand's mortgage was successfully effected by means of money obtained from Hingu Mal, but before Ramanand notified to the Court that he had no further interest in the case Binda Prasad's suit was dismissed on the objection of Ramanand taken in his written statement. Binda Prasad was, therefore, compelled to appeal and Ramanand during this appeal withdrew as respondent as he had no further interest. The three brothers then, colluding with Binda Prasad, agreed to a decree affirming his under proprietary rights. I may here state that I do not agree with the Subordinate Judge that, because Binda Prasad agreed to pay a higher rent as under-proprietor than he had been paying as mere lessee, the three brothers must be acquitted of any fraudulent intention. A fraud on another person does not cease to be a fraud because one of the parties to the fraud receives some inducement to join in the fraud from the other party. But it is impossible to believe that Hingu Mal was ignorant of the fact of this case between Binda Prasad and his mortgagors being in progress or of the fact that his mortgagors were admitting Binda Prasad's claim. Hingu Mal was a resident of Sultanpur, where the case was being tried. It is perhaps possible that he was not aware of Binda Prasad's appeal to the District Judge of Rae Bareli, but there is no evidence to prove that he was unaware of it and it was necessary for the plaintiffs, in order to make out that the decree was fraudulent, to produce some evidence that he was not aware of it. One would have expected that if the decree was passed behind the back of Hingu Mal, he would have taken steps to object to it when he heard of it, but he never did anything of the sort. Assuming, however, that the decree was a fraudulent one intended to defraud Hingu Mal, it would be necessary to show that he was defrauded. It is clear he was not defrauded. He obtained a decree for sale of one-half of the Mahal mortgaged to him and in execution of that decree the mortgaged share was sold and he obtained his full mortgage money. Again, neither plaintiff No. 1 nor plaintiff No. 2 can succeed in this suit so long as they are bound by the decree of the 18th September 1905. This is not a suit to set aside that decree, and, if it were, it would be barred by limitation. The plaintiffs cannot, after claiming as their cause of action an assertion by Binda Prasad of his rights as under-proprietor within six years, turn round and say that their real cause of action is the passing of this fraudulent decree. Again neither plaintiff is in a position to avoid the decree on the ground of it being fraudulent. Plaintiff No. 1, at the date of the filing of this suit and indeed at the date of his issuing the notice of ejectment on Binda Prasad, was not the successor-in-interest of Hingu Mal, as mortgagee. He was his successor as purchaser of the property when sold at the instance of Hingu Mal. Hingu Mal's mortgage has ceased to exist as he has been paid up by the money realised in execution sale. A fraudulent decree can only be impeached by a person who has been injured by it. The contention of the appellants' Counsel that such a decree is void and not voidable has not been supported by any authority and requires no consideration. A further bar to the success of the plaintiffs' suit is that, even if we were to assume that the decree of 18th September 1905 was fraudulent and void, there is no evidence to show that Binda Prasad has not got the rights of an under-proprietor apart from that decree. It has been contended in appeal, though this point was not made in the lower Court, that the plaintiff No. 1, as successor-in interest of Hingu Mal, has acquired all the rights of the first mortgagee Ramanand by reason of Ramanand having been redeemed by money paid by Hingu Mal. It is, therefore, maintained that he can take advantage of the Rent

KALI PROSUNNA v. ASGAR.

Court decree of the Commissioner who ordered the ejectment of Binda Prasad. But inasmuch as Hingu Mal's mortgage has been satisfied, no right remains to him as mortgagee. The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, take advantage of the fact of Hingu Mal having paid off a prior mortgagee. This being so, it is not necessary to determine whether the payment of Ramanand out of the money left with Hingu Mal by the three brothers, when these three brothers sold Hingu Mal the equity of redemption, and subsequently drawn by the three brothers to pay off Ramanand, will bring into operation the provisions of section 74 of the Transfer of Property Act. It has been held by the Allahabad High Court, when money is raised by the mortgagor on a second mortgage and is used by him for paying off the first mortgage, the second mortgagee cannot take advantage of this section, for the payment has not been made by him. See Baijnath v. Murlidhar (1) and Maharaj Singh v. Balwant (2). The case of Raja Ali Mohammad Khan v. Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki (3) relied on by the appellants' Counsel does not conflict with these rulings. It only holds that where a second mortgagor's money is used subsequent to the date of the second mortgage and apart from the consideration for that second mortgage, it will be no answer that the actual person who handed the money over was the mortgagor. The other ruling relied on by the appellants, Swaminatha Pillai v. Krishna Iyer (4), is only authority for holding that a prior mortgage debt partly discharged by money advanced by a subsequent mortgagee entitles the subsequent mortgagee to priority against an intermediate mortgagee to the extent to which his money was applied to pay off the earlier debt It is true that in this case the money used appears to have been money paid out of the amount received from the subsequent mortgagee as consideration for the mortgage to him, but the point in question does not appear to have been raised in that case and the report in Indian Cases is not full enough to justify that case being cited as an authority on this point.

Consequently I find that the plaintiffs-appellants are debarred from getting a declaration by the existence of the decree of the 18th September 1905 declaring Binda Prasad to have under proprietary rights in the plots in suit, that they have not been injured by this decree and so are not in a position to ask that it should be held ineffectual against them on the ground of fraud, that even if they have been injured avoidance of the decree is barred by limitation, that there is no proof that the decree was obtained by fraud and that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the defendant has not got under-proprietary rights apart from the decree. Accordingly I dismiss this appeal with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1282 OF 1917.

May 29, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Newbould.

KALI PROSUNNA BASU ROY CHOUDHURY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Sheikh ASGAR (TALUKDAR) AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 153—Rent suit—Adverse possession of third parties, finding on—Question of title, whether decided—Appeal, second, whether lies—Finding on question not in issue, effect of.

The finding of a Court in a rent suit on a question of adverse possession which does not arise at all, is not a decision on a question of title and is consequently not open to second appeal under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 577, col. 1.]

Where a Court records a finding on a question which is not in issue in the suit, such finding is inoperative. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Dacca, dated the 10th of March 1917, affirming that of the Registrar Munsif, Munshiganj, dated the 14th of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Trailokya Nath Ghose (with him Babu Promothanath Banerji), for the Respondents.—The second appeal is not competent under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendant says that he is a tenant neither of the plaintiff nor of his co sharers. It appears that the Courts below have not gone into the question of title; so it cannot be said that any question of title has been decided so as to make the case fall within the purview of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Refers to Doorga Narain Sen v. Ram Lal Chhutar (1), Shilabati Debi v. Rodrigues (2). Even if the co-sharer landlord is a party defendant, that will not make the case appealable unless the question of title is actually decided. Refers to Hurry Mohun Mozoomdar v. Dwarka-nath Sein (3).

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Appellant.—The appeal is competent for this reason that the pro forma defendants, who are co sharers of the plaintiff, have been held to have acquired by adverse possession a right to realise from the tenant the rents due to the plaintiff's share. So it appears that the lower Courts have decided a question of title. I want to show that my title to recover rent cannot be lost by the possession of my co sharer. Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (4).

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision in a rent suit In my opinion, the preliminary objection taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies must prevail.

The appeal is valued at Rs. 7-11 annas and no question has been decided which under section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, makes a second appeal lie in this Court. It is contended that on the question regarding title to land in dispute, conflicting claims have been decided. The learned Subordinate Judge starts his judgment by stating that he would confine himself to the determination of the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists between the plaintiff and the defendants, and it is not necessary for him to enter into the question of title. This itself indicates that no question of title has been decided. It is true, as pointed out, that at the end of the judgment the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a finding that the pro forma defendants had been in adverse possession to the plaintiff and thereby his right to recover rent from the defendants was barred by lapse of time. But apart from the opening remarks which I have quoted, this decision was a decision which must be inoperative because it decides a question that never arose in the suit. The pro forma defendants never set up title adversely to that of the plaintiff, or alleged that they had dispossessed him. If the Court in its judgment comes to a finding on a point which is not in issue in the suit, such a finding cannot have any effect.

I, therefore, hold that under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act no appeal lies, and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

JAMIAT SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammat RAJI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10—Suit for recovery of trust property against trustee of shrine and his donee—Limitation—Trustee of shrine, whether competent to acquire private property.

A suit for recovery of property against a person in whom the property has become vested in trust for the upkeep of a shrine and against his assign who is not an assign for valuable consideration, for instance a donee, is covered by the provisions of section 10 of the Limitation Act. [p. 578, col. 2.]

The custodian of a shrine who is not a member of a religious fraternity is not incompetent to acquire private property of his own [p. 578, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 14th February 1918.

Mr. Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present appeal arises plaintiffs sued Musammat Raji, donor, and Musammat Kishni, donee, for ejectment of the latter from two plots of land gifted by the former to the latter. The suit was brought on the ground that the land was attached to the gurdawara of Shahid Ganj and that Musammat Raji had no authority to alienate them. The plots are (a) 6 bighas, 19 biswas and (b) 11 bighas, 15 biswas. The first Court held that the plot (a) was attached to the gurdawara and that Musammat Raji had no power to make a gift of it but that the plot (b) was gifted to Ram Singh, the husband of Musammat Raji, and was not attached to the gurdawara and that, therefore, the plaintiffs had no locus standi to object to the gift of it. It, therefore, gave a decree as regards plot (a) and dismissed the suit as regards plot (b). The lower Appellate Court agreed as regards plot (b) with the decision of the first Court As regards plot (a) it was of opinion that the only suit which plaintiff could bring in regard to it was one for a declaration and that such a suit was time-barred not having been brought within six years of the date of gift.

Plaintiffs have filed a second appeal to this Court. With reference to plot (a) it is quite clear from the revenue records that it was originally granted for the up-keep of the shrine. The muafi file shows that the muafidar had no power to alienate it. This fact is not seriously contested before me. The lower Appellate Court's view that the only suit that could be brought in regard to this plot was one for a declaration does not appear to be correct. The learned District Judge relies upon Kazi Hassan v. Sagun Balkrishna (1). In that case the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been granted in wakf to their ancestor and his lineal descendants to defray the expenses for, or connected with, the services of a certain mosque; that their father and cousins, who were mutwallis in charge of the said property, had illegally alienated some of these lands, and had also ceased to render any service to the mosque It was held in that case that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue to have the alienation set aside and the wakf property restored to the service of the mosque. It was also held that wakf property could not be alienated and that any person interested in the endowment could sue to have the alienations set aside and the property restored to the trust. In the present case the plaintiffs do not sue for possession for themselves. They sue to dispossess the alienee. In other words, they wish that the property should be restored to the purpose for which it was granted. It is not contended now by Counsel for respondents that the suit for dispossession of the donee cannot lie.

It is, however, contended that the suit is barred by time and the following authorities are cited:—Narain Singh v. Ishar Singh (2), Asa Ram v. Paras Ram (3) and Achar Singh v. Badhawa Singh (4). In the case reported as Asa Ram v. Paras Ram (3) the plaintiff brought a suit as reversioner to contest an alienation made by the last manager of the endowed property and asked for the dispossession of the assignee in favour of the endowment. It was held that the limitation applicable to such a suit was that prescribed by section 120 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act. In Narain Singh v. Ishar Singh (2) the facts were somewhat similar and it was held that Article 120 applied. In both these cases, however, the alienation was for valuable consideration and, therefore, section 10 of the Limitation Act did not apply. Section 10 is as follows:—"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time." Now the present suit is one against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for the upkeep of a shrine and against her assign who is not an assign for valuable consideration and, therefore, in my opinion, section 10 of the Limitation Act

(2) 8 P. R. 1899.
(3) 9 P. R. 1904.

applies and the suit is not barred by time. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree as regards plot (a).

As regards plot (b), however, the case stands on a different footing. The record shows that it was gifted to Ram Singh as dharamarth. The meaning of the word dharamarth was considered in Gurdit Singh v. Sher Singh (5) to be a charitable grant or a religious endowment. There is no evidence of any sort to show that the gift of this plot was made to Ram Singh in his capacity as custodian of the shrine. It was, in my opinion, made to him as a private person. Mr. Sewa Ram Singh refers to Article 89 of Rattigan's Digest, which is to the effect that all property acquired by individual members of a religious fraternity belongs as a general rule to the religious institution to which they are attached; and from this he argues that plot (b), which was acquired by Ram Singh, belongs to the shrine of which he was a custodian. In my opinion this argument has no force. Ram Singh was the custodian of a shrine and not one of the members of a religious fraternity. No authority was cited in support of the proposition that the custodian of a shrine such as Ram Singh cannot acquire private property of his own. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have no locus standi in regard to plot (b).

I accept the appeal and modifying the order of the lower Appellate Court restore the decree of the first Court, declaring that the gift is invalid so far as the plot of 6 bighas, 19 biswas is concerned and ordering Musammat Kishni's ejectment therefrom and dismiss his suit as regards the plot of 11 bighas, 15 biswas. The parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

RAMASWAMI CHETTI—AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF & DEFENDANT No. 1.—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 18, 21, 39 (b)—Jurisdiction of Courts, territorial changes in—Sale by Court which ceased to exercise jurisdiction, validity of—Acquiescence by judgment-debtor, whether binds purchaser at sale by Court to which jurisdiction, is transferred—Estoppel—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 41, applicability of.

A notification declaring that certain property or the area wherein it is situate is transferred from the jurisdiction of one Court to that of another, must be read as speaking retrospectively and as declaring that from and after its date, the former Court ceased to have jurisdiction over the subject-matter. [p. 582, col. 2.]

Where a Court which issued an order of attachment of certain property had been deprived of jurisdiction over the property but it ordered the sale of the property notwithstanding, the judgment-debtor not objecting:

Held, (1) that the purchaser at the sale acquired no title to the property and that a purchaser at a sale ordered subsequently by the Court to which the jurisdiction over the property was transferred was entitled to possession; [p. 583, col. 2.]

Section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act only provides that a transfer from an ostensible owner confers title on the transferee. Where title is ostensibly in a person and the real owner further acknowledges the title as true, persons who seek to prove that the title is illusory will not be permitted to do so. What is denied is the right to adduce evidence that the prima facie title is not the real title. The principle does not apply to execution creditors, who are not, under all circumstances, estopped by considerations affecting the judgment-debtor. [p. 583, col 2.]

It is not a general rule of law that an order for sale by a Judge who has no jurisdiction to direct it can be upheld on the ground that the judgment-debtor did not oppose it. The justification for such a rule of estoppel is the legislative provision in that behalf. That provision must be regarded as an exception to the general rule that orders passed without jurisdiction are nullities. This exceptional rule of estoppel should not be extended further than is warranted by its language. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Sections 18 and 21 of the Civil Procedure Code do not bind in terms persons like execution creditors. [p. 584, col. 1]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 22 of 1916.

FACTS.—An application for attachment was made to the Ramnad Sub-Court in execution of a decree transferred to it for execution but before the attachment was ordered, the territorial jurisdiction in respect of the attached properties had been transferred to the Sivaganga Sub-Court. After the attachment by the Ramnad Court, another creditor of the same judgment-debtor got these properties attached by the Sivaganga Court on a decree in his favour. Subsequent thereto the Ramnad Court sold away the properties by public auction. Afterwards the Sivaganga Court held its sale and plaintiff purchased the property and brought this suit to recover possession.

The questions were (1) whether the sale by the Ramnad Court was valid; (2) whether the judgment-debtor not having questioned the sale in the Ramnad Court, his estoppel would bind an auction-purchaser of his rights; (3) whether plaintiff, having applied for rateable distribution in the former sale, was estopped from impeaching it later on.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiayr, for the Appellant.—Objections as to place of suing will not be allowed if not taken at the earliest opportunity. Section 21, Civil Procedure Code. This principle regarding suits culminating in decrees has been applied to execution proceedings culminating in sales. A decree, which could not have been impeached in the course of the proceedings, cannot be impeached in an independent proceeding; see Gomathan Alamelu v. Komandur Krishnamacharlu (1).

(1) 27 M. 118.

This has been applied to sales in Velayutha Muppan v. Subramanian Chetti (2). The law nowhere says that a sale can be assailed after confirmation but says the reverse. See Order XXI, rules 90 and 92. For confirmation has the effect of an out and-out conveyance and the judgment-debtor is estopped finally, and he has no more disposable interest left to him in what was sold away. So one who poses as having purchased 'the right, title and interest' of the judgment-debtor in Court-auction has in fact got nothing, for there was nothing left. See as to the effect of a statutory confirmation of title Ganapathy Mudaliar v. Krishnamachariar (3). The fact that plaintiff is a purchaser in Court-auction does not improve his position. If the judgment-debtor, having no disposable interest left, could not have privately conveyed the properties to another by mortgage or sale, still less could it be said that a simple money decree-holder could be enabled to reach the properties to realise his dues. The estoppel binding the judgment-debtor binds an auction-purchaser also. See Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (4), Prayag Raj v. Sidhu Prasad Tewari (5).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Even stranger purchasers?]

Yes. The principle has been applied to all kinds of estoppel affecting title. See Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (6), Poreshnath Mukerji v. Anathnath Deb (7), Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed Sero i (8), following Madell v. Thomas (9), Thuljaram Row v. Gopala Aiyar (10).

Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (4) follows Sayam Ramamoorthi v. Secretary of State for India (11).

'As a link in the chain of title' the estoppel binds. Further, this is a case of direct purchase by me. The fact that the plaintiff had attached earlier to the sale does not matter, as attachment creates no interest in property.

My next point is that as on the date of my application for attachment the Ramnad Court had jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for, that jurisdiction continues in spite of the notification. For the notification cannot be taken to apply to pending matters. The principle re the effect of a new statute is applicable. Thus a right of appeal to a particular tribunal is itself a right and cannot be taken away by statute. Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (12). As to pending suits, see Subbaraya Mudaliar v. Rakki (13) and Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (14). There can be no such thing as an automatic transfer. See the Full Bench decision in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (15).

My third point is that plaintiff, having put in an application for rateable distribution at my sale, even though he had himself attached the properties sold, thereby elected to abide by the sale and cannot be allowed to impeach it at his option.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, for the Respondents.—The power to entertain applications for execution is not conclusive as regards power to attach or sell. The latter is a different and independent power which must exist when exercised. See section 39, clause (2), Civil Procedure Code. See also Kasi Viswanatham Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (16), a case directly in point. So the fact that the application for attachment was made at a time when the Court had the necessary jurisdiction is not sufficient.

To say that because the judgment-debtor is estopped, an auction purchaser of his rights would also be estopped, involves the anomaly that where a judgment-debtor refuses or deliberately omits to question an attachment or sale by a wrong Court, the decree holder who has rightly taken proceedings in the right Court would find himself denied his relief.

The cases relied on for the appellant are all cases of mortgages and so inapplicable to the present case.

The original attachment by the appellant being without jurisdiction and, therefore, invalid, my attachment was valid and binding and, therefore, the sale was an alienation in violation of my attachment, and so null and void as regards all claims arising under my attachment. It is not correct to say that the plaintiff, who seized the properties on a date when there was no estoppel binding even the judgment-debtor, should be bound by what transpires subsequently, simply because the judgment-debtor does not choose to question such subsequent proceeding in a wrong Court.

In all the cases cited the estoppel was already existing when the second purchaser came in. It is not so in the present case. The plaintiff is not a privy. See Richards v. Jenkins (17) following the case in Richards v. Johnston (18).

Mr. A. Krishnaswawy Aiyar, in reply.—The present is a case where the proprietary title is itself in question. So the distinction between cases of auction-purchasers and purchasers at private sales has no application Attachment by itself creates no interest in the property seized.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—But it forbids alienations ?]

It does. But merely because the plaintiff has made an attachment, it cannot be said he has acquired any title by priority, so as to oust the appellant who has acquired an indefeasible title under a direct purchase which has not at all been questioned. VEERAPPA CHETTI v. RAMASWAMI CHETTI.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are not in dispute. The 2nd defendant obtained a decree against the 1st defendant in the Temporary Subordinate Judge's Court at Ramnad on the 8th of April 1913. It was transferred for execution to the permanent Sub-Court and an application for attachment was made to that Court on the 18th of April 1913. On the 21st of April 1913, the Taluk in which the property sought to be attached was situated was transferred from the jurisdiction of the Ramnad Sub-Court to that of the Sivaganga Sub-Court. Even after the transfer, the Ramnad Court issued an order of attachment on the 25th of June 1913. The property was sold on 10th November 1913 and the 2nd defendant became the purchaser. The sale was confirmed on the 11th of December 1913. The judgment-debtor, the 1st defendant, did not object to the confirmation.

Plaintiff, on the other hand, instituted a suit against the 1st defendant in the Sub-Court at Sivaganga and obtained a decree in December 1912. He attached the same properties on the 17th September 1913. The sale was on 30th June 1914 and plaintiff became the purchaser. The present suit is for possession.

The Sub-Judge has given a decree to the plaintiff. The 2nd defendant has appealed. Three main contentions were put forward by Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar. It was first contended that, by the transfer of territorial jurisdiction, the Ramnad Court did not cease to have jurisdiction, as at the time of the application for attachment it had jurisdiction. The recent Full Bench ruling, Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswami Pillai (15), that an application to the Court which passed the decree would be one in accordance with law does not affect the present case. The permanent Sub-Court of Ramnad which executed the decree was not the Court which passed the decree. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar referred to the analogy of cases in which it was held that the conferring of appellate jurisdiction on a new Court would not deprive the suitor to whom the right of preferring appeal had accrued already from filing the appeal in the old appellate tribunal [vide Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (12)]. Reference was also made to Subbaraya Mudaliar v. Rakki (13) and Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Ayer (14), in which it was held that pending suits are not transferred ipso facto by the vesting of jurisdiction in another Court. I do not think the analogy holds good. The essence of the notification is the deprivation of jurisdiction of one Court and the conferring of it on another. Therefore, the notification must be read as speaking retrospectively and as declaring that from and after its date, the first Court ceased to have jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Moreover, the language of clause (b) of section 39 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to which the learned Vakil for the respondent drew our attention, shows that the legislature conferred the power of dealing with immoveable property only on the Court which had territorial jurisdiction over it. This was the view taken in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (21) and the cases following it. Kasi Viswanatham Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (16) is an express decision on the point. This view was not dissented from by the learned Chief Justice in the recent Full Bench judgment, Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (15), and the other two learned Judges have expressly re-affirmed this view. I am not satisfied that it is wrong. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Ramnad Court had no jurisdiction to attach or sell the property on the dates on which it exercised those powers.

I shall now deal with the second branch of the argument which Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar pressed on us with great force and ability. The argument is this. Even granting that the Ramnad Court had no jurisdiction, as the attachment, sale and the confirmation of it were effected without objection by the judgment debtor, he was precluded from disputing the title conveyed. If it was not open to him to question the title, the plaintiff who purchased the property subsequently took only what the judgment-debtor could have conveyed and that consequently no title passed to the plaintiff For the first portion of this contention reliance was placed on Velayutha Muppan v. Subramaniam Chetti (2). It was held in that case that, at any rate, after confirmation of the sale, the judgment-debtor was not entitled to impeach the title which he obtained under the certificate of sale. Reliance was also placed on sections 18 and 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Although these sections apply in terms only to suits, it was hardly disputed that execution applications would be within the principle. I am willing, therefore, to proceed on the ground that if the judgment debtor sued to recover possession on the ground that the sale by the Ramnad Court was a nullity because of want of jurisdiction, he would be estopped from re-opening the earlier proceedings.

Does that infirmity affect the plaintiff? It was held by the Judicial Committee in Dinendronath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose(22): "There is a great distinction between a private sale in satisfaction of a decree and a sale in execution of a decree. In the former, the price is fixed by the vendor and purchaser alone. In the latter the sale must be made by public auction conducted by a public officer of which notice must be given as directed by the Act and at which the public are entitled to bid. Under the former the purchaser derives title through the vendor and cannot acquire a better title than that of the vendor. Under the latter, the purchaser, notwithstanding he acquires merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquires that title by operation of law, adversely to the judgment debtor and freed from all alienations or encumbrances effected by him subsequently to the attachment of the property sold in execution." In Richards v. Johnston (18), which was approved and followed by eminent Judges in Richards v. Jenkins (17), it was held that an execution creditor is not affected by the estoppel against the judgment-debtor. The learned Vakil for the appellant drew our attention to a sentence in the judgment of Kay, L. J, in Medell v. Thomas (9), wherein the Lord Justice says that the trustee in bankruptcy and execution creditor are affected by the same estoppel as the judgment-debtor. The observation was entirely obiter and the two other Lord Justices who took part in the case did not express concurrence with it. But it was strenuously argued that the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (6) have definitely laid down this proposition. As, in my opinion, this case has been the parent of misconceptions which have affected many decisions, I shall examine it in some detail. In that case the property in suit stood in the name of the wife. To a mortgage by the wife the husband was an assenting party. On the mortgage a decree was obtained. During execution a person who obtained a decree against the husband put forward the contention that the property really belonged to the husband and that the wife was only a benamidar. Their Lordships held that the decree-holder was estopped from putting forward such a contention. The principle of the decision was that where title is ostensibly in a person and the real owner further acknowledges the title as true, persons who seek to prove that the title is illusory will not be permitted to do so. What is denied is the right to adduce evidence that the prima facie title is not the real title. Under section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Legislature has provided that a transfer from the ostensible owner confers title on the transferee. It is this kind of estoppel which really confers title that their Lordships were dealing with. They should not be understood as having disapproved Richards v. Johnston (18) and Richards v. Jenkins (17) and to have laid down that an execution creditor, under all circumstances, is estopped by considerations which affect the judgment-debtor. The same observations apply to Poreshnath Mukerji v. Anathnath Deb (7). The contrary view would attribute to the Judicial Committee a departure from Dinendronath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose (22) and from the high authority of the learned Lord Justice who decided Richards v. Jenkins (17). I do not see sufficient ground for reading Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (6) in that way. Mr. Justice Mookerjee, for whose opinion I have very great regard, takes the view that Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (6) has overruled all previous pronouncements of the Judicial Committee. With all respect I am unable to agree (22) 7 C. 107 at p. 118 (P. C.); 4 Shome L. R. 236; 8 I. A. 65; 10 C. L. R. 281; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 213; 5 Ind. Jur. 376; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 619.

For the same reason I am unable to accept the broad statement as to estoppel contained in Trayag Raj v. Sidhu Prasad Tewari (5) and in Parsidh Narain Singh v. Janki Singh (19).

There is also another aspect of the case which leads to the same conclusion. Whatever may be the general position of an execution-creditor in regard to cases over which a Court has jurisdiction, the principle of Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed Seroji (8) should not be extended to cases where the judgment-debtor is sought to be affected by a rule of procedure relating to jurisdiction. I may illustrate my position by reference to the latest decision of the Judicial Committee in Setrucherla v. Maharaja of Jeypore (23). In that case, the Sub-Judge of Vizagapatam directed the sale of property not within his jurisdiction. In this Court, on appeal, the procedure was justified on the principle enunciated in sections 18 and 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Judicial Committee pointed out that as the Code of Civil Procedure was not applicable to the Agency Tracts where the property was situate, the order for sale was ultra vires. It is clear that, in the opinion of the Board, it is not a general rule of law that an order for sale by a Judge who has no jurisdiction to direct it can be upheld on the ground that the judgment-debtor did not oppose it. The justification for such a rule of estoppel is the legislative provision in that behalf. That provision must be regarded as an exception to the general rule that orders passed without jurisdiction are nullities. Consequently this exceptional rule of estoppel should not be extended further than is warranted by the language. The sections do not bind in terms persons like execution-creditors and I am not prepared to extend the estoppel to them. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar seemed to suggest that an auction-purchaser would be in a worse position than an execution-creditor. I see no justification in principle for this contention. Even if it is accepted, the plaintiff does not lose his right as decree holder by becoming a purchaser.

(23) 51 Ind. Cas 185; 37 M. L. J. 11; 17 A L. J. 694; (1919) M. W. N. 502; 26 M. L. T. 127; 21 Bom. L. R 914; 30 C. L. J. 209; 23 C. W. N. 1033; 10 L. W. 362 (P. C.).

Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar sought to distinguish Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (6) and Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed Seroji (8) on the ground that there was an attachment at the instance of his client before the sale to the 2nd defendant. I am not prepared to base my decision on this distinction. It has been held that an attachment confers no right and I do not think that the sale following on it can really affect the title of the 2nd defendant, if otherwise valid. Moreover, an attachment under section 64 affects private alienations and not compulsory sales.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar contended lastly that as the plaintiff applied for rateable distribution, he is estopped from impeaching the 2nd defendant's title. The facts which led to the application are not clear, as was pointed out by the Sub-Judge. Even otherwise, the materials for basing a decision on section 115 are wanting. There is no question of anybody being misled to his prejudice.

For all these reasons, I am of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is right and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

On a severance of tenements by a partition of joint property and in the absence of a contrary intention, expressed or necessarily implied, all such easements as are apparent and continuous and necessary for enjoying any of the undivided shares when the partition is effected, pass to the co-parceners to whom such shares are respectively allotted in severalty. [p. 585, col. 1.]

SHIBA PROSAD JANA v. HATI MAITY.

An easement of necessity does not lose its character as such by the mere fact that some other tenement exists over which the right might be enjoyed.

A person who alleges the extinguishment of a right of easement must prove such extinguishment by some agreement or rule of law.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 11th December 1917.

Mr. Bihari Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge finds, and there is ample evidence in support of that finding, that the plaintiff originally had the right to pass his water through the drainage which existed in the common court yard; and the only question is whether the partition of the courtyard had the effect of destroying his right of easement. I am unable to agree with the learned Judge that it was the plaintiff's duty to establish an express or implied agreement that the previous drainage system was to continue after the partition. I consider that the onus lay upon the defendant to shew that the right, which the plaintiff possessed prior to the partition, has been extinguished by some agreement or rule of law.

The principle of law, which finds expression in section 13 of the Indian Easements Act, is that on a severance of tenements by a partition of joint property, and in the absence of a contrary intention expressed or necessarily implied, all such easements, as are apparent and continuous and necessary for enjoying any of the undivided shares when the partition was effected, pass to the co-parceners to whom such shares are respectively allotted in severalty. Mr. Ganpat Rai for the respondent does not dispute the validity of this proposition of law; but he contends that the easement is not one of necessity, and that the plaintiff can discharge his water through the land purchased by him from one Tulsi Ram. Now, in the first place, I am not prepared to hold that the fact that the plaintiff has got another tenement through which he can pass his water deprives the easement in question of the character of an easement of necessity. In determining the question whether the easement is an easement of necessity we cannot take into consideration some other tenement which has nothing to do with the tenement in question. In the second place, it is clear from the judgment of the learned District Judge that the level of the land purchased from Tulsi Ram is higher than that of the courtyard and that it would be necessary to pass a pipe underneath it in order to find an outlet for the water. I do not think that the plaintiff is under any obligation to resort to this method of discharging his water, and that he is precluded by any law from availing himself of the right which undoubtedly he had at the time of the partition and which has been interfered with by the defendant only recently.

Holding as I do that it is the defendant's duty to prove that the plaintiff's right of easement has been in any way extinguished and that he has failed to discharge the onus, I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 9—Appeal—Death of appellant—Representatives not brought on record—Abatement of appeal, setting aside of—Fraud of agent, whether sufficient cause.

Where an appeal abates owing to the failure to bring the legal representatives of the deceased appellant on record, the fact that the agent of the representatives of the deceased appellant colluded with the other side and did not apply within the statutory period for substitution, is sufficient cause under rule 9 of Order XXII of the Civil Procedure Code for setting aside the order directing the appeal to abate. [p. 586, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Midnapore, dated the 9th January 1918, HARBANS LAL v. NATHU.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit (with him Babu Khirode Narain Bhuian), for the Appellants.—The learned Subordinate Judge has made a clear error of law in not granting the application preferred before him for the restoration of the appeal. We have shown that our agent played us false and that ought to be a sufficient ground for the restoration of the appeal or at least an enquiry ought to be instituted to meet the ends of justice. The facts mentioned in my petition would constitute a sufficient cause for non-appearance under Order XXI, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code. The allegations stated in the petition should have been enquired into.

Babu Sarada Charan Maity, for the Respondent.—I submit the application and the affidavit do not make out a sufficient cause. If there was any collusion, it was on 6th December and since then they did not do anything. No application for substitution was made within the required period.

Babu S. C. Palit not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order refusing an application to set aside the abatement of an appeal which was pending before the Subordinate Judge of Midnapore.

The appellant died on the 8th June 1917 and six months expired on the 8th December of that year. No application for substitution having been made within that period, an order of abatement was made on the 21st December and the present application was made on the 7th of January 1918.

The main ground upon which the application was made was that the appellants' agent Surja Narain, who had been sent for making an application for substitution, on the 6th December 1917, in collusion with the respondents, did not make the application and further that he informed the petitioners that the application had been made by him. The petitioners say that subsequently they came to know of this fraud and then they made the application.

The Subordinate Judge has not made any inquiry into these allegations, but disposed of the application on the ground that no sufficient reason for non-appearance had been shown by the applicants and that if their mohurir had played false, they might sue him for compensation.

We think that if the facts stated in the petition are true, they would constitute a sufficient reason for non-appearance within the meaning of Order XXII, rule 9. The allegation of collusion made in the application has not been gone into and no evidence has been taken.

In the circumstances we set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case to that Court in order that there may be an enquiry into the matter. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence.

Costs, one gold mohur, to abide the result.

Order set aside; Case remanded.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Payment of interest by principal debtor—Limitation, whether extended as against surety.

The liability of a surety being co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, the benefit accruing to a creditor under section 20 of the Limitation Act is not restricted against the payer alone, but is enforceable against any one liable for it. [p. 587, col. 1.]

Therefore, a payment of interest by the principal debtor within the period of limitation gives a fresh starting point for limitation against the surety under section 20 of the Limitation Act. [p. 587, col. 2.]

Civil revision from the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Dasuha, District Hoshiarpur, dated the 26th July 1918.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this case is whether a payment of interest by the principal debtor within the period of limitation gives a fresh starting point for limitation against the surety under section 20 of the Limitation Act. The lower Court has held, following Gopal Daji v. Gopal (1), that it does not, and has passed a decree for the amount due to the plaintiff against the 1st defendant, the principal debtor, alone, dismissing the suit against the surety Nathu as time-barred.

In the case followed by the lower Court the learned Judges said in their judgment that the principal was not the person liable to pay the debt of the surety, so that, even if the payment of interest could be regarded as a payment of interest on the debt of the surety, still it was not made by a person liable to pay the surety's debt, and on this ground they held that the payment did not give a fresh starting point for limitation against the surety.

With all respect I am unable to agree with the view of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court. Although both the surety and the principal are liable to pay the debt to the creditor, there is only one debt and the debt due from the surety cannot be treated as a debt distinct from that due from the principal. The liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal-debtor, as laid down in section 128 of the Contract Act.

The decision of the Bombay High Court has been dissented from by the Madras High Court in Velayudam Pillai v. Vaithyalingam Pillai (2), in which it is remarked that section 20 of the Limitation Act does not restrict the benefit accruing to the creditor to his remedy against the payer alone, but that, according to the language of the section, the debt being kept alive, the result must be to make it enforceable against any one liable for it.

A similar view was taken in England in Frisby, In re, Allison v. Frisby (3) in construing section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.

Section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act provides that where interest on a debt is before the expiration of the prescribed period paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt, or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made. The section does not lay down that the period is to be computed from the date of payment only as against the principal debtor or the person making the payment. The creditor is, in my opinion, entitled to the benefit of the section against any person liable for the debt.

I hold, therefore, that the suit in the present case is within time against the surety. I accept the application and alter the decree to one for Rs. 69 8 and costs against both the respondents. The respondent Nathu will pay the petitioner's costs in this Court.

Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance payable under agreement—Right to recover maintenance, whether transferable—Transferee becoming owner of part of property charged with payment of maintenance, effect of—Apportionment of claim—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 60.

Under a deed of maintenance a Hindu widow was entitled to get Rs. 100 as well as certain quantity of rice per annum, with the payment of which the properties mentioned in the schedule to the deed of maintenance were charged. The plaintiff, who was a purchaser of a portion of the properties charged with the payment of the maintenance, also purchased the right of the widow to receive the said sum of money and rice. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the whole arrears payable and deliverable to the widow out of the charged properties not purchased by him:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff, having become a partial owner of the charged properties, was bound under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act to apportion the money which he sought to recover as between the properties acquired by him which were subject to the charge and the rest of the charged properties; [p. 589, col. 1.]

(2) that the widow's claim under the deed of maintenance was not a mere personal right but was one which the widow had under a deed of covenant for which there was a charge on certain properties and that it was capable of transfer. [p. 589, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 1st June 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, Suri, dated the 29th June 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellants. —A certain Hindu widow had a life-interest in her husband's properties. In consideration of a khorposhnama she relinquished her claim to the life-interest in favour of her deceased husband's brothers, who contracted to pay her Rs. 100 per annum and 39 maunds of rice. The plaintiff in the present suit purchased that right of khorposh from the widow. Certain properties were charged, under the khorposhnama, with the payment of Rs. 100 and the fixed quantity of rice. There was a sale of a portion of the property mentioned in the khorposhnama and it was acquired by the plaintiff. The present suit was subsequently instituted by the plaintiff as an assignee of the widow to recover the sum of money and quantity of rice to which the widow was entitled under the khorposhnama. The learned Judge has decreed the suit against the properties not purchased by the plaintiff. This order cannot be sustained. It is quite illegal. Why should the properties not held by the plaintiff and which are held by the defendants be made liable to pay the whole of the arrears? The plaintiff cannot proceed against any of the mortgaged properties. The plaintiff is bound to apportion the money which he seeks to recover as between the properties acquired by him which were subject to the charge and the rest of the mortgaged properties.

Further, I contend that the right which the widow possessed was a personal right and so incapable of transfer. The transfer made by the widow to the plaintiff is illegal.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerji, for the Respondent.—How can my learned friend get round the express stipulation of the deed? The khorposhnama clearly says that the plaintiff grantee can proceed against any of the mortgaged properties. As regards the point raised by the other side that the Hindu widow could not have legally transferred her right, there is no substance in that contention.

Dr. Kanjilal replied

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the defendants Nos. 5, 8 and 9 against the decision of the learned District Judge of Birbhum, dated the 1st of June 1917, affirming the decision of the Munsif at Suri. The suit was brought by the plaintiff as an assignee to recover a certain sum and the value of certain rice payable and deliverable to a Hindu widow. The widow, whose name is Srimati Provash Kamini Debi, in consideration of releasing her life-interest in her husband's properties obtained from her two brothers in-law—brothers of her deceased husband—a document which is called a khorposhnama, that is, a deed of maintenance. Under the terms of that document, she was entitled to receive the sum of Rs. 100 per annum in cash and 39 maunds of rice. The plaintiff purchased from that Hindu widow, who was the defendant No. 7 in the suit, this right. Under the khorposhnama, the properties set out in the schedule to the plaint were charged with the payment of the sum and rice payable and deliverable to the widow. The plaintiff subsequently acquired a portion of the property mentioned in the khorposhnama from the purchaser thereof at a sale in execution of a decree for rent that had been obtained by the landlord. But it has been found as a fact and cannot be challenged in this Court that the sale was not made free from encumbrances and that the encumbrance created by the khorposhnama as regards the property purchased by the plaintiff has not been annulled. The plaintiff then brought the present suit, and it was partly decreed by the Court of first instance for the sum of Rs. 773 odd. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has decreed the whole of the suit against the properties not purchased by the plaintiff. He has held that the properties of the defendants, which are all the properties other than those acquired by the plaintiff, are liable to pay the whole of the arrears, and the reason he thinks so is that there is a clear stipulation in the khorposhnama that the grantee can proceed against any of the mortgaged properties. That obviously is an insufficient reason. The case is covered quite clearly by the las few words of the final clause of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. A mortgagee having become a partial owner of the equity of redemption is bound to apportion the money which he seeks to recover as between the properties acquired by him which were subject to the charge and the rest of the mortgaged properties. The reason given by the learned Judge that the deed authorises the mortgagee to proceed against any of the mortgaged properties means nothing. It only states what the law provides.

The other point raised is not well founded and that is this: That this is a personal right to the Hindu widow. It is not a personal right at all. It is a claim which the widow had under a deed of covenant for which there was a charge on certain properties, and it was capable of transfer in the same manner as in other cases. The mere fact that the grantee of the deed of covenant happens to be a Hindu widow does not prevent her from transferring her interest, if she thinks fit so to do.

The judgment and decree of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and in lieu of the findings arrived at there must be a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the arrears that have been found due in the lower Appellate Court from the properties acquired by him and the other properties mentioned in the charge by the khorposhnama, and the case will be remitted to the primary Court for the purpose of ascertaining what amount of the arrears ought to be borne and paid by the properties held by the defendants. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal, both parties having partially succeeded. The order of costs made by the lower Appellate Court will remain as it is.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

The decision of a Court given under a reference made under section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act is a portion of an award and is appealable under section 54 of the Act. [p. 590, col. 1.]

The only distinction between a reference made under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act and one made under section 30 thereof, is that the reference under the latter section is made solely on the question of title by the Acquisition Officer of his own motion, while the reference under the former section is made on the application of persons interested in the compensation money and not by the acquiring officer on his own motion. [p. 590, cols. 1 & 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 15th March 1917.

Messrs. Badr-ud-din and Faqir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings taken by Government under the Land Acquisition Act, I of 1894. A portion of the land taken up was the property of Musammat Partapi, a Jat widow, who had made a gift of it to Hazura Singh, the present appellant. The Acquisition Officer made his award on the 15th June 1916 in favour of Hazara Singh. An application dated the 8th May 1916 by Sundar, one of the widow's reversioners, to the effect that Hazura Singh was not entitled to the compensation money, the Acquisition Officer rejected, whereupon Sundar put in a similar application to the Deputy Commissioner, who rejected it but directed Sundar to make a further application to the Acquisition Officer. Upon that second application the Acquisition Officer by order of the 11th August 1916 made a reference to the District Court which he considered to be a reference under section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act,

The District Judge taking action on that reference has held that Hazura had no better title in the land acquired than the widow and consequently was entitled during the lifetime of the widow only to interest on the compensation money and he has directed that the compensation money be held in deposit and invested and the interest thereof be paid to Hazura Singh.

Hazura Singh appeals, and the grounds urged before us are that the reference by the Acquisition Officer was irregular inasmuch as no reference could have been made under section 30 but under section 18; that the order made by the District Judge is wrong inasmuch as he should have directed that the money should be invested in the purchase of land; that inasmuch as a widow can sell land for necessity the compensation should have been paid to the appellant; and finally, that the respondent, Sundar, is not the only reversioner and as his was the only application made within time to the Land Acquisation Officer, only his share of the compensation money should have been withheld from the appellant.

For the respondent it is contended that inasmuch as the reference to the Court was made under section 30 of the Act no appeal lies

In our opinion the contentions of neither side can be upheld. To dispose first of the respondent's contention, we hold that the decision of a Court given under a reference made under section 30 of the Act is a portion of an award and consequently an appeal lies against it under section 54 of the Act. In fact we draw no distinction between a reference made under section 18 of the Act and one made under section 30 except this, that the reference under section 30 is made solely on the question of title by the Acquisition Officer of his own motion, whilst the reference under section 18 is made on the application of persons interested in the compensation money and not by the acquiring officer on his own motion,

The first order passed by the Acquisition Officer on Sundar's second petition to him was that a reference would have to be made under section 18 of the Act, but in his final order of the 10th August 1916 he purported to make the reference under section 30, but inasmuch as his reference was made clearly on the application of an objector the reference must be regarded as one made under section 18 of the Act.

On the merits we see no reason whatever to interfere. The appellant has referred to section 32 of the Act, but the case is really governed by section 31 (2) and section 33 of the Act. Prima facie the gift by the widow to appellant was invalid and the compensation money for the land remains impressed with the character of the land and inasmuch as Hazura Singh's title to the land is in doubt, so also is his title to the compensation money so far as the principal at any rate is concerned. Indeed we are informed that a declaratory decree has been obtained by reversioners to the effect that the gift by the widow to Hazura Singh shall not affect their reversionary rights and inasmuch as such a decree obtained by one reversioner is available for the protection of the rights of other reversioners, the objection of Sundar protects the whole property.

For these reasons we see no reason to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 49 OF 1918.

March 7, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield, Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar and Mr. Justice Bakewell.

RAJAGOPALA AIYANGAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

SINGARAVELU THEVAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Partition—Joint family consisting of a person, his father and grandfather—Allocation of share to father—Other shares not specified, effect of——Grandfather and grandson, whether continue joint—Partition deed, construction of.

There is no rule of Hindu Law that a father cannot separate himself without disrupting the joint family. He can leave the family after taking his own share, just as any other co-parcener who is not a father can do. When, therefore, a man becomes divided from his father, his sons retain a joint status with the latter. [p. 594, col. 1.]

By a deed of partition one S, his son and grandson as representing one branch and his brother Sevu and his sons and grandsons as representing the other branch effected a division of their family properties, the reason being that U., the son of S., was leading an extravagant life. The properties were divided into two shares; one share was allotted to Sevu's branch and one-twelfth out of the other share was given to U. and the rest to S. and the son of U. The share of U. alone was specified:

Held, that both by law and by the construction of the document S. and his grandson, i. e., the son of U. did not become separated inter se. [p. 594, col. 2.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Spencer, in Appeal Suit No. 223 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Original Suit No 90 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—When the son separates, the question is whether grandson and grandfather are in law united or severed.

There is no presumption either way. So far as persons in the same degree are concerned, the separation of one implies perhaps the separation of the others.

Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (1) and Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2) are the two cases relied on against me. But no presumption arises when the whole thing is contained in a document, as in the present case. That shows clearly that the share of no member was defined. The son's interest is not in any way dependent on or connected with the father's interest.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Respondents.—In view of the established rule of Hindu Law that the division is per stirpes and not per capita, the division of the father necessarily involves the division of the son as well.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—But division is also per capita as between members of the same branch. Therefore, is the general rule always that division is per stirpes?]

Necessarily both happen.

In Manjanatha v. Narayana (3) all that was held was that some of the sons may separate leaving the rest united with the father. The present case is that of a grandson.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I do not see how that makes a difference.]

There is. Suppose the father is out away. Can he give afterwards his son in adoption?

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Yes he can. That is a present right.]

That means that the father can still put an end to the son's right in the joint family.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The question of the case of a divided son being given in adoption is still not settled.]

In Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Ravji Kulkarni (4) the existence of the son was held to be a bar to the grandson's suit for partition.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The law here is different].

Subba Ayyar v. Ganasa Ayyar (5) explains the per stirpes rule. See also Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (6). Each branch is a legal unit for the the purpose of effecting a division.

[OLDFIELD, J.—Division in a joint family means that every member acquires a divided status. So it makes no difference whether it is a son or a grandson.]

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The rule is that where there is a division that is total.]

The nature and extent of the presumption are defined in Rangasami Naidu v. Sundarajulu Naidu (7) and Subba Reddi v. Alagammal (8).

And the document also bears it out that there was a complete division. The cutting off of the son was no doubt the occasion for the partition which, however, was total partition as regards all the members or at least of the son's branch.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The suit, out of which this letters patent appeal arises, was brought on a mortgage executed by 1st and 3rd defendants; and the only question is whether the minor 2nd defendant, 2nd respondent, grandson of 1st defendant and nephew of 3rd defendant, is liable as a member of the joint family composed of them and the sons of 3rd defendant, 4th and 5th defendants. The appeal is against the decision of Spencer, J., that he is not liable, having ceased to be a member of the joint family in 190[illegible], when a partition evidenced by Exhibit I took place.

In 1905 the family was composed of those already referred to, Uthrapathi, the father of 2nd defendant, and Sevu, the brother of 1st defendant, with his two sons. Under Exhibit I, the family property was divided into four portions, one being allotted to 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants, one to Uthrapathi, one to Sevu and his sons and one being retained as the common property of 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants' and Sevu's branches, each to enjoy half the produce. Spencer, J., held and respondents contend that 2nd defendant did not become a member of a co-parcenary with 1st and 3rd defendants. The question is whether this conclusion is right. Here, Mr. Varadachari for respondents has, as I understood him, argued that, when a father has become divided from the grandfather or from collaterals, his son either cannot or at least must be presumed not to retain a joint status with the latter.

This contention, whatever its exact scope, is, in my opinion, without substance. The right of a co parcener to claim partition against his grandfather and against his father's collaterals was recognised in Nagalinga Mudali v. Subbiramaniya Mudali (9) and Subba Ayyar v. Ganasa Ayyar (5), as co-extensive with his right to claim it against any other member of the family, and the same is implied in the judgments in Manjanatha v. Narayana (3). For respondents reliance has been placed on the dicta of Muthuswami Ayyar, J., in the latter case, that "as between different branches division should be by the stock" and that "when a joint family is broken up by division, regard should be had to the successive vested interests of each branch," the argument being that, where and so far as a joint family originally consists in branches, division in which each is regarded as a unit, is all that is contemplated by the learned Judge; and reference has also been made to the description of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (6), of the joint family as forming corporate bodies within a larger corporate body, each capable of owning or acquiring property. But in the first of these cases, apart from the general tendency of the decision, the learned Judge was not concerned with the effect of division on status but only with the method by which shares should be calculated; and I would respectfully adopt the opinion expressed in the present case by the learned Chief Justice that the indication of that method in a particular deed for the purpose of the severance of particular members entails nothing as to the intention of others or of those members inter se to remain joint. In the second case the question was of a partition, but it was not of ordinarily divisible property but of the rights of the co-parceners or a group of them to property separately acquired by such group. There is, so far as has been shown, no special restriction on a partition, to which a grandson or nephew is a party, and no special presumption arises in respect of it, the ruling being only that stated in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2), that it must be proved like any other fact.

In this case the principal evidence as to the intention of those concerned consists in the terms of the partition deed Exhibit I, and as they are clear, it is unnecessary and it would not be admissible to consider the other evidence on the record relating to subsequent conduct. Exhibit I is headed "partition deed"; its last clause refers to the parties to it as henceforth bound by no pecuniary relations but only those of friendship; another clause refers to a division of moveables as having already taken place; and these are the only portions of the document relied on as directly supporting a complete division. But the two first are common features of partition transactions, which might easily be included, whatever the particular intention, and the last is inconclusive in the absence of details as to the shares of those who received them. On the other hand the stated motive for the partition, Uthrapathi's extravagance, affords strong reason for holding that, although there is nothing definite on the point, the remaining members of his branch intended to make no further change than his exclusion involved and to hold the property assigned to them as joint tenants; and this is particularly clear as regards the share of the property to be held by them in common with Sevu's branch, of which division was deferred. For the view for which respondents contend, Uthrapathi, as the natural guardian of 2nd defendant, would have been able at any time to nullify the arrangement and by compelling a division to obtain control of his son's share. Spencer, J., in fact drew an inference from the reference in Exhibit I to 1st defendant as 2nd defendant's guardian and the absence of similar reference in the case of 3rd defendant's minor sons in favour of the divided status of each of them. But, with all due deference, the inference is the other way. For whilst no special reference to the guardian of the latter would be necessary when their father, 3rd defendant, was executing the document and there was no conflict of interests between them and him, the case was different between the 2nd defendant and Uthrapathi, who was to be excluded; and the mention of 1st defendant as the former's guardian in the first clause is intelligible only on the assumption that he was the managing member of a joint family, to which both belonged. The allegation that all the members of the family became divided in status, but that some of them were to hold portions of the property as tenants-in-common is improbable in the extreme and, in the absence of anything in Exhibit I to support it, cannot be accepted. Construing Exhibit I in what appears to me the manner naturally consistent with its terms, I would allow the appeal and modify the decree of the Subordinate Judge by making 2nd defendant's share liable under the suit mortgage, as found by the lower Court's judgment. The time allowed to 2nd defendant for payment is 3 months from this date. The 2nd defendant will pay plaintiff's costs throughout.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—By Exhibit I one Singaravelu, his sons and grandsons as representing one branch, and his brother Sevu and his sons as representing the other branch effected a division of their family properties. The occasion for this arrangement, as recited in the deed, was because Uthrapathi, the son of Singaravelu, was leading an immoral life and wasting the family property. The properties were divided into two shares and after allotting one share to Sevu and his sons, in the other share one-twelfth of the whole property was given to Uthrapathi. There was a question whether one-twelfth was the proper share which was due to Uthrapathi. There was also another question as to whether he got any share in certain properties which were left undivided. In this Letters Patent Appeal we are not concerned with these minor questions The point in dispute is whether by this partition there was a severance of interest among the members of Singaravelu's branch inter se, or whether it was an arrangement by which Uthrapathi alone was sent out of the family, the other members remaining undivided. Mr. Justice Spencer has discussed some questions relating to presumptions as to partition in a Hindu family being partial or complete. With all deference, I am unable to see any necessity for discussing such a question, where the construction of a document is what we are concerned with. The presumptions the learned Judge referred to may probably help if there is any difficulty in construing the deed of partition. In the opinion I have formed of its contents I find no ambiguity in the document which would enable me to seek the aid of extraneous evidence to construe it.

Mr. Varadachariar relied upon some recitals in the deed as indicating that the partition was intended to sever the interests per se of the members of Singaravelu's family. He alluded to the fact that the minor was represented by a guardian. I do not consider that that circumstance has any bearing upon the question. His interests had to be safeguarded anyhow, and the very fact that the father who was the legal guardian was discarded in favour of the grandfather, indicates that the father was to be sent out of the family. The next circumstance which the learned Vakil relied on was the fact that the two main branches entered into the partition. The point he raised was if the object was to send away Uthrapathi alone, why should there be a division between the two main branches. The answer is plain. Sevu apparently did not want to have anything to do with his spendthrift nephew, and he naturally asked his brother to separate his share. The next circumstance relied on was the clause at the end of the partition deed that the members mentioned in the deed should have no more connection with each other. Persons acquainted with this part of India would not attach any special significance to such a clause It is a formula adopted invariably in every deed of partition; and it would not have entered into the head of the draftsman to think that he was by this clause providing for the separation of the son from the father. These are all the facts relied on by the learned Vakil. On the other hand, there is an omission in Exhibit I which is almost conclusive against an intention to effect a severance inter se. Whereas the share of Uthrapathi is set apart and a special schedule is annexed to represent his share, no such schedule of special shares of the grandfather and of the grandsons separately was annexed. This shows that it was the intention of the parties that the son should go out of the family leaving the father and the grandsons undivided. I feel very little doubt in arriving at the conclusion that the document did not effect a partition inter se among the members of the branch of Singaravelu.

Notwithstanding this conclusion on the facts Mr. Varadachariar's question of law has to be decided. He said that on the language of the instrument the legal consequence necessarily follows that the father Uthrapathi and his son Manikam were divided. If I understood the learned Vakil right his contention was that, as the principle of division in Hindu families is per stirpes and not per capita, the allotment of a share to the father carried with it the separation of his son from the main branch; he further argued that the fact that the son's share was not specifically set apart cannot weigh against this principle of Hindu Law. I do not agree with this contention. There is no rule, as I understand it, in Hindu Law that a father cannot separate himself without disrupting the joint family. He can leave the family after taking his own share just as any other co parcener, who is not a father, can do. The Hindu Law clothes him with a further right of effecting a partition among his sons, whether they like it or not. The reference of the learned Vakil to the theory which for a long time gained currency in Bombay, that a minor son cannot sue for partition against the wish of his father, does not lend any support to this contention. Moreover, as against the view in Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Ravji Kulkarni (4) it may be mentioned that for a long time beginning with Nagalinga Mudali v. Subbiramania Mudali (9) the view in Madras had been consistent that a minor son can compel the father to give him his share.

The decision in Manjanatha v. Narayana (3) strongly supports the view taken by the learned Chief Justice. That was a case of the sons bringing suits against their father, and uncles and cousins. There was a decree in the suit. After the share of these sons had been separated, the question arose whether the other members of the family remained undivided. Mr. Justice Muthuswami Ayyar in a very elaborate judgment held that the suit of the sons did not effect a severance of the family in its entirety. This is what he said: "It seems to me anomalous to hold that in a case where two brothers, each of whom may have several sons and grandsons, desire to separate, all the members should be forced to separate the sons and grandsons from their father and grandfather.... Again, it appears to me that each co-parcener is at liberty to elect to separate from the joint family, but I am aware of no text which recognizes his power to force a separation among others against their will." I think that the principle above enunciated applies with equal force to the present case. In a later case, Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (6), Mr. Justice Bhashyam Ayyangar said this: "According to usage and custom, the remaining members of an undivided family, from which one or more alone has become divided, continue as an undivided family in its normal state and not as members who after partition have become re united." If I may say so, this exactly represents the practice which prevails throughout the whole of Southern India. For these reasons I am of opinion that by allotting a share to Uthrapathi neither by law nor by the construction of the document Singaravelu the father and Manikam the grandson became separated inter se. The effect of the deed was to leave these two members undivided, while the son alone ceased to belong to the joint family. I, therefore, agree with the conclusion at which the learned Chief Justice has arrived and would allow this appeal with costs.

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 120—Declaration of title, suit for—Limitation, commencement of—Custom—Succession—Pagwand versus chundawand —Burden of proof.

A suit for a declaration of his title to immoveable property by a person in possession as proprietor is not barred, if brought within six years from the time when the defendant attempts to oust him from the land, although a right to sue the defendant who had been recorded as owner of the property in the Settlement Record had already accrued and become barred [p. 596, col. 1.]

Ordinarily, under customary law, sons, whether by the same or different wives, share equally, and, therefore, where a party alleges that the rule of chundawand governs the succession in any particular case, the burden of proving the custom of chundawand would be on the person who alleges it. [p. 596, col 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Sargodha, dated the 26th February 1915.

Mr. Duni Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this litigation are, as will appear from the subjoined pedigree table, the descendants of Mehra by his two wives, Musammat Bhagbhari and Musammat Ghulam Bibi.

Musammat BHAG BHARI=MEHRA=Musammat GHULAM BIBI.

Wali, defendant No. 1.	Muhammad, defendant No. 2.	Ali,	Mali,	Jahana, plaintiff.	Jallu,	Karm Ali, defendant No. 9.
					Daula, plaintiff.
Mughli, defendant No. 3.	Pathani, defendant No. 4.	Gahna.		Tabu, defendant No. 6.	Taja, defendant No. 7.	Murad, defendant No. 8.

They own land as follows:—

(A) 417½ kanals at village Jahanpur, Tahsil Bhera

(B) 845½ kanals of land at village Mari, Tahsil Sargodha.

(C) 1,337½ kanals also at village Mari.

On the death of Mehra the lands A and B were entered in the names of his seven sons in equal shares. Land C came to the family upon a partition of the shamilat, the date of which is not mentioned. Plaintiffs say that they follow the custom of chundawand and that their share and that of Karm Ali, who is pro forma defendant, is one-half in plots A and B and not three-sevenths as entered in the Revenue Records. In regard to plot C the allegation is that plaintiffs and Karm Ali acquired it by reason of the fact that they alone paid tirni dues in village Mari. The plaintiffs in paragraph 7 of their plaint stated that on an application for partition of the land made by Wali and Muhammad, they came to know of the wrong entry in the papers and, therefore, they brought the present suit as regards plots A and B. The partition record has not been sent for, but it appears from the statement of Muhammad, defendant, at page 62 of the paper-book that an application for partition was filed in Bisakh, i. e., April 1914. The present suit was instituted on the 29th May 1914.

The lower Court dismissed the suit as to plots A and B holding that it was barred by time and as to plot C holding that plaintiffs had not proved their exclusive proprietary right thereto. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and we have heard arguments on their behalf by Mr. Duni Chand, Advocate.

We shall first deal with the question of limitation. The lower Court based its decision on Akbar Khan v. Turaban (1). Mr. Duni Chand relies upon the following rulings:—Allah Jilai v. Umrao Hussain (2), Hakim Singh v. Waryaman (3) and Khem Singh v. Kesar Singh (4). The authorities in question appear to support the view that the present suit is not barred by time.

In Hakim Singh v. Waryaman (3) it was held that a suit for a declaration of his title to immoveable property by a person in possession as proprietor is not barred, if brought within six years from the time when the defendant attempts to oust him from the land, although a right to sue the defendant who had been recorded as owner of the property in the settlement record had already accrued and become barred.

Now, applying this rule to the facts of the present case, it is quite clear that the plaintiffs' right to sue for a declaration in regard to the settlement entries accrued many years ago and had become time-barred, but a new cause of action accrued to them when the defendants applied for partition and attempted to take advantage of the entry in their favour. The case in Khem Singh v. Kesar Singh (4) was very similar to the present one. The facts are as follows —

"In 1882, plaintiffs and defendants were recorded owners of their joint holding in the proportion of 3 7ths and 4/7ths shares, respectively. In 1885-86, for some unknown reason, plaintiffs were recorded as owners of $\frac{1}{3}$rd. In 1891 one of the co-sharers complained against the correctness of the entry but without success.

"The incorrect entry was repeated in the present settlement. In 1906, defendant applied for partition on the strength of the entry of 1891 and plaintiffs sued to obtain a declaration that they were entitled to 3/7ths share as recorded in 1882.

"It was held, that the plaintiffs' suit was within time and was governed by Article 120 and not by Article 96 of the Indian Limitation Act, XV of 1877, and that a fresh cause of action accrued to them in 1906."

The case was decided by a Division Bench of this Court which followed Hakim Singh v. Waryaman (3) and distinguished Akbar Khan v. Turaban (1).

We, therefore, are of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit for a declaration in regard to plots A and B was not barred by time.

The lower Court has not come to any decision on the merits, namely, whether plaintiffs are entitled to $\frac{3}{7}$rds of one-half of plots A and B or only to 2 7ths as recorded in the revenue records. We have, therefore, examined the evidence on the record for ourselves and proceed to decide the point.

The question is whether the parties follow the rule of chundawand or that of pagwand. Now, ordinarily sons, whether by the same or different wives, share equally (see Article 7 of Rattigan's Digest of customary law) and the onus, therefore, lies upon the plaintiffs to prove that they follow the rule of chundawand. The question is discussed in the General Code of Tribal Custom in the Shahpur District by Wilson at page 6. The author says that all the sons take equal shares without regard to the number or tribe of the mothers. At page 42 will be found the answer of the tribes as to whether sons succeed equally or whether regard is paid to uterine descent. All the tribes replied that no such regard is paid and that all legitimate sons, whether by the same or different mothers, take equal shares. In a note at page 43 the author says many instances were given in which sons by different mothers share equally (pagwand), and the only instances in which the sons shared according to the number of mothers (chundawand) were a few among the Khokhars in which the father made the division in his lifetime and one among the Hindus. The pagwand rule is, he says, practically universal throughout the district. Under these circumstances the onus lay very heavily upon the plaintiffs to prove that they followed the custom of chundawand.

Counsel refers to the agreement of the proprietors of mauza Jahanpur printed at page 3 of the paper book. This agreement appears in the settlement papers of 1857. The proprietors agreed that the division of heritage should take place according to the number of wives, and not according to the number of sons. In spite of this not a single instance has been cited from Jahanpur village in which the sons of a proprietor inherited according to the rule in question. The agreement would, therefore, seem to have never been acted upon.

Counsel has referred to the oral evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses to the effect that Gondals, to which tribe the parties belong, follow the rule of chundawand. The only instance, however, cited was one from the village of Khan Muhammadwala, which is said to be half a mile from Jahanpur. The defendants' witnesses on the other hand say that the rule of inheritance is pagwand.

Counsel has also referred to an entry in a former Patwari's diary which is printed at page 56 of the paper-book. The Patwari who made this entry has not been produced as a witness and we are, therefore, unable to regard it as proved or of any weight at all.

We consider that the plaintiffs have absolutely failed to discharge the heavy onus which lay upon them. The fact that upon the death of Mehra all his sons were entered as inheriting equally in both the villages is a very strong proof that they follow the custom of pagwand. Added to this is the fact that in the subsequent settlements no application was made to have the entries changed.

In regard to plot C the contention, so far as we understand it, is that the plaintiffs and Karm Ali have all along lived in Mauza Mari and cultivated the land there and paid the tirni dues for grazing their cattle on the shamilat, whereas the other defendants have lived in Mauza Jahanpur and have not paid tirni dues in Mauza Mari. It is, however, not clear whether defendants Nos. 1 to 8 have paid tirni in Mauza Mari or not. There is absolutely no documentary evidence on the record to prove that this plot of land was allotted to the plaintiffs and defendant No 9 on the partition of the shamilat as stated in paragraph 8 of the plaint. The fact that it was entered in the names of the descendants of Mehra shows on the contrary that it was allotted to them. Plaintiffs have failed to show that they and defendant No. 9 are exclusively entitled to this plot of land, nor have they proved that there is any custom by which, if they and defendant No. 9 alone had paid tirni dues, the land would have been theirs by right to the exclusion of defendants Nos. 1 to 8. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf for religious and charitable purposes—Evidence to show contrary intention of settlor, whether admissible.

Where wakfs, which have been created by document, in terms establish religious and charitable trusts, evidence is not admissible to show that the settlor had no intention to give effect to the trusts or that the trusts were not in fact given effect to. [p. 598, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 6th June 1917.

JUDGMENT.

CHAUDHURI, J.—The plaintiff sued for declaration that he was entitled to a 12 annas share of the properties left by his brother, Mahommed Chhaber. He challenged two wakfs executed by his brother, one on the 17th June 1904, and the other on the 12th January 1912. He also challenged a hiba bil ewaz in favour of the 4th defendant, an infant. This infant is the son of one Jalil, who is defendant No. 2. Jalil was taken into the family by the settlor when he was quite a young boy and Jalil was brought up in his family. The defendants are the settlor's wife, Jalil, Jalil's wife and this infant son. The documents were all challenged in the plaint as having been executed secretly and in collusion, and it was said that the settlor was not in possession of sound sense and he did not execute them honestly and independently and knowing their purport and meaning. The bulk of the evidence given in this case was on those points, to show his mental incapacity and secret and collusive dealing with the properties. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the documents were properly executed by the settlor and that he had sufficient mental capacity when he executed them.

Those findings are not now challenged. The ground now taken is that both the wakfs are illusory, and so far as the heba is concerned, it is not valid and operative inasmuch as the necessary formalities were not carried out and there was no intention of immediate transfer.

These wakfs have been created by documents, and it seems to us that the language employed in them is not ambiguous. The documents in terms establish religious and charitable trusts and evidence is not, therefore, admissible to show that the settlor had no intention to give effect to the trusts or that the trusts were not in fact given effect to. That was decided in the case of Kulsom Bibee v. Golam Hossein Cassim Ariff (1). The learned Subordinate Judge has held that so far as the first wakf is concerned, it is not a valid document inasmuch as substantial property was not given by it to charitable purposes. He comes to that conclusion from the facts; that only $\frac{1}{4}$th of the income of certain properties was given for religious purposes, and he relied upon the observations made by Lord Robertson in Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (2) and held that the deed did not show that substantial property was given for charitable purposes. So far as that case is concerned, it dealt with a document which was described as a deed of family endowment. It began with the words that it was a family endowment and ended in the same way. There was a provision made in it for charitable purposes after defrayal of "necessary expenses" set out in detail therein and it was held, having regard to the terms of the endowment for charitable purposes, that it was not a proper wakf. That case does not by itself give us sufficient help.

By the first document no doubt $\frac{1}{4}$th only is given to charitable purposes and the remainder to certain persons. That the man had charitable intention cannot be disputed. He carried out the religious trust in his lifetime. He managed the charities for a great number of years, and it is clear from his conduct during his lifetime that he was pious and charitable. He was an old man and a Haji. He had other properties than those he dedicated at the time he made the first wakf. He made it at the same time as one of his brothers made one. Several years passed thereafter, and after his brother's death some question arose about the wakf which had been made by his brother, in consequence of which he appears to have taken legal advice about the wakf he had made and then made the second wakf. The learned Subordinate Judge says that it was probably due to the current decisions and the view taken by the Privy Council about the dedicated substantial property that he was advised that the first wakf was not a proper wakf and would not stand in a Court of law. The second wakf, which was then made by him, includes properties of a larger value, in fact practically all his immoveable properties. He makes a settlement in respect of 12 annas of the income of these properties for religious purposes and gives $\frac{1}{4}$th to the mutwalli for his maintenance.

We think the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly found that his object was not the aggrandisement of his family. In fact his family then consisted of his wife and Jalil as adopted member of his family, who had a son, the 4th defendant. He had separated from his brothers and it cannot be said having regard to the terms of the second document that his idea was to keep the properties for the benefit of Jalil. The terms are very clear. We think that the intention was to create a valid religious endowment, which ought to be given effect to. The document does not support the contention that it has been given a colour of piety. It is practically an admitted fact that he was religiously inclined and that he actively supported charities during his lifetime. We think, having regard to the decision in Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marayokar (3) and also to, amongst others, the lists laid down in Abul Fata Mahomed v. Rasamaya Dhur (4) and the ruling in Baelul Ghani Mia v. Adak Patari (5), that the decision arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. The second wakf incorporates the properties dealt with in the first and we hold it is valid and operative.

So far as the heba bil ewaz is concerned, the gift is in clear terms. There is an intention expressed that it was to take immediate effect, and from the documents produced and the evidence given there is no doubt whatsoever that effect was given to it. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there is no evidence to show that the minor did not get possession of the property. It is quite clear that Jalil as the infant's guardian looked after the property which was given by this heba, that, rents were collected by a person employed by him, named Amal Majid, on his son's behalf and that documents which have been produced, including receipts, show that they were both taken and given in the name of the infant through his guardian. The formalities were carried out. The evidence is practically one way. The Koran and string of beads were made over in exchange. The fact of the exchange is also recited in the document itself. We see no reason for taking a different view from that taken by the learned Subordinate Judge.

A question was also raised as regards the properties mentioned in Schedule 5. These properties are covered by the document Exhibit L. The document stands in the name of the plaintiff, his brothers and Jalil. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that Jalil's name was there as representing Mahammed Chhaber, as Mahammad Chhaber, it was said, was absent at the time and Jalil's name was used ; but in addition to this document there is the fact that the names of these persons were registered and the plaintiff knew of such registration in the name of Jalil and not in the name of his brother Chhaber. He was a party to the document Exhibit L and the learned Subordinate Judge correctly held that the onus lay heavily on the plaintiff to show that the document did not show the real state of things.

We are unable to find that any ground has been made out in this appeal to vary the findings arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at Rs. 500.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 456 OF 1918.

March 22, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Pratt.

NATHMAL GHAMIRMAL—PLAINTIFF

versus

MANIRAM RADHAKISSON—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXI, r. 55—Execuiton of decree—Money paid to remove attachment, whether liable to rateable distribution.

Money paid under rule 55 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code to remove an attachment is not subject to rateable distribution, and is payable only to the attaching creditor. [p. 601, col. 1.]

Section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code is restricted in its application to assets held by the Court which were realised or obtained by process of execution. [p. 601, col. 2.]

Mr. Inverarity, for the Plaintiff, Attaching Creditor.

Mr. Mulla, for the other Judgment-Creditor.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment-creditor in this case applies for payment of the money received by the Sheriff under a warrant of attachment issued in execution of the decree in Suit No. 456 of 1918. The Prothonotary refused to issue an order in Form No. 64, holding that the money was an asset available for rateable distribution.

The judgment-creditor had taken out a warrant in Form No. 48 for attachment of the moveable property of the judgment debtor under Order XXI, rule 43.

The bailiff entered judgment-debtor's shop and showed the warrant to a partner in the judgment-debtor's firm and pointed out that if the money were not paid, he would seize and keep in his custody the moveable property in his shop. The judgment-debtor then paid the decretal amount with costs of execution and Sheriff's poundage.

The question is whether this amount is available for rateable distribution among the other judgment-creditors who had made previous execution applications.

Section 295 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 has been considerably enlarged under section 73 of the present Code. The former referred to assets "realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree," and the latter refers to "assets held by a Court." The phrase "assets realised by sale or otherwise" was construed in the case of Purshotamdass Tribhovandass v. Mahant Suraibharthi Haribharthi (1) to be assets which have been realised from the property of the judgment-debtor by sale or otherwise. The words "or otherwise" were explained in the judgment by reference to sections 291 and 305—equivalent to Order XXI, rules 69 and 83—that is where money is paid to stop a sale or is raised by private alienation to set aside a sale. This decision was based on the position of section 295 in the Code of Civil Procedure, where it appeared under Chapter XIX of the Code dealing with execution of decrees and under the sub-division to that chapter referring to sale and delivery of property. As a result of this construction it was held that monies paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest in full satisfaction of the decree were not assets realised in execution by sale or otherwise, because the process of execution had not been directed against the property.

Following this case, it was held in Gopal Dai v. Chunni Lal (2) and in Vibudhapriya Tirthaswami v. Yusuf Sahib (3) that money paid to remove an attachment was not within section 295, as an attachment was not a process of sale or conversion otherwise of property.

The correctness of the reasoning in Purshotamdass' case(1) seems to have been doubted in Manilal Umedram v. Nanabhai Manekkal (4), where Sir Lawrence Jenkins explained that the word "realised" implied that property had been converted into or obtained in cash or some other form available for immediate distribution. Hence, if money is paid into Court it is obtained or realised, even though there has been no sale or conversion of the judgment-debtor's property. On this meaning of the word "realised" it was not necessary to limit the words "or otherwise," as Sir Charles Sargent did in Purshotamdass' case (1), to processes of execution eiusdem generis with sale.

I think the amendment in the present Code of Civil Procedure was intended to overrule Purshotamdass' case(1) and to provide that all assets held by the Court are available for rateable distribution, by whatever process of execution they may have been obtained. I also think that the assets must have been obtained in execution. The reference to costs of realisation and the position of the section in the Code at the end of Part II on execution seems to me to lead irresistibly to this conclusion. This was also the view taken by Bakewell, J., in Suikeena Katum v. Mahomed Abdul Aziz (5). The asset, therefore, must be something obtained in execution in a form available for distribution among the judgment-creditors.

Under section 73, therefore, I think it necessary to establish (1) that the money is an asset held by the Court, and (2) that it has been realised or obtained in execution.

To turn now to the present case, there is no doubt as to the first point that the money is an asset held by the Court. As to the second point, it is argued that it has not been realised in execution as the warrant of attachment was not in fact executed. This seems to me to be a mere quibble. It matters not whether the property was actually taken into custody by the bailiff or not. Physical contract, it may be noted, is not necessary to actual seizure under Order XXI, rule 43—Multan Chand Kanyalal v. Bank of Madras (6), see also Bissicks v. Bath Colliery Co. (7). The warrant directed a seizure and after seizure, release of the goods from custody if the judgment debt was not paid. This, I take it, is what happened and in any event the money was paid under stress of the warrant. The warrant is a process of execution and it was the warrant that procured the payment of the money.

If the matter were res integra, I should hold that the money was an asset held by the Court and realised in execution, and, therefore, liable to rateable distribution. But it has been held in Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (8) that the money paid to remove an attachment under Order XXI, rule 55, is not subject to rateable distribution, the reasoning being (1) that the money was not realised in process of execution, and (2) that rateable distribution would nullify the provisions of rule 55. The first ground follows the cases decided on the words "sale or otherwise," which are held to mean sale or other process of execution provided for in the Civil Procedure Code—Seur Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen (9), Prosonnomoyi Dassi v. Sreenauth Roy (10) and Vibudhapriya Tirthaswami v. Yusuf Sahib (3). But these cases all followed Purshotamdass' case (1) in restricting the process to one of sale or conversion of the property, and I venture to doubt whether this is not too restrictive a construction under the amended section, in which the words "sale or otherwise" have been dropped and in which there is merely an implication that the assets should have been realised or obtained in execution proceedings. I also venture to doubt the correctness of the second reason. Order XXI, rule 55, operates effectively where there is one decree-holder. If there are a number of decree-holders, there is no scope for the rule, for the judgment-debtor has no motive for paying off one judgment-creditor when the same property is liable to be re-attached by the others. To allow one decree-holder to be paid off in full when the property is insufficient to discharge other judgment-debts might possibly be undue preference and defeat the object of the section which is equal distribution of all the monies received in execution. Again, why should a judgment-creditor, whose attachment has been removed under Order XXI, rule 55, be in a better position than a judgment creditor who has taken the trouble of bringing the property to sale? Lastly, if the money paid under Order XXI, rule 55, to remove an attachment is not available for rateable distribution, then a fortiori money paid to stop a sale under Order XXI, rule 83, would also not be so available. But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in Purshotamdass' case (1) that money paid to stop a sale is available for rateable distribution. So that the interpretation put upon the section in Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (8) makes the new section more restrictive than the old one, and this is not what the Legislature intended.

I agree with the decision in Thiraviyam Pillai v. Lakshmana Pillai (11) that money paid under rule 55 is an asset held by the Court and is, like the money paid to stop a sale under rule 83 available for distribution. But I differ from that case, in that I think that section 73 is restricted to what is paid into Court by virtue of process of execution.

I have ventured to express my opinion as to the construction of the section, but I feel bound to follow the decision in Sorabji's case (8) and I, therefore, direct the Prothonotary to issue the payment order in Form No. 64.

This order should not be issued for three weeks pending an appeal.

The attaching judgment-creditor's costs including the costs of the previous application to be costs in the execution. The other judgment-creditors to pay their own costs.

Order accordingly.

SULOCHANA DEBI v. JAGATTARINI DEBI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 108 OF 1917.

SULOCHANA DEBI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

JAGATTARINI DEBI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Will, construction of, principle of—Intention—Hindu Law—Widow, devise in favour of—Estate taken by widow—"Malik" and "full proprietary right," meanings of—Gift over, validity of.

Where one of the clauses in a Will was in these terms: "On my demise my present wife J.' shall get all these immoveable properties and become full owner and enjoy and hold possession thereof, with regard thereto, my daughter and daughter's sons or kinsmen shall not be competent to raise objection" and the Will further authorised the widow to alienate or sell any portion of the aforesaid immoveable properties, for the purpose of performance of religious acts or pilgrimages or necessary expenses, or the whole of the properties in the event of extreme necessity:

Held, that an absolute interest in the immoveable properties left by the testator was conferred on his widow. [p. 603, col. 2.]

The effect of the use of the word malik is to confer on the donee a heritable and alienable estate: the context may, however, qualify or cut down the full proprietary rights that the word prima facie imports. [p. 603, col. 2.]

Where a testator grants an absolute interest in the estate to his widow, the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her would be inoperative in law. [p. 604, col. 1.]

The question in expounding a Will is, not what the testator meant, but what is the meaning of his words. The Court must discover what was the intention of the testator from the words he has used. Although it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property, the Court cannot give effect to any intention which is not expressed or plainly implied in the language of the Will. Those who take under a Will are bound by the expressed intention of the testator. If that expressed intention is unfortunately different from what he really intended, so much the worse for those who wish the actual intention to prevail. [p. 604, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for construction of a Will, for administration of the estate covered thereby, and for incidental reliefs.

Rai Durgagati Banerjee Bahadur made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 6th February 1902, and died on the 26th March 1903. His widow as executrix obtained Probate of the Will on the 27th August 1903. She has since then from time to time alienated immoveable properties comprised in the estate of her husband. The present litigation was commenced on the 27th November 1911 by the sons of his two daughters as also the surviving daughter for construction of the Will and for declaration that the alienations will not be binding upon them as reversionary heirs after the death of the widow. The claim has been resisted by the widow and her transferees, on the allegation that she took an absolute interest in the estate under the Will.

The relationship of the members of the family will appear from the following genealogical table:—

The Subordinate Judge has held that the first defendant took an absolute interest in the estate under the Will and has accordingly dismissed the suit, without investigation of the question raised in the fifth issue, namely, whether the alienations were made for legal necessity. On the present appeal, the only question discussed at the Bar relates to the exact nature of the interest taken by the first defendant in the estate of her husband under the terms of his Will.

The Will consists of ten clauses. The first clause recites an earlier Will executed on the 14th April 1882. The second and third clauses mention family events which had happened since then and induced the testator to revoke the first Will. The third clause recites that his moveable properties, including Government securities and ornaments, were the Stridhan properties of his second wife, who would continue to possess and enjoy them as owner with power of disposition. The fifth clause contains two recitals, namely, first, that his immoveable properties (enumerated in the schedule) were his self-acquired and exclusive properties, and secondly, that although some of these properties stood in the name of his deceased first wife, he himself was the real owner and was in enjoyment of the income thereof. The sixth clause, which has formed the centre of controversy, is in these terms: "On my demise, my present wife Srimati Jagattarini Debi shall get all these immoveable properties and become full owner (sampurna malik) and enjoy and hold possession thereof; with regard thereto, my daughter or daughter's son or kinsmen shall not be competent to raise objection." The seventh clause authorises the widow to alienate or sell any portion of the aforesaid immoveable properties (for the purpose of performance of religious acts or pilgrimages or necessary expenses) or the whole of the properties in the event of extreme necessity. She is further authorised to grant, if necessary, leases in perpetuity or for a term. The eighth clause authorises the widow to sell at a fair price, if necessary, the dwelling house and garden at Suri, to apply the sale proceeds in the purchase or erection of a house in the holy city of Benares or at Calcutta and to reside in it. The ninth clause provides that on the death of the widow, the surviving daughter Sulochana would get, enjoy and hold possession of such of the immoveable properties as shall exist, and on the death of the daughter, her sons who shall remain alive, shall get a moiety share of the said properties, the other moiety to be taken by Manmathanath, the son of the predeceased daughter Saudamini. The tenth clause appoints his wife as executrix of the Will with authority to pay debts and collect dues.

There is, in our opinion, no room for serious controversy that the sixth clause confers on the widow an absolute interest in the immoveable properties left by her husband. As was ruled by this Court in Kollany Koer v. Luchmee Pershad (1) and by the Judicial Committee in Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (2), the effect of the word "Malik" is to confer on the donee a heritable and alienable estate; but as was observed by the Judicial Committee in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (3) the effect of the word "Malik" may be modified by the context, in other words, the context may qualify or cut down the full proprietary rights that the word prima facie imports. Illustrations of such qualification may be found in Shib Lalshan Bhakat v. Srimati Tarangini Dasi (4), Pandarpa Nath Ghose v. Jogendra Nath Bose (5), Kunchoo Money Dossee v. Troylucko Mohiney Dossee (6), Hara Kumari Dasi v Mohim Chandra Sarkar (7) and Harilal Franlal v. Bai Rewa (8). In the case before us, the testator was, however, not content with the word "Malik"; he used the expression "Sampurna Malik" i. e., full proprietor, and it is difficult to imagine what more emphatic and unambiguous expression he might have used if he wished to create an absolute interest in favour of his widow. Now there can be no dispute that the expression "full proprietary right" implies absolute power of alienation: Saroda Sundari Dassi v.

Kristo Jiban Pal (9). We must hold accordingly that the effect of the sixth clause is to create an absolute interest in favour of the widow, and this view accords with the decision of the Judicial Committee in Fateh Chand v. Rup Chand (10): see also Padam Lal v. Tek Singh (11), Amarendra Nath Bose v. Shuradhany Dasi (12), Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (13).

The question next arises, is there anything in the other parts of the Will which qualifies the effect of the sixth clause? Our attention has not been drawn to any specific provision which has such effect; but it has been argued that the seventh and eighth clauses would be superfluous if under the sixth clause the widow were deemed vested with authority to alienate the estate left by her husband. There is no force in this contention. The seventh and eighth clauses do not contradict or qualify but only confirm and amplify the provisions of the sixth clause. Stress has finally been laid on the ninth clause which provides for the devolution of the residue, if any, left at the time of the death of the widow. That clearly does not restrict the extent of the interest created by the sixth clause. It is indisputable that notwithstanding such a provision, there may be a prior absolute interest in favour of the widow: Sures Chandra v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (14), where it was pointed out that if the widow took an absolute interest in the estate devised, the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her would be inoperative in law. See also Manikyamala Bose v. Nandakumar Bose (15), where reference is made to section 111 of the Indian Succession Act; cf. illustration (a) and the effect of illustrations as explained by the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (16). The case is thus very different from that before the House of Lords in Comiskey v. Fowring-Hanbury (17 where, although an absolute gift was in terms made to the widow, there was clear indication that the estate was to be kept intact by her for transmission to the nieces of the testator, in whose favour there was an executory gift to take effect on her death. The decision just mentioned, however, illustrates what room there is for divergence of judicial opinion upon the question of construction of ill expressed testamentary instruments.

We have been pressed finally to hold that the testator could not possibly have intended to authorise his widow to alienate all his estate just as she might please. But although, as the Judicial Committee observed in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (18), it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property, we cannot override the plain language used by the testator. Our only duty is to discover what was the intention of the testator, and we must make that discovery from the words he has used. As Lord Wensleydale said in Abbott v. Middleton (19), the question in expounding a Will is, not what the testator meant, but what is the meaning of his words. To the same effect is the observation of Lord Watson in Scale v. Rawlins (20): "We are not at liberty to speculate upon what the testator may have intended to do, or may have thought that he had actually done. We cannot give effect to any intention which is not expressed or plainly implied in the language of his Will." The truth is, intention and expression of intention are two different things. Those who take under the Will are bound by the expressed intention of the testator. If that expressed intention is unfortunately different from what he really intended, so much the worse for those who wish the actual intention to prevail."

As a last resort, the appellants have contended that the sixth clause is limited in its application to such properties alone as stood in the name of the first wife of the testator. The Subordinate Judge refused, and, in our opinion, correctly refused, to place this narrow construction upon the sixth clause; the immoveable properties mentioned therein are all those enumerated in the schedule referred to in the fifth clause. If this view were not adopted, the result would be an intestacy with regard to all the immoveable properties which stood in the name of the testator. We are not prepared to impute such an intention to the testator, in the absence of clear indication to that effect.

The result is that the decision of the Subordinate Judge, that the first defendant was given an absolute right to the properties devised by her husband, is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs. The costs in this Court will be divided in the same manner as in the Court below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863), s. 14—Temple—Appointment of trustee by temple committee—Suit for declaration that appointment is invalid and for injunction restraining interference with temple affairs—Sanction under s. 92, whether necessary—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

A suit for a declaration that the appointment of a trustee by a temple committee is invalid and for an injunction restraining him from entering on his duties or interfering with the affairs of the temple and its properties is a suit virtually for the removal of a trustee and is not maintainable without the requisite sanction under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. The suit may also be treated as one in which direction of the Court is necessary for the administration of a public trust and falls under the section, at least under clause (h), sub-section (1). [p. 607, col. 2; p. 608, cols. 1 & 2.]

Such a suit does not come within the scope of section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act. [607 col. 1.]

A Civil Court can question the appointment of a trustee by a Devasthanam Committee, if the appointment is not made reasonably and in good faith [p. 607, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1917.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs were two trustees of a temple. Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 formed the Temple Committee appointed under Act XX of 1863. Eighth defendant was appointed by them as trustee in place of one K. deceased. The appointment was proposed while K. was alive, as he was weak and incapable of attending to his work. But when the actual appointment was made, K. was dead and there was a vacancy. The question argued was that the suit was maintainable, as the Committee had no power to make the appointment against the will of the other trustees.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rengachariar, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.—The Civil Courts have jurisdiction under section 9, Civil Procedure Code, which is not taken away by any provision whatsoever. See Thiruvengadatha Aiyangar v Ponnappa Aiyangar(1), Sitharam Chetty v. Subramania Aiyar (2), Ponnambala Mudaliyar v. Varaguna Rama Pandia Chinnatambiar (3), following two Sudder Decisions. See also Subbayya v. Krishna (4), Rangasami Naicken v. Varadappa Naicken (5). The Court has power to regulate the trust. Aiyar (8). The English Law is given in Vatcher v. Paull 9) dealing with fraud on powers to appoint trustees.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Committee.—The case of the plaintiffs was that the Committee cannot appoint an additional trustee. But in fact the appointment was made to a vacancy. Such being the fact, Act XX of 1863 bars a suit brought without the sanction of the Court. See section 14.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—Section 14 cannot be meant to take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, if they have any.]

That is anyhow the decision in Pannambala Mudaliyar v. Varayuna Rama Pandia Chinnatambiar (3), which was under Regulation VII of 1817 which contained no provision regarding suits.

Thiruvengadatha Aiyangar v. Ponnappa Aiyangar (1) is the case of filling up a vacancy.

The suit, if maintainable, is premature. For nothing has yet been done in pursuance of the appointment. So this is not a case for granting an injunction.

[SPENCER, J.—This is not a suit for the removal of a trustee but only for a declaration that the appointment is illegal.]

The effect at least is the same, as the moment a man is appointed he becomes a trustee.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—If so, he can be removed only for breach of trust.]

Or under section 14. The discretion has been properly exercised. We are not bound to accept any man recommended by the plaintiffs.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for Defendant No. 8—(1) The suit as brought is not maintainable. The point that is now raised that the appointment to a vacancy is itself bad is new. My answer thereto is that in order to interfere with a settled scheme of administration the Committee should show adequate cause. But this is not the case here. For the appointment to a vacancy is their duty.

(2) Allegations against this defendant are not sufficient to furnish a cause of action. He, being appointed under a statutory power, presumed to be properly exercised, is a trustee even though the assent of the other trustees was not had, being unnecessary. Until the appointment is declared bad, he continues to be a trustee. The only suit contemplated is for the removal. Such a suit does not lie without sanction under section 14 of Act XX of 1863 or under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. For even a trespasser has been held to come under section 92. See Neti Rama Jogiah v. Venkatacharlu (10) ["even if illegally substituted as trustee"]. See also Kaliswara Gurukkal v. Nataraja Tambiran (11). See page 632 of Ganapathy Aiyar's "Hindu and Muhammadan Religious Endowments." Sanction is required to prevent multiplicity of suits. See also Bishen Chand Baswat v. Nadir Hossein (12), Neti Rama Jogiah v. Venkatacharlu (10). Even if the defendant be not a trustee but merely contend that he is such, the Code applies. See Jugal Kishore v. Lakshmandas Raghunathdas (13).

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—But here the power of the appointing body itself is in question.]

They have the power to appoint. But the question is whether the appointment is proper. So the Code applies. For the Court will never say that anybody can challenge the appointment. For then no Committee will find itself safe.

[SPENCER, J.—There is no allegation of defect in the power of the Committee.]

None. Sanction is required unless the right be purely personal.

Mr. Rangachariar, in reply.—Section 92 is not a bar. For it applies only when the conditions mentioned in it are satisfied, i. e., a breach of trust or a necessity for the direction, if the Court and the reliefs must be one of those mentioned in the section. See Kalyana Venkataramana Aiyangar v. Kasturi Ranga Aiyangar (14). There should be a check on the Committee's powers. That is the province of the Court.

Trustees are not like ordinary worshippers who should get sanction before suit: See Samaram Singarachariar v. Krishnaswami

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I am not disposed to agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The suit is instituted by two out of three trustees of a temple for a declaration that the appointment of the 8th defendant, which is practically in the vacancy created by the death of the third trustee, by the Devasthanam Committee is invalid and for an injunction restraining him from interfering with the affairs and the property of the temple. It is alleged in the plaint that this is not a proper appointment inasmuch as there was improper understanding between some of the members of the Committee and the 8th defendant as regards the former obtaining lease of certain buildings belonging to the temple at less than the proper rent. It is further alleged that the 8th defendant had agreed in consideration of his appointment to grant certain sites to some of the members of the Committee in the name of third persons. If those allegations are well-founded in fact—and that is a matter which could only be investigated at the trial—the appointment of the 8th defendant could not be said to be either reasonable or made in good faith. There are a number of rulings of this Court which lay down the principle that a Civil Court can question an appointment of a trustee by a Devasthanam Committee, if it is not made reasonably or in good faith [vide Thiruvengadatha Aiyangar v. Ponnappa Aiyangar (1), Tirumalaiyappa Pillai v. Vengu Aiyar (8), Ganapathi Ayyar v. Vedavyasa Alasinga Bhattar (6), Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar (7) and also the general observations of the learned Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Sitharama Chetty v. Subramania Aiyar (2)[1]. In Thiruvengadatha Aiyangar v. Ponnappa Aiyangar (1) the appointment under consideration was that of additional trustees: in Ganapathi Aiyar v. Vedavyasa Alasinga Bhattar (6) the question was as regards the power of the Board of Revenue altering the scheme of management, and in Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar (7) the question which the Civil Court was asked to decide was the propriety of the suspension of a trustee by the Committee. But the principle applied in those cases would apply equally to the case of an improper appointment of a trustee in a vacancy caused by the death of a trustee.

But then the learned Pleaders for the respondents have argued that the suit would not lie because no sanction was obtained under section 14 of Act XX of 1863 or under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. As regards the first, I do not think the present suit comes within the scope of that Act. It is not a case of misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty committed by a trustee. But I am of opinion that section 92, Civil Procedure Code, does apply. This is a case which may properly be described as one in which direction of the Court is necessary for the administration of the public trust within the meaning of that section, as held in Neti Rama Jogiah v. Venkatacharlu (10) and in Kaliswara Gurukkal v. Nataraja Tambiram (11). The mere fact that the 8th defendant had not yet taken charge of his office or taken possession of the properties as a co-trustee with the plaintiffs cannot make any difference, because the object of the suit is to obtain the direction of the Court as to whether the plaintiffs alone are to act in the matter of the trust or they must so act in conjunction with the 8th defendant. That view is supported by an observation of the Privy Council in Bishen Chand Basawat v. Nadir Hossein (12), as pointed out in Kaliswara Gurukkal v. Nataraja Tambiran (11).

Mr. T. Rangachariar, the learned Vakil for the appellants, however, argued that this is not a case for the removal of any trustee or for any other relief enumerated under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. Ordinarily, the removal of a trustee would mean the removal of a trustee from office by reason of some act or omission in connection with his office of trustee, and here the 8th defendant has not, as already stated, entered upon the duties of trustee at all. But he has been undoubtedly appointed by the Devasthanam Committee by proceedings held according to the rules. Therefore, the Devasthanam Committee, so far as they are concerned, having the power to appoint a trustee, have done what they could in order to clothe the 8th defendant with the status and power of a trustee.

At the same time I am rather doubtful whether the prayer in the plaint comes within the words "removing any trustee." Even if they do not, I have no doubt that the relief is one which is contemplated by the residuary relief No. (h) under section 92, sub-section (1) of the Civil Procedure Code. Clause (h) says, "granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require." The object of this suit is to have it declared that the 8th defendant is not a trustee properly appointed and also to prevent him from acting in the capacity of a trustee. I should say that that is a relief cognate to removing a trustee.

It was also argued by Mr. Rangachariar that suits by trustees do not come within section 92, Civil Procedure Code. But I do not think that that contention is at all sound, and no authority has been cited in support of that proposition. If the terms of section 92, Civil Procedure Code, apply to a suit by trustees, there is no apparent reason why such a suit should be held to be exempted from its restrictive provisions. The plaintiffs not having obtained any sanction under section 92 of the Code the suit is not maintainable. In the result, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I am of opinion that section 92, Civil Procedure Code, is a bar to the maintenance of the present suit. The decisions in Jeyangarulavaru v. Durma Dossji (18), Ponnambala Mudaliyar v. Varaguna Rama Pandia Chinnatambiar (3) and Samaram Singaracharlar v. Krishnaswami Iyengar (15), which were cited in the arguments, being all prior to the enactment of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, in which clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 92 and sub-section (2) appeared for the first time, must be read in the light of the law as it then was. In effect, this is a suit for the removal of a trustee from his office. No doubt the relief asked for in the plaint is for a declaration that the appointment of the 8th defendant is invalid and for a permanent injunction restraining him from interfering with the affairs of the temple. But it cannot be denied that the 8th defendant has been appointed as a trustee by a statutory body competent to make the appointment and, therefore, he is a trustee until he is removed from his office by a competent authority. There was at the time of appointment an existing vacancy, and under Act XX of 1863 the Devasthanam Committee have an inherent right to make appointments of trustees whenever vacancies occur. It is immaterial for the purposes of this suit what motives the members of the Committee had for making this particular appointment. They have as much power to appoint a bad man as trustee as to appoint a good man, in the exercise of their discretion. This is in fact an appointment of a man who, the plaintiffs say, ought not to be appointed, and the only means of getting rid of him is to bring a suit for his removal from office. The language of section 92, sub-section (2), Civil Procedure Code, is very clear. It declares that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is referred to in the section, except in conformity with the provisions of sub-section (1). One of the reliefs is that of removing a trustee. The only exception to this is the case where a trustee is sought to be removed under section 14 of Act XX of 1863 for misfeasance or neglect of duty. In either case sanction is required, either the sanction of the Advocate-General or the sanction of the District Court, and as the present suit has been instituted without sanction, it is not sustainable. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Order directing further enquiry—Notice to accused, whether necessary—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 420—Cheating—Guilty knowledge—Burden of proof.

Before a District Magistrate takes action under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he must give notice to the accused.

Accused pawned six rings which he said were of gold. Subsequently it was discovered that the rings were of silver gilt. Accused was charged with an offence under section 420 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the burden of proving that the accused knew that the rings were not what he suggested them to be was on the prosecution.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Agra, dated the 19th July 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Mata Prasad was tried by a Magistrate on a charge under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code and acquitted. He had pawned six rings which he said were of gold It appeared subsequently that they were not made of gold but were made of silver gilt. The question was whether he knew that the rings were not what he suggested them to be. The Magistrate after examining the evidence for the prosecution came to the conclusion that he did not, or at any rate, gave him the benefit of the doubt. The reasons which he gave for coming to that conclusion seem to me sound. The District Magistrate, however, has ordered a re-trial; presumably he means a further enquiry. It does not appear from the record that he issued any notice to the accused before doing so. It has been ruled in this Court consistently from the Full Bench case reported in Queen-Empress v. Chotu (1) down to the case of Dost Muhammad Khan v. Emperor (2) that before a Magistrate takes action under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he should give notice to the accused. I must say in my opinion I think it is scarcely necessary to have a re-trial in this case, but if the Magistrate is still of that opinion, then he will give notice to Mata Prasad and give him an opportunity of showing cause as to why an order should not be passed to his prejudice. I may point out that the onus of proving the offence in this case, the guilty knowledge, lies on the prosecution. I allow the application and set aside the order of the learned Magistrate and direct that the record be returned.

Application allowed.

ORDER.—For the reasons given by the District Magistrate, we hold that the Bench Magistrates who convicted Nihchal were not competent to try and sentence him and that their proceedings were, therefore, void under section 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It may be pointed out that for a conviction by a Bench of Magistrates to be legal, it must be by the quorum of Magistrates required under the rules, each of the members of which has heard the whole evidence in the case.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Ghazipur, dated the 6th August 1919.

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This case must go back, because under the rulings of this Court; I invite the learned District Magistrate's attention to one of them, Kharga v. Emperor (1)] it is necessary to give notice to the person who has been discharged under section 437 before further enquiry can be ordered. If, therefore, the District Magistrate is still of opinion that further enquiry under section 109 is necessary, (sic) it seems to me on a perusal of the judgment of the Magistrate himself that he has probably arrived at the right conclusion. But this, however, is a matter entirely discretionary with the District Magistrate.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4 (b)

195, 476, 537—Order under s. 476, whether complain—S. 195 (5), scope of—Want of complaint, whether irregularity or illegality.

An order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code is not a complaint. [p. 611, col. 2.]

The provisions of section 195.(5) of the Criminal Procedure Code only apply when a Court has, on the application of some person, sanctioned the trial of any of the offences named in section 195 and cannot apply to a case sent to a Magistrate under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for an order under the latter section is not a sanction. [p. 611, col. 2.]

Though want of sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code may not vitiate a trial, yet where there has been no complaint under section 195 as regards the offence of which the applicant has been found guilty, the absence of a complaint is not a mere irregularity but is fatal to the trial. [p. 612, col. 1.]

Criminal revision of the judgment, dated the 12th May 1917, passed by the Sessions Judge, Nerbudda Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 64 of 1917.

Messrs. M. Gupta and Gangadhar Sitaram, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick (Standing Counsel), for the Crown.

ORDER.—One Seth Kunjlal Deochand, whose munim the present applicant Nanakram is, filed Suit No. 71 of 1915 in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Khandwa, against Sandoo and others for the recovery of Rs. 2,000 on a mortgage-deed, dated the 23rd February 1903, said to have been executed by Sandoo. The original mortgage-deed was said to be lost, but was subsequently found to have been filed in the record of Suit No. 813 of 1905 filed by the same plaintiff against Sandoo in the Court of the Munsif, Burhanpur. Nanakram, who had been examined as a witness, stated in it that no payment was made towards the debt of the suit; but when shown the bond, Exhibit P-10, was forced to admit that Rs. 154 had been paid towards the debt. Nanakram had also stated that there was no separate khata of the mortgage-debt in the account-books kept by him; but it is shown that for the years Samvat 1959 to 1962 there was such a separate khata. The result of the proceedings instituted under section 476 was that the Sub-Judge considered that Nanakram had committed offences under sections 193 and 463, Indian Penal Code, and he laid complaint in the Court of the first class Magistrate. The concluding portion of his order runs:

NANARAM v. EMPEROR.

"I hence order the prosecution of the accused Nanakram for offences under sections 193 and 463, Indian Penal Code" Nanakram thereupon applied to this Court to get that order quashed. It was dealt with as Criminal Revision No 227 of 1916 and the application was dismissed by me on the 17th October 1916. The case was tried and Nanakram was charged by the Magistrate as follows: "That you abetted the fraudulent and dishonest filing of a plaint for Rs 2,000 claim in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Khandwa, knowing that the claim was false in Suit No. 71 of 1915 and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 209-109, Indian Penal Code, and that in the said case you made the following statements: 'There is no separate khata in our account-books for the mortgage-debts in suit and that no payments had been made towards the debt in suit," knowing these statements to be false. He was charged separately under section 193, Indian Penal Code, in respect of each statement. The Magistrate considered that he was justified in proceeding against the accused under section 209/109, Indian Penal Code, and under section 195, sub-section (5) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The trial resulted in Nanakram being acquitted on the two charges of perjury on the technical ground that the Sub-Judge had failed to read over to him his depositions and in his conviction of the offences under section 209/109. He was awarded one year's rigorous imprisonment. In appeal the learned Sessions Judge has confirmed the conviction and sentence. Against that decision the present application for revision has been filed.

The first question raised here is that as the Sub-Judge in his proceedings under section 476 did not lay a complaint against the applicant for an offence falling under section 209, Indian Penal Code, the Magistrate under the provisions of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, had no power to entertain it, it being one of those offences of which no Court can take cognizance except with the previous sanction or complaint of the Court concerned or of a Court to which that Court is subordinate. There is nothing to prevent a Court fulfilling the provisions of section 195 by making an ordinary complaint in any of the forms open to a private individual; but as a rule it should proceed, as in the present case, under section 476 to avoid the necessity of supporting the complaint like a private individual by a statement on oath in accordance with section 200, Criminal Procedure Code. It seems to me that an order properly passed under section 476 is both a complaint and more than a complaint. It is a judicial proceeding and an order of the Court, but it is not in my opinion a sanction 'within the meaning of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code.' The question before me is whether in this case there should have been a complaint with reference to the particular offence the applicant has been convicted of. The matter of the offence under this section was before the Sub Judge as disclosed by the proceedings under section 476, but he preferred to proceed under sections 193 and 463, Indian Penal Code, against the applicant. It is argued by the learned Standing Counsel for the Government that even if there is no complaint from the Sub-Judge as regards the offence of which the applicant has been convicted, and there is clearly no complaint as regards an offence under section 209/109, Indian Penal Code, yet under the provisions of section 195 (5), Criminal Procednre Code, the Magistrate was entitled to frame a charge under section 209/109, Indian Penal Code, as that offence was disclosed in the inquiry under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, I am unable to accede to this proposition. In my opinion the provisions of section 195 (5) only apply when a Court has, on the application of some person, sanctioned the trial of any of the offences named under section 195 and cannot apply to a case sent to a Magistrate under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for an order under the latter section is not a sanction. The reason why the law apparently allows a Magistrate taking cognizance of a case started on complaint with previous sanction to frame a charge of any other offence disclosed by the facts, as long as it refers it to the offence for which the sanction was given, seems to me to be that in these cases it is difficult for the sanctioning Court to always ascertain the exact facts or to determine exactly all the offences which may be disclosed at the trial; but when a complaint is made under section 476 the Judge or Magistrate must move and should definitely know what offence or offences he committed. The matter becomes a public prosecution, and it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the exact offence of which complaint has been made of. I must hold that in the present case no complaint was made by the Sub-Judge as regards an offence under section 209, that no sanction for the prosecution of the applicant under that section has been obtained, and that as the matter reached the Magistrate in the form of a complaint and not as a sanction, section 195 (5) is not applicable and under these circumstances the trial is bad in law. Section 195 distinctly states that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under section 209, Indian Penal Code, when such offence is committed in or in relation to any proceedings in any Court, except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of such a Court or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. It is argued that allowing this to be the case, section 537 (b) saves the conviction but as already stated there is no question of sanction in this case; the case was on a complaint. Though want of sanction under section 195 may not vitiate a trial, yet where there has been no complaint under section 195 as regards the offence of which the applicant has been found guilty, the absence of a complaint is not a mere irregularity. For these reasons I must set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the applicant. I do so and cancel his bail-bond.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

Criminal Tribes Act (III of 1911), s. 23, scope of—Previous conviction, whether must be after registration.

The operation of section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act is not confined to offences that have been committed since the convict was registered. The second conviction referred to in the section does not signify that the previous conviction should have been obtained after the registration of the convict. It is enough for the purposes of the section if the convict has been previously convicted, whether before or after his registration.

Criminal reference by the District Magistrate, Ghazipur.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.—In this case Nakchhedi Musahar, a member of a registered criminal tribe, has been sentenced for an offence punishable under section 457, Indian Penal Code The accused was previously convicted for a similar offence on the 6th of November 1912. At that time Nakchhedi had not been registered. The Deputy Magistrate has interpreted section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act to mean that the section applies only to offences that have been committed since the convict was registered and that a second conviction in that section means a second conviction since the registration of the accused. This view is supported by the wording of the section, which begins "Whoever being a member of any criminal tribe." This suggests that the first and the foremost element required by the section is that the accused should be a member of the criminal tribe, and as such he should be convicted. Moreover, Government Order No. 1131 VIII—340, dated the 13th January 1919, requires any Musahar who has been in jail for a non-bailable offence since 1910 to be registered as a member of a criminal tribe. This means that practically every one who is registered has already committed at least one offence and this being so, it seems hardly necessary to make any mention of a second offence in section 23. On the other hand, there is the ruling reported as Emperor v. Adhin (1). In this case it was held that it matters not whether the previous conviction was before or after the registration. In this case the accused does not appear to have been represented, but so long as this judgment stands I have no option but to report the case and recommend that the conviction be set aside and the Magistrate be directed to commit the case to the Court of Session.

JUDGMENT.—The case of Emperor v. Adhin (1) is binding on me. I must, therefore, accept the reference and direct the Magistrate to commit the accused to Sessions.

Order accordingly.

Where a 1st class Magistrate passes a final order under section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, on evidence partly recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate under his directions and partly recorded by himself, he cannot be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction so as to call for interference by the High Court in revision. [p. 614, col. 1.]

The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is that he must be satisfied that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof. Once he is so satisfied, his jurisdiction is complete and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure, not jurisdiction. [p. 614, col. 2.]

An enquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate, to whom a matter is referred under the provisions of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not confined to a mere inspection of the locality and a report thereon [p. 614, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bezwada, in Miscellaneous Case No. 14 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Sonasundram, for the Petitioner.—The Deputy Magistrate's order is void, as he should not have acted on the evidence recorded by a Subordinate Magistrate. He should not have delegated that function to his subordinate, but should have recorded the whole evidence himself.

Mr. V. Rimesam, for the Respondent and the Public Prosecutor (Mr. E. R. Osborne), for the Crown.—It was within the competence of the Deputy Magistrate to have directed enquiry by his subordinate. He was seized of jurisdiction, and once he proceeded to act in the exercise of jurisdiction, any subsequent irregularity will not vitiate the proceedings or call for the interference of the High Court in revision.

Moreover, the whole investigation was not conducted by the Sub-Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate received and recorded further evidence that was tendered to him.

ORDER.—In this case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed a preliminary order under section 145 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. He then passed proceedings directing the Sub-Magistrate of Tiruvur to hold a local enquiry, record evidence on both sides as to possession and submit his report with the records. The Sub-Magistrate examined 24 witnesses, exhibited a number of documents and submitted his report with the records. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate examined 8 more witnesses himself and then passed orders on all the evidence thus recorded by himself and the Sub-Magistrate, declaring one party to be in possession.

It is argued (1) that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's action in directing the Sub-Magistrate to take evidence was not authorized by section 145, and that he was not entitled to consider the evidence so recorded, (2) that his action rendered the final order passed by him void, as being without jurisdiction.

For both propositions reliance is placed on the judgment of Wallis, J., in Arumuga Gounden v. Venkata Subbier (1), which certainly seems to support them.

CHAUTHI AHIR v. EMPEROR.

The true scope of section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, seems to me to be a very doubtful matter, and if it were necessary for this case to determine it, I should feel constrained to refer the case for the decision of a Divisional Bench. The question does not appear to have been seriously argued before the learned Judge in Arumuga Gounden v. Venkata Subbier (1) and he contents himself with quoting three earlier rulings [Baikunt Kuar, In re (2), Hanumanthappa v. Hussain Saib (3) and High Court Proceedings, 13th November 1868, No. 1492 (4).] In the former case Prinsep, J., certainly says that the local enquiry "should be restricted solely to some question relating to the feature of property about which the dispute has arisen, and that it should not be directed to any matter which can be proved before the Magistrate by oral evidence such as the question of actual possession." This dictum seems to entirely ignore the very wide definition of "inquiry" in section 4 (k), Criminal Procedure Code; and I may add that if it were the intention of the Legislature to make the enquiry a mere 'inspection' as the learned Judge seems to think, it would have been quite easy to say so. The two Madras cases merely lay down that it is not open to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to depute the whole investigation to the Sub Magistrate and to decline to receive any evidence himself, as he is bound to do under section 145 (4).

But assuming that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's action in proceeding partially on evidence recorded under his order by a Subordinate Magistrate and not by himself is irregular, I am clearly of opinion that this does not affect his jurisdiction, or warrant the interference of this Court in revision The whole question of the circumstances in which this Court would interfere with orders under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, has been considered in Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja (5). The judgment in that case (to which I was a party) says (p. 286*): "The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof in his jurisdiction. Once he is so satisfied, his jurisdiction is complete and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure, not jurisdiction". This ruling, so far as I am aware, has not been subsequently questioned and with all respect to the view expressed in Arumuga Gounden v. Venkata Subbier (1), I must follow it, especially as I see no reason to alter my opinion.

I must, therefore, dismiss the present revision petition.

An order under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code for compensation should be passed simultaneously with the order of discharge or acquittal, and not in a separate proceeding. [p. 615, col. 1.]

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Benares, dated the 1st September 1919.

ORDER OF REFERENCE:—This is an application for the revision of an order of the District Magistrate of Jaunpur, remanding a case to the Bench of Magistrates who had passed an order for compensation under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, without having recorded any objection which the complainant might have to make. The learned District Magistrate considered the defect in procedure as merely technical, but in view of the rulings referred to in this application it must be held that the defect is material and cannot be corrected by a subsequent proceeding. An order under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, should be passed simultaneously with the order of discharge or acquittal and not in a separate proceeding. Moreover, the applicant's complaint was found to be not merely frivolous and vexatious but absolutely false. It has been held that the provisions of section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be appropriately applied in such cases The record will be submitted to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the order for compensation under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, be set aside.

JUDGMENT.—I accept the reference and set aside the order for compensation.

Ordinarily orders passed under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code will not be interfered with under section 435 of the Code, but where an order purporting to be under the former section exceeds the powers given by it, the High Court will interfere, especially where there has been material irregularity which has prejudiced a party to the proceedings. Proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not within jurisdiction unless the procedure prescribed therein is strictly adhered to. Criminal revision of the order of the Additional Commissioner and Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ramtek, in Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 2 of 1917, dated the 15th February 1917.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Applicants.

Mr. P. R. Naidu, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—On the 5th February 1917 information was laid under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sub-Inspector of Police, Deolapar, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ramtek, to the effect that there was a dispute regarding three fields situated at Mauza Karwahi between Madho Prasad and Ramnarayanlal on the one hand and Jagansi Gond on the other and that the said dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the parties to appear before him on 15th February 1917 at Deolapar and to put in written statements of their respective claims as to actual possession of the property in dispute and as the case appeared to be one of some emergency, the Magistrate attached the three fields pending decision of the case. On the 15th February 1917 the case was taken up, not at Deolapar, but at Chorbaoli, a village some nine miles from Deolapar. It was called at 3 P. M. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate in his order states that he had issued orders to the Sub-Inspector the previous day that the case would be heard at Chorbaoli and as Madho Prasad and Ramnarayanlal were absent when the case was called, the Magistrate proceeded ex parte and passed an order stating that finding Jagansi was in possession of the property in dispute, he should retain possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law. Against that order, the present application for revision is filed by Madho Prasad and Ramnarayanlal. I am satisfied that the Magistrate's order which is not on record said to have been issued on the 14th to the Sub-Inspector telling him to inform the present applicants that they should attend at Chorbaoli in place of Deolapar, was not served on them in time to allow them to be present. They had engaged Mr. Parakh, Pleader, to represent them in the case. Mr. Parakh, who is present in the Court, tells me that he reached Deolapar with his clients at 8 or 9 A. M. on the morning of the 15th February. He put up with the Sub-Inspector there, but was told nothing as regards the change in the place of hearing until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when apparently on a chit received from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's reader the Sub-Inspector told the Pleader that the Court was at Chorbaoli that day. Mr. Parakh, Pleader, states that on his way back he enquired at Chorbaoli and was told that the case had been disposed of. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate at that time was absent from the bungalow. This was on the evening of the 15th. There is no reason to doubt Mr. Parakh's word. Whether it is the fault of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's clerk or of the Sub-Inspector that information did not reach the applicants in time, it is not my business to decide, but I am clearly of opinion that it was not possible for the two applicants to attend the Court at Chorbaoli at the time the case was called. Therefore, if the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order is open to revision, I have no hesitation in setting it aside. Counsel for Jagansi argues that this Court cannot interfere with the order in revision. I am referred to section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to Murat Singh v. Paika Bai (1) in support of this proposition. It seems to me that this Court cannot under section 435 ordinarily interfere with orders passed under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code; but where an order purporting to be under section 145 exceeds the powers given by the section, this Court can interfere. Irregular and illegal proceedings under Chapter XII are subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. See Pandurang Govind, In re (2), Pandurang Govind Pujari, In re (3), Dewan Chand v. Queen-Empress (4), Dhani Ram v. Bhola Nath (5) and Abdulla Khan v. Gunda (6). I hold the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not within jurisdiction unless the procedure prescribed there is strictly adhered to and, therefore, when a party to the dispute has had no opportunity of appearing and putting in his written statement, this Court can set the proceedings aside. This Court is not entitled to interfere merely because there has been an irregularity in the proceedings or an erroneous decision on a question of fact or law, but it can and will interfere when there has been a material irregularity which has prejudiced a party to the proceedings. Parmessar Singh v. Kailaspati (7). The irregularity here has prevented the applicants from having a fair trial. I do not question the Magistrate's power to proceed ex parte against a party in proceedings under section 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, when that party having due notice of the date fixed for hearing fails to attend in person or by Pleader to put in a written statement of his claim, but in the present case the applicants were not given notice in time that the case would be heard at Chorbaoli and they are entitled to be heard and must be heard before the final order under section 145 is passed. I set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, dated 15th February 1917, and direct that the case be proceeded with and dealt with according to law. It is pressed here that the case should not be returned to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ramtek, for disposal. Mr. Bourne, as seems clear from paragraph 4 of the District Magistrate's reply to the notice calling upon him to show cause why the order should not be set aside, has since the disposal of the case made a local enquiry into the question of possession, an enquiry made on the application of Jagansi, the non-applicants, for making a false report in this case to the Police. Under these circumstances as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ramtek, must have made up his mind on the question of possession, the case will be now disposed of by such other Magistrate as the District Magistrate may direct.

Order set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 228—Scuffle in verandah of Court—Offence.

Accused had a scuffle with some person in the verandah of a Court room. The Chaprasi of the Court intervened and put an end to it. No interruption was caused to the Court and it was found that there was no intention on the part of the accused to insult the Court:

Held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under section 228 of the Penal Code.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions, Judge, Allahabad, dated the 22nd June 1919.

Mr. K. R. Dang, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case there is a discrepancy between the finding of the learned Sessions Judge and of the Magistrate as to the facts. I have examined the record and there is no doubt that the Magistrate has come to the right conclusion on the facts. Manghai Ram, who was a witness for the prosecution in a case which was then being heard before the Magistrate, tried to come into the Court room from the verandah. Shanker, who appears to have been in some way related to the accused in that case, prevented him. There was a scuffle between the two and some sort of an assault. Mahabir, who was a Chaprasi of the Court, intervened and told Manghai not to come inside the Court room. When this happened, the Court appears to have taken action under section 480 of the Criminal Procedure Code and on the facts found, namely, that there had been this assault in the verandah of the Court room, convicted Manghai Ram under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, holding that this conduct amounted to "a contempt of Court as defined in that section," and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50. Manghai applied in revision to the learned Sessions Judge, who rejected the revision on what seems to me a misconception of the actual facts. The Judge seems to have been of the opinion that Manghai struck the Chaprasi and held that it was the duty of the Chaprasi, who was acting as a servant of the Court, to prevent a witness from coming into the Court room before he was called, and went on to hold that the accused in striking the Chaprasi undoubtedly intentionally insulted the Court. As a matter of fact it was never suggested by anybody that the accused had struck the Chaprasi. On the facts found it seems to me that the conviction cannot be sustained. There is no mention in section 228 of "contempt of Court." It is quite obvious that Manghai, when he slapped Shanker in the verandah of the Court because Shanker prevented him from going inside the Court room, had no idea whatever of intentionally insulting the learned Magistrate. He cannot, therefore, be convicted of intentional insult. He might, however, be convicted if it was proved that he had caused an interruption to the Magistrate. There is nothing whatever on the record to show that he did so There is no note made by the Magistrate at the time, no evidence, and nothing is said in the judgment on the point. It seems to me, therefore, that the conviction must be quashed. I, therefore, set it aside, acquit the accused, and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Conviction quashed.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In Civil Revision No. 316 of 1916, Stanyon, A. J. C., in his order, dated the 24th February 1917, held that Sheikh Abdul Rahiman, the plaintiff in the case he was dealing with, had made a false claim. He held that the receipt, dated the 4th September 1914, filed by the plaintiff was a forgery and the suit that was based on it a false suit. The concluding paragraph of his judgment runs: "I leave to the discretion of the lower Court to decide whether any action is necessary under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898." On the return of the case, the Small Cause Court Judge proceeded under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and finding there was a prima facie case against Abdul Rahiman, Imamali, Hemnath and Puransingh decided that they should be prosecuted and directed a complaint to be laid before the First Class Magistrate.

Puransingh and Hemnath filed this application for revision against that order. After they had filed their application, Abdul Rahiman and Imamali have filed similar applications, Criminal Revisions Nos. 187 and 188 of 1917. This order will dispose of all three applications.

As regards the applications of Hemnath, Imamali and Abdul Rahiman there seems to me no ground to disturb the order of the Small Cause Court Judge laying a complaint to the First Class Magistrate. This Court has found the receipt to be a forgery and the Small Cause Court Judge, on a reconsideration of the evidence before him in the case, as he explains in his answer to the Rule issued in Puransingh's case, has in his discretion determined that there is a prima facie case against all four applicants. There are obviously no valid grounds on which his decision to bring three out of the four applicants to trial can be challenged. I have no hesitation in dismissing the application of Hemnath and rejecting summarily the applications of Abdul Rahiman and Imamali.

In Puransingh's case it is, however, urged that notice was not given to him to appear and show cause before the Small Cause Court Judge passed the order impeached in these revisions. That is so. Two attempts were made to serve Puransingh at Raipur. They failed because he is said not to live at that place, though the summons in the Small Cause Court suit was served on him there. The Small Cause Court Judge, in place of waiting and issuing a fresh notice, wrote that Puransingh's whereabouts were not correctly known and proceeded to pass his order. It is argued for Puransingh that want of notice vitiates the order. It has been held, I have no doubt correctly, that notice is on the face of the section not legally necessary: see Ram Piari Rai v. Emperor (1), Baperam v. Gouri Nath Dutt (2) and Queen-Empress v. Matabadal (3). But notice, although not legally necessary, is desirable, more especially where the matter has not been already judicially dealt with; Empress v. Narotam Das (4). Here the question of the receipt being genuine or a forgery had been judicially dealt with and, therefore, I do not think that want of notice in Puransingh's case invalidates the proceedings against him. I, therefore, also dismiss his application.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 209, 437—Enquiry in respect of two offences—Charge framed in respect of only one offence—Further enquiry, whether can be directed in respect of other offence.

SHEO NARAYAN SINGH v. RADHA RAM.

Accused was placed before a Second Class Magistrate for trial on charges under sections 307 and 323 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate framed a charge under section 323 only and directed the accused to enter on his defence. The District Magistrate called for the record and, after giving notice to the accused and hearing his Counsel, directed a further enquiry in respect of the charge under section 307:

Held, that the order of the Magistrate framing a charge under section 323 amounted to a discharge of the accused under section 307 and that, therefore, the District Magistrate had power to direct further enquiry in respect of the latter offence.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Jaunpore, dated the 23rd July 1919.

Dr. J. N. Misra, for the Applicant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application arises under the following circumstances :—Two persons, Sheo Narain and Arjan Singh, were placed before a Magistrate of the Second Class for trial on charges under sections 307 and 323, Indian Penal Code. The learned Magistrate passed an order formally discharging Arjan Singh, but he went on to frame a charge under section 323 only against Sheo Narain Singh, who was directed to enter on his defence at the next hearing. In the course of his order the learned Magistrate recorded :—"In my opinion there is evidence of marpit against Sheo Narain Singh accused. A charge was, therefore, framed under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and was read over and explained to him." The District Magistrate called for the record and gave both the accused notice and considered everything that was said by Counsel engaged on their behalf, and he ordered further enquiry against both the accused. In this revision before me it is argued—

(1) That there was no ground for ordering further enquiry on the merits, and

(2) that as against Sheo Narain Singh the order was one which could not have been passed by the learned District Magistrate under the provisions of section 437, because it was said that on the plain wording of that section it can only come into operation in the case of an accused person who has been discharged.

It is argued that, far from there being an order of "discharge" against Sheo Narain Singh, the case is actually pending against him, and final orders have not yet been passed.

On the first ground I do not see any reason whatever to interfere. There was evidence on the record and the offence was a very serious one triable exclusively, so far as section 307 is concerned, by a Court of Session. On the second ground it seems to me that the objection is very technical. It is admitted that if the Magistrate had gone on with the case and convicted the accused under section 323, it would have been possible for the learned Sessions Judge to call for the record and report the matter to this Court which certainly could, if it was so advised, set aside the whole trial and order further enquiry or order commitment to the Court of Session. However, I find that there is the authority of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, namely, Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (1), which covers this case. In that case a Magistrate was enquiring into offences under sections 477 and 379 of the Indian Penal Code. He ultimately acquitted under section 379 and said nothing in his order about the charge under section 477. That also was an offence which was exclusively triable by a Court of Session. The High Court held:—"From the terms of the Magistrate's order it is clear that he adjudicated upon the question whether there was any evidence against the accused in respect of the major offence. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was not and he declined to charge him with the major offence. It seems to us that this is a 'discharge' within the meaning of section 209." Similarly in this case the Magistrate has said that there is evidence against Sheo Narain Singh of marpit. I take this to be equivalent to saying that there is no reliable evidence against him on the major charge. The District Magistrate is of opinion that there is. I think, therefore, that it was within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass the order. But in any case, assuming that it was not, I think this is certainly a case in which there should be further enquiry. I, therefore, decline to interfere. I say this without any reference to the merits of the case.

Order accordingly.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 282 OF 1919.
(CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 236 OF 1919).

September 15, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Moore.

In re PULLANNAVARA HANUMANTHA —ACCUSED No. 1—PETITIONER.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 423—Appellate Court, power of, to alter finding, scope of.

Although an Appellate Court has power under section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code to alter the finding of a lower Court while maintaining the sentence, it ought not to use such power if the accused would be prejudiced by the omission to prove the altered charge and if the defence might have been of a different character had the altered charge been framed in the first Court. [p. 621, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session, Bellary, in Criminal Appeal No. 22 of 1919, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate, Adoni, in C. C. No. 10 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioner.—The alteration of the finding by the Sessions Judge was illegal and was not warranted by the terms of sections 423, Criminal Procedure Code. The altered sections constitute more serious offences than the one for which the accused was convicted by the Magistrate.

Except under sections 237 and 238, Criminal Procedure Code, no person can be convicted by a Court of Appeal of an offence with which he was not charged in the first Court. Padmanabha Payi Kanniah v. Emperor (1), Mongalu Aorodhone Hathi In re (2), Golla Hanumappa v. Emperor (3), Dasarath Mandal v. Emperor (4).

The accused was distinctly prejudiced by the absence of a charge under the new sections. He was prevented from pleading the right of self-defence and that he had a right to resist the unlawful arrest.

(4) 34 C. 325; 5 Cr. L. J. 424.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The Sessions Judge had power to alter the finding under section 423, Criminal Procedure Code. The absence of a charge did not prejudice the petitioner. He never pleaded the right of private defence at the trial. In fact he said that he used no violence, and the finding is that violence was used.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner and five other persons were convicted of the offence of rioting armed with deadly weapons (sections 148, Indian Penal Code). On appeal the Sessions Judge of Bellary altered the finding in the case of the petitioner (accused No. 1) to one under sections 323, 511, Indian Penal Code, and maintained the sentence but reversed the convictions of the other accused. The facts, as found by the lower Courts, are shortly these. There had been ill feeling between accused No. 6 and prosecution witness No. 4, the Sub-Inspector of Police of Kowtalam, and there was a charge against 6th accused of having wrongfully confined P. W. No. 4 and P. W. No. 5. The Sub-Inspector of Adoni, who had been deputed to investigate the case, learning that 6th accused had sent for some bad characters from Halvy to commit offences against the Police, deputed a party of Head Constables and Constables with instructions to watch the path from Halvy, and to catch any Halvy people or strangers who might pass that way.

Soon after midnight on 7th May 1918 the Police, who were lying in ambush, saw ten or fifteen persons approaching armed with weapons and surrounded them. In the melee the petitioner aimed a blow with a battle axe at one of the Constables (P. W. No. 2). The latter warded off the blow with his lathi which was cut, but no hurt was actually caused to P. W. No. 2. Five persons including the petitioner were illegally arrested by the Police.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate framing a charge under section 148, Indian Penal Code, against accused Nos. 1 to 5 improperly omitted to state in the charge what the common object of the unlawful assembly was. The charge as framed was in these terms "that you at Halvy armed with deadly weapons, i. e., battle-axes, axes and sticks, committed rioting and attempted to strike P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 and that 1st accused aimed a blow with his battle axe at P. W. No. 2." The Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that it was not proved that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly, that the conduct of the accused showed that it was not their intention to attack the Police, that the Police had no right to arrest the accused merely because they saw them coming along the road and that no offence had been committed by accused Nos. 2 to 6. The Sessions Judge was, however, of opinion that a clear case under sections 226, 511, Indian Penal Code, had been made out against the petitioner and that the petitioner was not justified in using violence and aiming a blow with an axe before any arrest had been effected by the Police.

Dr. Swaminathan for the petitioner contended that the Sessions Judge acted illegally in altering the conviction under section 148, Indian Penal Code, into one of more serious offences under sections 326, 511, Indian Penal Code that such an alteration of finding is not warranted by the provisions of section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, and that the facts found would not justify a conviction under section 326, Indian Penal Code, read with section 511, Indian Penal Code. Under section 423 (1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure an Appellate Court has the power to alter the finding of the lower Court maintaining the sentence. It is urged that in cases not falling under sections 237 and 238, Criminal Procedure Code, the Appellate Court cannot convict a person of an offence with which he was not charged in the first Court, and reliance is placed on the decisions in Padmanabha Payi Panniah v. Emperor (1), Criminal Revision Case No. 83 of 1919, Mongalu Aorodhone Hathi, In re (2) and Golla Hanumappa v. Emperor (3). In Mangalu Aorodhone Hathi v. Emperor (2) it was held by a Bench of this Court, following Dasarath Mandal v. Emperor (4), that when persons were convicted of rioting and acquitted on appeal but were convicted by the Appellate Court of house trespass and hurt (sections 448, 323, Indian Penal Code), the convictions were illegal on the ground that the accused could not be convicted of offences with which they were never charged. It is no doubt true that although hurt is generally caused in rioting, it does not necessarily follow that hurt is so caused. In this case, however, the charge, although it was carelessly drawn up, distinctly sets out that 1st accused aimed a blow with his axe at P. W. No. 2. The true principle appears to be that laid down in Yakub Ali v. Lethu Thakur (5), namely, that if the accused have been prejudiced by the omission to prove the altered charge and if the defence might have been of a different character had the altered charge been framed in the first Court, the Appellate Court should not use the power vested in it by section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, to give such an altered finding. This was the view taken by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Mannar Krishnan Chetty, In re (6) and I respectfully adopt it. It is suggested that the petitioner was prejudiced in his defence, as he had no opportunity of pleading that he was justified in resisting the illegal arrest and that in attempting to cause hurt he acted in the exercise of the right of private defence. It was open, however, to the petitioner to put forward this plea in the lower Court. He denied having used violence and in fact the defence was that accused Nos. 1 to 5 were arrested not on the Halvy path but while they were passing the Police station at Kowtalam. The lower Court found that the petitioner commenced the assault and aimed a blow at P. W. No. 2, which struck the lathi he was carrying.

The conviction of the petitioner under sections 326, 511, Indian Penal Code, is not, I think, bad in law, but the sentence, one year's rigorous imprisonment, is, in my opinion, much too severe. The Police appear to have acted in a high-handed and illegal manner. I confirm the conviction but reduce the sentence to one of three months' rigorous imprisonment. The petitioner must surrender to his bail and serve the unexpired portion of the sentence. I see no reason to interfere with the order directing the petitioner to give security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—Two Rules have been issued, one No. 529 and the other No. 560, and they were in connection with certain proceedings which were taken against one Ganpat Rai Khemka, who was alleged to have committed a breach of the provisions contained in section 83 of the Calcutta Port Act of 1890, and to have committed an offence under section 84. The proceedings were taken before Mr. Das Gupta, who on the 8th of May of this year was acting, as we are informed, on behalf of the Chief Presidency Magistrate; and the most important point which has been raised in respect of Rule No. 529 is whether the Presidency Magistrate had jurisdiction over the matter. The alleged offence admittedly took place outside the limits of Calcutta, but admittedly within the limits of the port of Calcutta: and, the argument of the learned Vakil, who obtained the Rule in No. 529, shortly stated, is that although the Presidency Magistrate may have jurisdiction outside the limits of Calcutta but within the limits of the port of Calcutta for certain offences, he has no jurisdiction outside the limits of Calcutta and within the limits of the port, in respect of offences against the Calcutta Port Act, and he further contended that the intention of the 1890 Port Act was that the trial of offences under that Act should take place before the tribunals especially appointed by that Act. This question depends upon the provisions contained in sections 138 and 139 of the Calcutta Port Act and in my judgment also upon section 20 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1898. Section 138 of the Calcutta Port Act provides: "Every charge of an offence against any provision of this Act.....alleged to have been committed within Calcutta, may be instituted before any Magistrate having jurisdiction ....."That section makes it clear that an offence committed against any provisions of this Act within the limits of Calcutta might be tried before the Presidency Magistrate. That is not disputed. Then comes section 139 which provides: "Every charge of an offence against the provisions of this Act...alleged to have been committed out of Calcutta, may be heard and determined by any officer authorized to exercise any of the powers of a Magistrate in the place in which such offence may be alleged to have been committed, according to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882." The learned Vakil argued that the last words "according to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882," regulate the mode of trial. As at present advised, I am inclined to agree with the interpretation which the learned Vakil puts upon those words, although that is not necessary for the decision of this case. The learned Vakil has drawn our attention to the difference in language of the two sections in describing the tribunal; in section 138 the words are "any Magistrate having jurisdiction," and in section 139 the words are "any officer authorised to exercise any of the powers of a Magistrate in the place in which such offence may be alleged to have been committed:" and, he has drawn our attention to certain previous Acts which, he contends, show the origin of those words, inasmuch as he pointed out that there were certain persons who were authorized to exercise some of the powers of a Magistrate, although they might not be authorized to exercise all the powers of a Magistrate. But to my mind, the difference in the words used in section 138 and those used in section 139 does not conclude the point, because the words in section 139, "any officer authorized to exercise any of the powers of a Magistrate in the place" do not specify the tribunal without reference to some other Act, and we have to see what officer is authorized to exercise any of the powers of the Magistrate in the place in which the offence in this case is alleged to have been committed As I have said, admittedly the alleged offence was committed within the limits of the port of Calcutta. When we look at section 20 of the Criminal Procedure Code, we find as follows: "Every Presidency Magistrate shall exercise jurisdiction in all places within the Presidency town for which he is appointed, and within the limits of the port of such town..... as such limits are defined under the law for the time being in force for the regulation of ports and port-dues." Therefore, it seems to me that the Presidency Magistrate is an officer authorized to exercise the powers of a Magistrate within the limits of the port of Calcutta and inasmuch as the offence is alleged to have been committed within such limits, he has jurisdiction to hear the complaint which was lodged against the petitioner.

The other Rule No. 560 dealt with the acquittal of Ganpat Rai Khemka. I need not go into all the facts which led up to the acquittal of Ganpat Rai Khemka. It appears, however, that on the 8th of May 1919 the complainant and his Attorney were present in Mr. Das Gupta's Court, which Court had dealt with the case on certain previous occasions when adjournments were granted: and, without their knowledge the case was called on before the Chief Presidency Magistrate himself, and as the complainant and his Attorney were not present, the Chief Presidency Magistrate acquitted Ganpat Rai Khemka. I think that inasmuch as it was clearly owing to a misunderstanding (for which the complainant and his Attorney were not responsible) that they were not present before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, the order of acquittal ought to be set aside. The result will be that, both parties having agreed that there should not be two trials, the hearing of the first complaint will proceed, and the other complaint, which was lodged afterwards, will be set aside.

Therefore, Rule No. 560 is made absolute; and Rule No. 529 is made absolute to the extent that the second prosecution is quashed.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice.

I only wish to add something in reply to the argument that if the Presidency Magistrate had jurisdiction under the Criminal Procedure Code to try this offence, it would not have been necessary to make the provisions contained in the first part of section 138 and the whole of section 139 of the Calcutta Port Act, III of 1890. It appears to me that these provisions were made through excess of caution, and were based upon the provisions of section 29 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section provides that trials of offences under laws other than the Indian Penal Code, such as the Port Act, shall, when any Court is mentioned, in this behalf in such law, be tried by such Court. I think the drafters of the Act had that section in their minds, and thought it desirable to provide in the Act for the tribunal in which offences under it should be tried, and consequently introduced into section 139 words similar to those in section 20, with the intention of leaving no doubt that offences under the Act should be tried when committed out of Calcutta but in the port of Calcutta by a Presidency Magistrate who has been authorised to exercise jurisdiction by section 20 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Rule No. 529 made absolute in part;
Rule No. 560 made absolute.

Where a complaint charging the accused with assault and theft was dismissed by a Magistrate on receipt of the panchayat report without hearing the complainant and referring only to the charge on assault:

Held, that further enquiry must be made into the allegations made in the complaint.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ranaghat.

Babu Khitish Chandra Chakravarty, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule to show cause why further enquiry should not be made into the complaint filed by the petitioner.

It appears that the petitioner had charged certain persons not only with assaulting some of his boatmen but also with theft of two chalis of bamboos. We are informed that the value of these bamboos is Rs. 1,000. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate after hearing the complainant sent the case to the local panchayat for investigation and report. The panchayat submitted a report which is among the papers before us. Apparently, on receipt of this report, the Sub Divisional Magistrate dismissed the complaint without giving the complainant an opportunity of being heard. In dismissing the complaint the Sub Divisional Magistrate refers only to the charge of assault and says nothing about the alleged theft of bamboos.

In the circumstances we are of opinion that further enquiry should be made into this complaint and we direct accordingly.

Rule made absolute.

Accused was sent up for trial under sections 218, 409 and 466 of the Penal Code on eight counts and was convicted on four counts under sections 409 and 466:

Held, (1) that having regard to the provisions of section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the accused could only be tried on three counts in one trial:

(2) that the procedure adopted in this case being in contravention of the provisions of section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the trial was illegal and must be set aside.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 9th of August 1919.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Avadh Behari Lal was sent up for trial under sections 218, 409 and 466 of the Indian Penal Code on eight counts and was convicted on four counts under sections 409 and 466. It seems to me that this is in contravention of the plain wording of section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code. According to the ruling of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (1) the trial is illegal. I, therefore, set it aside and direct that the accused be re-tried according to law, that is to say, on three counts only. Having set aside his conviction, I direct that he be released on his giving bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Jalpaiguri, dated the 23rd of June 1917, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Jalpaiguri, dated the 29th of November 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Nagendranath Ghose (with him Babu Bankim Chandra Ghose), for the Appellants.—Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit, under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for correction of the Record of Rights. The jama of the tenant, Rup Kanta, was entered in the Record of Rights as being under defendants' tenure. The lower Court has taken a wrong view of section 106. The plaintiff's tenure—Rs. 201 jama—was purchased on 20th August 1883 by one K. In that year the then proprietors of the defendants' tenure—Rs. 188 jama—sued the tenants of this jama for rent. In that suit K intervened under Act X of 1859. Rent was decreed in favour of my predecessors-in-interest. That becomes conclusive unless a suit is brought within one year from decree. K. sold his tenure to H. and E. in 1901. Present plaintiff purchased the tenure from them in 1909. My purchase of the tenure was in 1911. In 1912 plaintiff instituted a suit for ejectment of Rup Kanta. Rup Kanta alleged that he was my tenant. In 1914 the suit was compromised and Rup Kanta attorned to the plaintiff. The record of rights then took place in the same year and I was recorded as proprietor of the land in dispute. My submission is that a tenant may pay rent to a third person but that does not amount to the dispossession of the landlord. Refers to Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (1), Srinivasa Ayyar v. Muthusami Pillai (2). My title is to be traced from the time of the rent decree under Act X of 1859. I could produce other documents to show that I have all along been in possession. The present suit is really a suit for recovery of possession in the guise of a suit for rent. Mere denial of the landlord's title does not terminate the tenancy. Possession cannot be recovered in suit under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act. Refers to Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (3). The tenancy cannot be terminated unless a notice is served. The learned Judge has fallen into an error by refusing to go into the question of title. Suits under section 106 are of the nature of declaratory suits. I cannot establish my case unless I prove that I am the landlord.

Moulvi Wahed Hossain (with him Babu Nalin Chandra Kaul), for the Respondents.—The case is wholly concluded by findings of fact. Rup Kanta, the best man who could give all information, was not called by them. The other side had got sufficient notice of disclaimer from Rup Kanta. The real question is whether the land in dispute appertains to the jama of the plaintiff or of the defendants. That question has been finally decided by the Civil Courts, and in second appeal the findings of fact cannot be disturbed.

Babu Nagendranath Ghose, in reply.—As regards the question of limitation I would refer your Lordship to S. C. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in which the plaintiff respondent prayed for correction of the Record of Rights. Both Courts have decided in the plaintiff's favour. In the suit three corrections were sought to be made, but I am now only concerned with the third and that is whether a certain plot of land of which one Rup Kanta Das is in actual occupation appertains to the tenure of Rs. 201 odd belonging to the plaintiff, or to the tenure of Rs. 128 odd belonging to the defendants-appellants.

The first Court decreed the suit, and on appeal to the lower Appellate Court it was contended amongst other points that the decision of the lower Court was based on inadmissible evidence; the learned Judge, however, in his judgment has not dealt with these points. He has held that as in a title suit brought by the plaintiff against Rup Kanta in 1912, Rup Kanta compromised and admitted the plaintiff's title, the plaintiff must be held to have been in possession since then through Rup Kanta and that as there was no evidence of subsequent attornment to the defendants, the plaintiff must be held to have been in possession ever since. In my opinion these findings are not sufficient for the decision of the appeal. If, as the defendants-appellants alleged, Rup Kanta was holding the land as their tenant, when the plaintiff brought the suit to eject Rup Kanta, the subsequent attornment by Rup Kanta to the plaintiff would not have the effect of ousting the defendants from possession; as was held by Markby, J., in the case of Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (1): "one who holds possession on behalf of another does not by a mere denial of that other's title make his possession adverse so as to give himself the benefit of the Statute of Limitation. By adverse possession I understand to be meant possession by a person holding the land on his own behalf other than that of the person who is the real owner who was in possession."

(6) 9 Ind. Cas. 119.
(7) 9 B. 419; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 277.
(8) 31 C. 397.

I may also refer to a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Srinivasa Ayyar v Muthusami Pillai (2), where it was held that "A tenant repudiating the title under which he entered becomes liable to immediate eviction at the option of the landlord, but until the landlord indicates that he intends to exercise his option, the tenancy subsists."

It is not suggested in the present case that the defendants ever took any steps to put an end to the tenancy of Rup Kanta under them, assuming that such a tenancy existed. So long as such a tenancy had not terminated, Rup Kanta's possession of the land would be the possession of the defendants and his attornment to the plaintiff would not transfer possession from the defendants to the plaintiff.

It is contended that the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that Rup Kanta was a tenant of the plaintiff; but this does not appear to be so. The most that can be found in the judgment in support of this contention is the statement that "there is no evidence at all of defendants' possession beyond their allegation that Rup Kanta was their Chokanidar." Their allegation that Rup Kanta was such a Chokanidar is evidence which should have been considered by the lower Appellate Court and an express finding should have been come to whether that evidence was credible or not. It must be remembered that the defendants were successful before the Settlement Officer in getting their names entered in the Record of Rights; so, primarily there is a presumption in the defendants' favour and the burden of proof rests on the plaintiff.

Next it is contended on behalf of the appellants that the remark in the judgment which I have just quoted has reference to the defendants' possession after the attornment of Rup Kanta, and as the learned Judge seems to think that, that was the only point on which the case turned. That may be so. The case must, therefore, be remanded for a re hearing by the lower Appellate Court for a determination of the point whether at the time of the compromise between the plaintiff and Rup Kanta and Rup Kanta's attornments to the plaintiff, Rup Kanta was holding the land under the defendants on a tenancy which was still subsisting. If the finding on this question be in the affirmative, the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed. If otherwise, the plaintiff will be entitled to the decree which she has obtained. The point will be decided on the evidence on the record.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remit this case to that Court for a re-hearing according to the remarks I have made above in my judgment.

Costs of this appeal abide the result.

Decree set aside;
Case remitted.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.
ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT NO 339 OF 1918.
July 7, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Pratt.
MURADALLY SHAMJI - PLAINTIFF
versus
B. N. LANG—DEFENDANT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 38 (b)—Discharge of insolvent, suspension of, effect of—Final order, whether necessary—Practice of Bombay High Court—Practice contrary to law, whether can be upheld—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Injunction, suit for, against public officer—Notice, failure to give, effect of.

A was adjudicated an insolvent and an order was made vesting his estate in the Official Assignee. Thereafter he applied for his discharge and an order was made accordingly, but under section 38 (b) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the operation of the order was suspended for one year. Three years after the date of this order A acquired a business and the Official Assignee, in view of the fact that no final order of discharge had been made, took possession of A's stock in trade and then restored possession and allowed him to continue his business on condition of his making payments for the benefit of his scheduled creditors. The Official Assignee then threatened to take possession and A filed the present suit to recover the sums which he had paid, for damages for trespass and for an injunction for the threatened trespass. Upon a preliminary objection being taken that as A had not given notice as required by section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, the suit was not maintainable, he dropped his claim for damages and for the money paid:

Held, (1) that the suit in respect of the injunction for the threatened trespass was maintainable, even although the required notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code had not been given; [p. 628, col. 2; p. 629, col. 1.]

(2) that the order of discharge operated from the date mentioned therein, and that A was entitled to the injunction for which he prayed, [p. 629, col. 2; p. 630, col. 1.]

The practice of the Bombay High Court requiring an insolvent whose discharge has been suspended to appear and obtain the final and absolute discharge after the expiry of the period of suspension is contrary to law. [p. 630, col. 1.]

Practice is a useful guide where a Statute uses a language of doubtful import, but a practice which is in contravention of the law, even if such practice be the practice of a High Court, cannot make lawful that which is unlawful. [p. 630, col. 1.]

Mr. Ghaswalla (with him Mr. Kanga), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Desai (with him Mr. R. D. N. Wadia), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th of September 1911 the plaintiff in this suit was adjudicated insolvent and an order was made vesting his estate in the Official Assignee. The plaintiff thereafter applied for his discharge and on the 2nd of October 1912 an order was made in the following terms:—'It is ordered that the insolvent's discharge be with protection suspended for one year and that he be discharged as from the 2nd day of October 1913." In 1916 and 1917 the plaintiff acquired a saddlery business. On the 22nd day of January 1918 the Official Assignee, considering that no final order of discharge had been made, took possession of the plaintiff's stock in trade and then restored possession and allowed the plaintiff to continue his business on condition of his making payments for the benefit of his scheduled creditors. On the 7th of March 1918 the Official Assignee threatened to re-take possession, and on the 8th of March the plaintiff filed this suit to recover the sums which he had paid to the Official Assignee, as he says, under coercion, for damages for the alleged trespass and for an injunction to restrain the threatened trespass.

A preliminary objection has been taken that the suit is not maintainable as the plaintiff has not given notice as required by section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There is no question but that the Official Assignee is a "public officer" entitled to such a notice: Joosub Haji v. N. W. Kemp (1). It is sought, however, to take this out of the operation of the section as one of the reliefs claimed is for an injunction to restrain a future act of trespass.

(1) 26 B. 809; 4 Bom. L. R. 929.

MURADALLY SHAMJI v. B. N. LANG.

Section 80 is as follows:—

"No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing, etc."

It is said that the words "act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" refer to past and not to future acts. If the matter were res integra, I should have found no difficulty in deciding that they do refer to future acts. If the words were limited to past acts, it would have been easy to express that limitation by such words as "purporting to have been done", as for instance in section 167 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, 1901. I think it quite clear that the clause "purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" is merely an adjectival clause qualifying the substantive word "act." The section refers to official acts without any reference to the time when the act was or is or is expected to be performed. The act may be past, present or future; but the only qualification imposed by the section is that it is one committed or likely to be committed in the execution or intended execution of some public duty.

In Flower v. Local Board of Low Leyton (2) a similar provision in the Public Health Act (38 & 39 Vic., c. 55) was held to be inapplicable to suits for an injunction. The judgment proceeded on the ground that a Court of Chancery would not have held that its jurisdiction to grant equitable relief was limited by the section; for otherwise irreparable injury might be done before the Court could intervene. The fallacy of this argument has been exposed in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, Ltd. (3). The Court of Chancery in its concurrent jurisdiction enforced legal rights by equitable remedies. But by inadvertence equitable doctrines were sometimes applied to the right instead of to the remedy. This process was stopped by the House of Lords in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, Limited (3). The Chancery Court had granted an injunction to restrain a building which would deprive plaintiff of some of the light he had been enjoying, but yet would not interfere with his common law right to such light as was necessary to make his house habitable. The Court of Chancery had thus inadvertently enlarged the plaintiff's common law right. The House of Lords overruled a multitude of decisions of Chancery Judges and held that the equitable remedy must be limited to the legal right. Lord Macnaghten said:—

"Courts of Equity had no original jurisdiction in the matter. Their province was simply to grant an injunction in aid of the legal right where there was danger of irreparable mischief, or where an injunction was required to prevent multiplicity of actions."

Now, in Flower v. Local Board of Low Leyton (2) an injunction was granted where plaintiff had under the Statute no right of action and thus the equitable jurisdiction of the remedy was inadvertently used to enlarge the legal right on which the remedy was claimed. This is the very abuse condemned in the judgment of the House of Lords.

Flower v. Local Board of Low Leyton (2) is, therefore, no longer good law; and it is perhaps unnecessary to add that the Courts in India cannot invoke the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to override the law as enacted in the Acts of the Indian Legislature.

However, Flower's case (2) was followed by this Court in Secretary of State v. Gajanan Krishna Mavlankar (4) and Naginlal v. Official Assignee (5). In the former case it was stated that if the future act was so imminent that it was practically impossible for the plaintiff to give notice and serious injury was threatened, the Court would not be debarred from entertaining the suit. This was an obiter dictum, as the suit was held to be barred. But it was followed in the second case, where the suit was filed to restrain a threatened sale by Official Assignee and was held maintainable in spite of the fact that no notice had been given. Though I respectfully differ from this case, I am bound by it.

In this suit there are two distinct causes of action ; a tort already committed and a threatened trespass on the plaintiff's property. Damages are claimed for the first, and an injunction to restrain the second. The suit under the first cause of action is not maintainable. But the injunction is a substantive relief claimed under the second cause of action. The threat of trespass was made on the 7th of March. Danger was indeed so imminent that the suit was filed on the 8th of March, and the trespass was restrained by an interim injunction granted on the same day. Mr. Ghaswalla drops his claim on the first cause of action and elects to proceed only on the injunction in respect of the second cause of action, and under Nagindal's case (5) I think he is entitled to do so.

The finding on the second issue will be: Plaintiff having dropped the claim for damages and for recovering the money payable under coercion, suit is maintainable in respect of the injunction to restrain the threatened trespass.

After further arguments the Court delivered on the 25th July 1909 the following

FINAL JUDGMENT.—In view of the judgment on the 2nd issue, the only issue that survives is the first as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction.

There is a suggestion in paragraph 2 of the written statement that the property which the Official Assignee claims is not the property of the insolvent acquired after his discharge. If this were so, it might be contended that this property was vested in the Official Assignee and that the effect of the order of discharge was not to re-vest this property in the insolvent: Thomas Pereira, In the matter of (6). The point was raised at the time the order was made suspending the insolvent's discharge but it was not clear whether the question was then decided. However, Mr. Wadia does not make this defence and rests his case solely on the ground that the order of 2nd October 1912 did not operate as a discharge from 2nd October 1913, and that, therefore, the property, even though acquired by the insolvent after that date, is divisible among the insolvent's creditors under section 52 (2) (a).

But I think the words of the order of discharge are too clear to admit of this construction. The order runs in the form prescribed by the rules of this Court and it is as follows :—

"It is ordered that the insolvent's discharge be with protection suspended for one year and that he be discharged as from the 2nd day of October 1913."

The order, therefore, expressly grants his discharge from the 2nd of October 1913. Again the words of section 38 (b), under which the order was made, imply that the discharge is granted though its operation is suspended. The word 'operation' would have no meaning unless there were an order which did operate as a discharge. It is not the making of the order that is suspended but the operation of the order made. The Act makes no further proceedings necessary after an order of suspension under section 38 has been passed.

If authority is needed, the case of Dove, In re, Bousfield v. Dove (7) is very much in point. That was under the English Bankruptcy Act, 1847. Under that Act the order of discharge was made by grant of certificate of conformity, which was not effective until confirmed. An order was made suspending the grant of certificate of conformity in the following terms :—

"The said Commissioner did adjudge. . . , that the grant of...certificate of conformity be suspended for the period of three years from the 30th day of June now last and ordered it to be adjourned to the 30th day of June which would be in the year 1851."

After this order, the new Act of 1849 abolished the necessity for the confirmation of the certificate. It was then held that the order operated as a discharge from the 30th June 1851 and that the order was a final order, although in terms it adjourned the proceedings till that date. The Court said that the order of suspension of certificate was a grant of the certificate subject to such suspension. That is exactly the case here.

It is true that the practice of the Court is to require the insolvent whose discharge has been suspended to appear and obtain the final and absolute discharge after the expiry of the period of suspension. Practice is a useful guide where a Statute uses a language of doubtful import, but a practice which is in contravention of the law, even if such practice be the practice of a High Court, cannot make lawful that which is unlawful: Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tiwari (8).

The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to the injunction he seeks and in the circumstances I direct that he do recover half his costs from the defendant.

I find on the first issue in the affirmative.

Decree for the plaintiff in terms of prayers (a) and (b) of the plaint and that plaintiff do recover half his costs from the defendant.

Suit decreed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER, CENTRAL PROVINCES.

July 29, 1919.

Present :—Lord Buckmaster, Lord Atkinson, Lord Phillimore, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

RAO KISHORE SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat GAHENABAI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Custom—Inheritance—Cessat ratio cessat lex, applicability of—Impartible estates, origin of—Acceptance of sanad inconsistent with family custom, whether destroys custom.

A special family custom of inheritance inconsistent with the ordinary Hindu Law may, if observed and acted upon, survive the primitive condition of things out of which it originally sprang. [p. 635 col. 1.]

In such a case the principle embodied in the expression cessat ratio cessat lex does not apply. [p. 637, col. 1.]

One of the ways in which impartible estates may originate is by independent chiefs or feudatories being reduced in course of time to the position of ordinary zemindars, but such estates may also owe their origin to family arrangements followed up in practice for generations, whereby it was originally agreed that the family property should be impartible and be held and managed for the benefit of the whole family by a single member at a time in a certain order of succession, the other members being entitled to maintenance only. A family may expressly or impliedly agree to continue to observe such a custom, even though the conditions which at one time made it necessary have completely altered. [p. 636, col. 2.]

The mere acceptance by the head of a family governed by such a custom of a sanad from the Crown containing clauses inconsistent with the custom cannot destroy the custom or affect the order of succession which it prescribes. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of the Central Provinces, dated June 29, 1912, reversing a decree of the District Court, Nimar.

FACTS of the case are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment. The appellant sued for possession of the Estate of Rao Himmat Singh deceased, alleging a special family custom excluding females, by which he was entitled to succeed. The defendants were the mother and step-mother of Himmat Singh, who were entitled to succeed him by ordinary Hindu Law and had obtained possession. They denied the custom alleged, and pleaded that even if it existed, there had been a partition between their branch of the family and the junior branch to which plaintiff belonged. The trial Judge found the custom proved, and alleged partition not proved: he decreed the suit. On appeal his decision was reversed by the learned Judicial Commissioners (Batten and Stanyon), who found that whatever had once been the state of things, the family property had, since a settlement effected in 1864, when Sanads were issued by Government to the ancestors of the parties, become subject to the ordinary Hindu Law They summed up their conclusions as follows:—

"We have no doubt that Rao Daolat Singh and Shere Singh accepted each a separate estate from Government, which was liable, as the Commissioner pointed out to lapse to Government without reference to the other: and whatever may have been the rights of the two branches of the family inter se in respect of their property under previous custom, we are clear that the property granted by the Sanads was in each case property subject to the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance as the severalty of the grantee or as the estate of the grantee and his joint brethren."

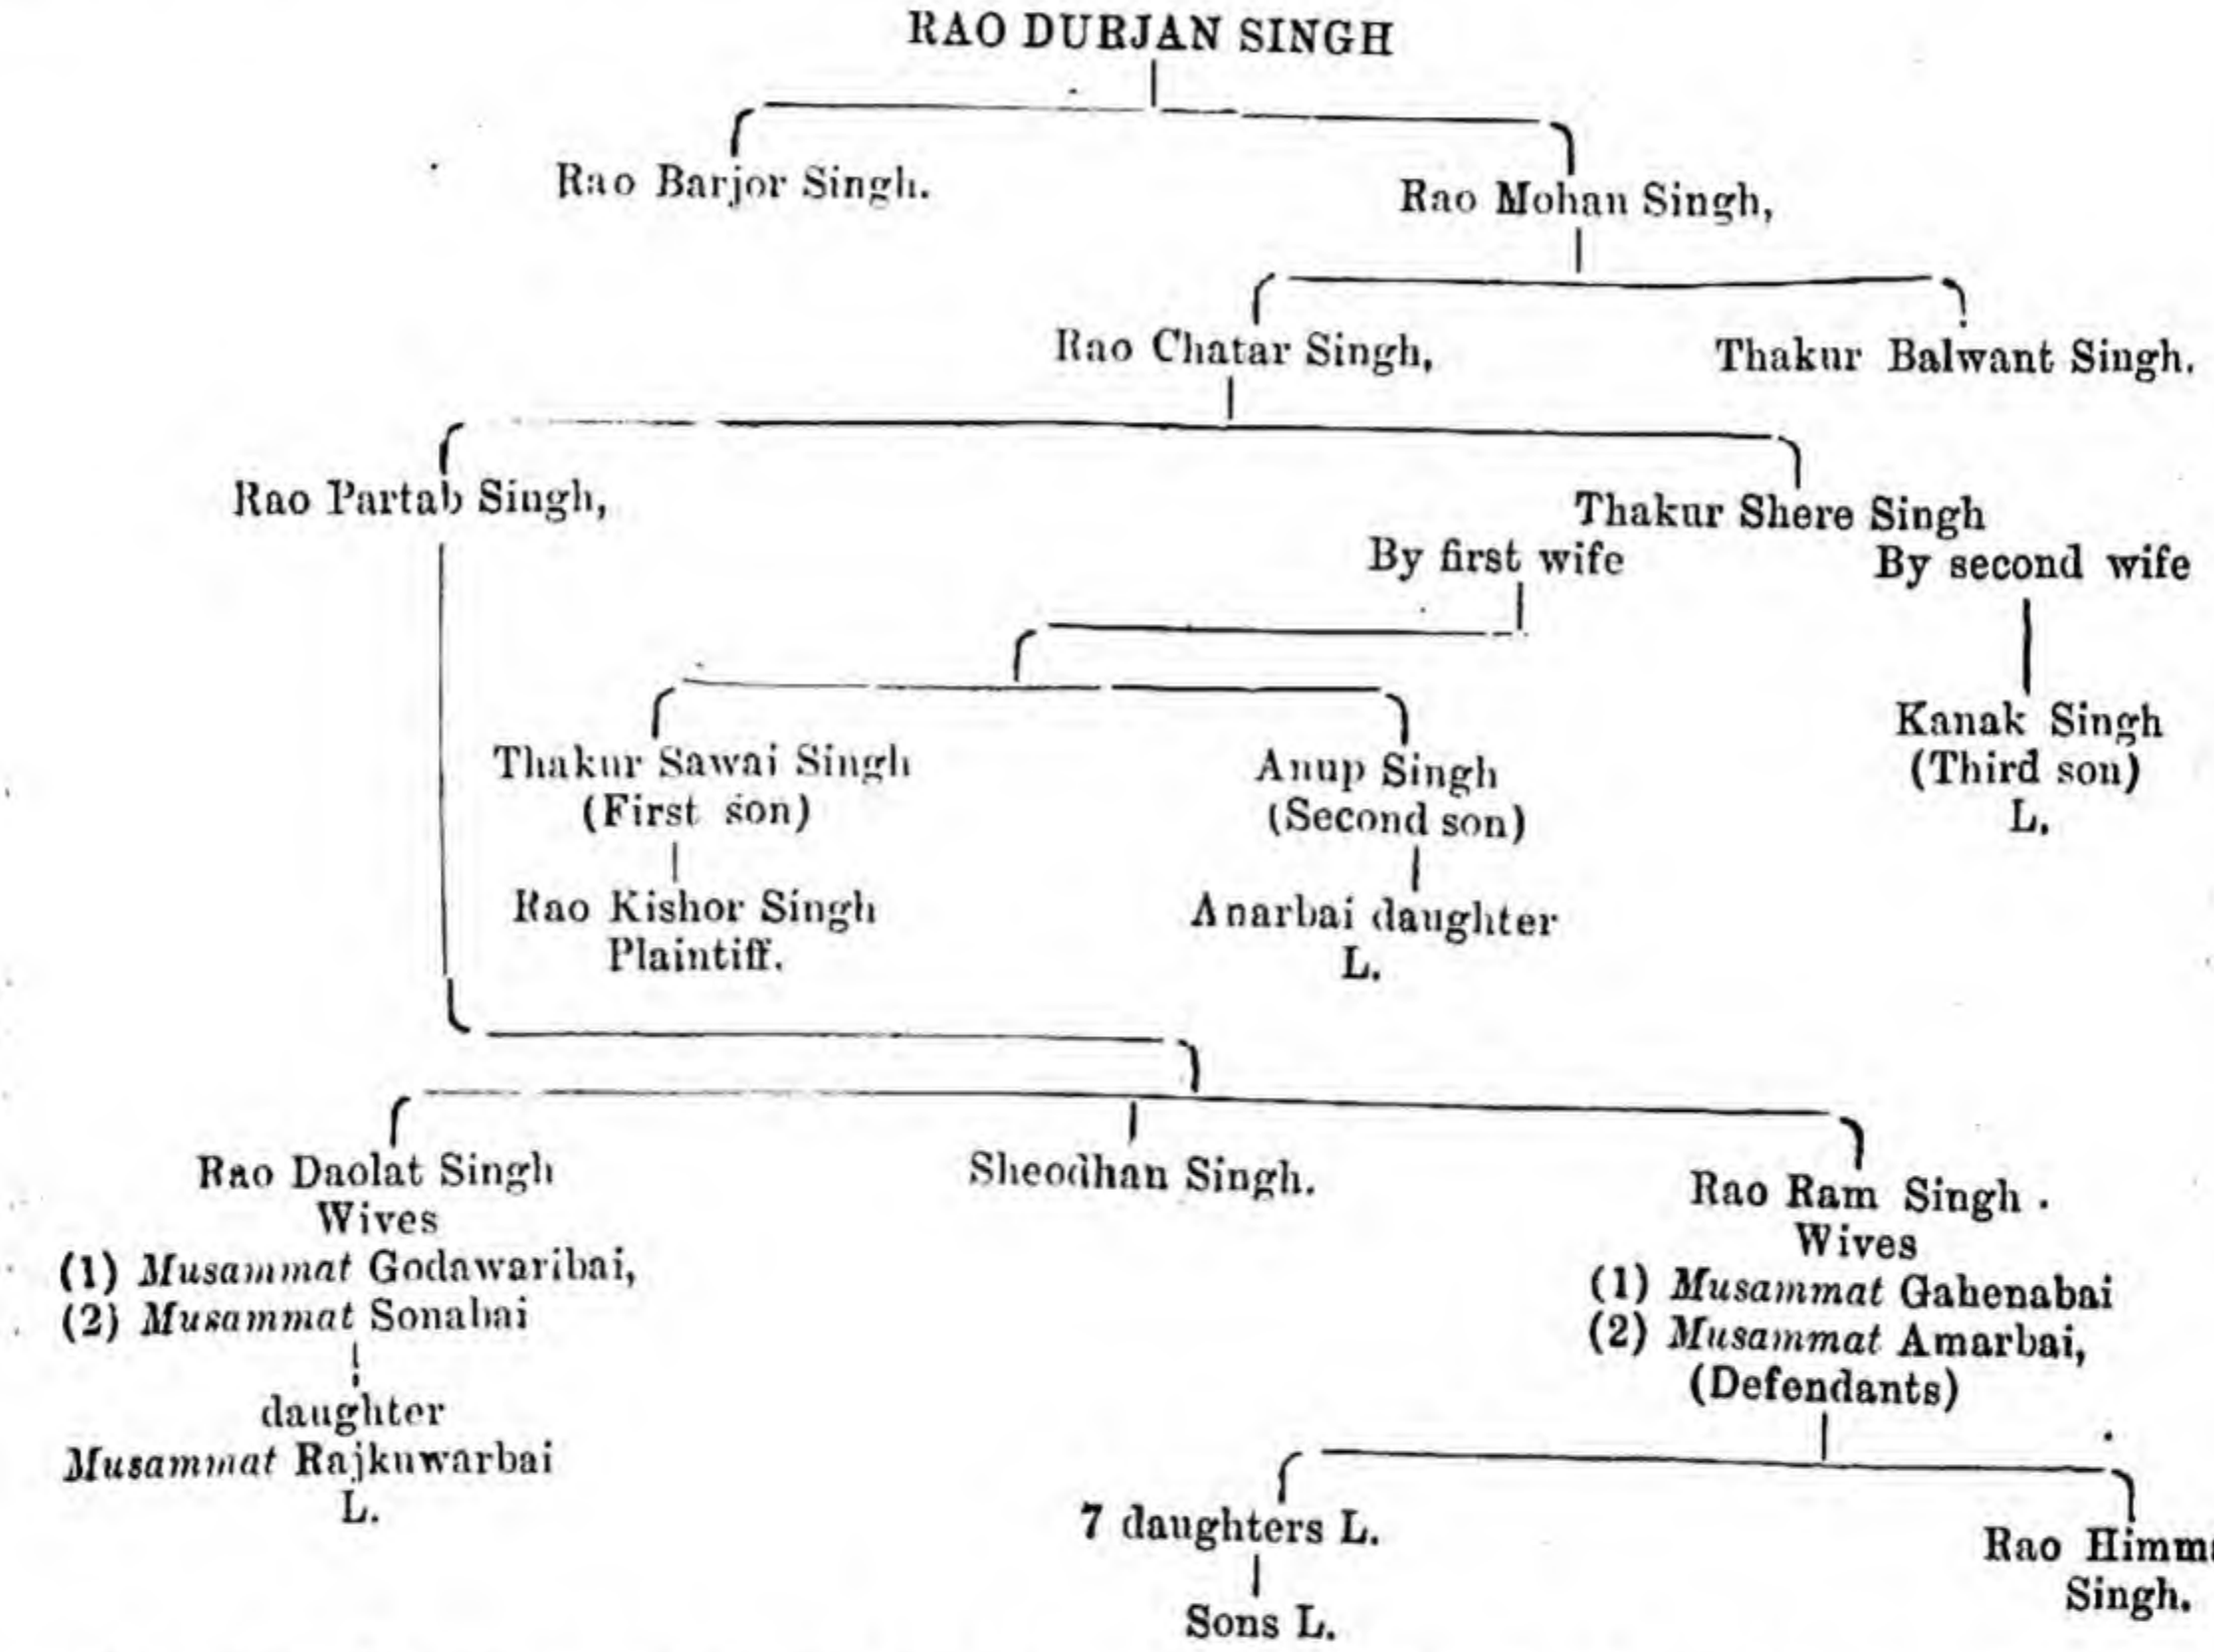
They accordingly dismissed the suit.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. H. Johnston, for the Appellant, submitted that the trial Court had rightly found that the special family custom alleged was proved and subsisting. The Appellate Court had erred in treating the Sanads as a fresh root of title: these Sanads did not in fact confer any property at all. These Sanads only referred to a small part of the property, but they were relied on as showing that part of the property was treated as not being impartible, and the argument was that it had all ceased to be impartible. It was clear that the estate was impartible up to the time of Captain Mackenzie's report. That report showed that Captain Mackenzie never considered the precise point now raised. By taking a hereditary appanage in lieu of maintenance Shere Singh, the plaintiff's ancestor, did not destroy the impartibility of the Raj: the Appellate Court had misconstrued the agreement of 1811. Captain Mackenzie in his settlement proceedings had no intention of altering the order of succession, and whatever was intended either by him or by the higher revenue authorities, no fresh grant could alter the established custom of the family, which held its properties quite independent of and long before Captain Mackenzie's settlement.

The respondents did not appear.



JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.--This is an appeal from the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces on appeal from the District Court of Nimar, reversing a judgment of the latter Court in an action in which the present appellant was plaintiff and the present respondents were defendants. The fact that the respondents have not appeared on the hearing of the appeal before this Board, requires that the evidence, and the points raised in the case, should be examined by their Lordships in more detail than would have been necessary, had Counsel for both the appellant and the respondents appeared and presented their respective contentions to them.

The action out of which the appeal has arisen was brought by the appellant, Rao Kishore Singh, to have it declared that he, as sole heir of his second cousin, Rao Himmat Singh, who died on the 16th October 1906, was entitled to a certain estate, particulars of which are set out in detail in the schedules attached to the plaint, of which his said cousin was owner in possession at the date of his death, and also to recover possession of the same. The appellant claims this heirship by virtue of a special family custom upon which he relies, according to which, as he avers, (1) females are wholly excluded from inheritance; (2) on the death of a proprietor the whole estate passes to a single person, subject to the liability to maintain the other members of the proprietor's family; (3) on the death of a proprietor the male relative who is in the eldest line of male descent from him succeeds, and in default, the male relative in the eldest line of male descent, from his father, and next from his grandfather succeeds and so on. No restraint on alienation is imposed in other respects by this custom.

The respondents are the mother and step-mother of Himmat Singh, widows of his late father, Rao Ram Singh, claiming to be entitled as the latter's heirs to the aforesaid estate under the ordinary Hindu Law. They admittedly would be so if the alleged custom did not govern the descent of the estate. The genealogical table of the appellant's family for the last six generations, which is set out in the plaint, is admitted to be correct, and runs thus :—

The letter " L " appears under the names of those persons still alive who are not parties to these proceedings.

It is in the plaint averred, amongst other things and subsequently found by the District Judge, that certain properties of which the appellant was then in actual possession were by a certain instrument in writing, dated the 21st January 1841, obtained by his grandfather, Shere Singh, from Rao Partab Singh, the then head of the family, in lieu of the yearly sum of Rs. 210, formerly received by him for maintenance. This document is Exhibit P. 42. From the extraordinary and, as it appears to their Lordships, misleading use made of it by the Appellate Court, it becomes necessary to examine its terms in detail. It is further averred that, with certain trifling exceptions, named by the District Judge, the whole family estate in the schedule to the plaint described descended from Rao Durjan Singh to Rao Barjor Singh, from him to Rao Mohan Singh, thence to Rao Chatar Singh, and from him to Rao Partab Singh, and thence to Rao Daolat Singh, all of whom are named in the above-mentioned genealogical table.

It is also averred and not disputed that Rao Daolat Singh died on the 23rd August 1850, possessed of the whole of the said family estates, leaving him surviving his two widows Musammat Godawaribai and Musammat Sonabai, and one daughter, Musammat Rajkuwarbai, who is still alive.

It is further averred that Rao Ram Singh, who was a younger brother of Rao Daolat Singh, lived separate from the latter, receiving certain sums of money for his maintenance; that on the death of Rao Daolat Singh, in the events which had happened, the family estates passed by inheritance to Rao Ram Singh, who gave by registered deed to the widows of his brother, Daolat Singh, for their maintenance one village, some lands, a house and a cash allowance; and that after the death of these widows the property so given reverted to Rao Ram Singh, Musammat Rajkuwarbai receiving nothing; and that Rao Ram Singh died on the 30th May 1905, leaving him surviving two widows, the defendants in the case, one son, Himmat Singh, who died childless on the 31st May 1905, and seven daughters. In the written statement of the respondents filed the 13th November 1908, they, in addition to putting the appellant upon strict proof of the family custom relied upon, and denying that any rule of primogeniture existed in the caste and family to which the parties litigant belong, pleaded that even if the Court should find in favour of the existence of some kind of rule of primogeniture binding the family, it would be of no avail to the appellant, inasmuch as before the first Settlement in 1864 there was a partition of the family estates between the senior and junior branches of this family, by reason of which the junior branch enjoyed exclusively the property then in their possession; that Shere Singh, paternal uncle of Rao Daolat Singh, made a representation of this fact to the officer in charge of the Zamindari Settlement during its progress between the years 1858 to 1864, and that on the faith of this representation separate Jageer and pensions were allowed him to the detriment of the interest of Rao Daolat Singh, who, on the faith of the representation, did not claim a larger pension, nor the grant of the Jageer with respect to property assigned to Shere Singh; that Shere Singh, as one among numerous junior members of several Zamindari families, well knew that he would have, in future, no claim to the succession to the senior branch, but that on the extinction of heirs the property would lapse to the Government; and that the appellant was, by reason of the above representation, estopped from claiming any right to succeed to the property in suit, the above-mentioned partition having destroyed the right of the junior branch, if they had any, to succeed to it.

The respondents further plead in reference to the matters set forth in the third paragraph of the plaint that they have no personal knowledge of the grant of Rs. 210 per annum for maintenance, nor of the execution of the ekranama therein mentioned, but alleged that even if the Court were to find in favour of the existence of the agreement, it would be of no avail by reason of the aforesaid partition, and estoppel.

The appellant in a written statement in reply traversed all the material averments contained in the written statement of the defendants; and as to the sum of Rs. 210, said that it was at the Zamindari Settlement commuted by the Government into a hereditary annual pension of Rs. 150, and Mouza Malgaon on Jageer.

The following ten issues were settled by the learned District Judge, C. S. Finlay:—

"ISSUES.

"I. Under what circumstances are the appellations of 'Thakur' and 'Kuwar' applied to members of the Bhamgarh family?

"II. Does Government confer the title of Rao on the person succeeding to the Bhamgarh property and in particular was it conferred on plaintiff by Government on 29th January 1902?

"III. Does a law or custom of primogeniture prevail in the Bhamgarh family, and if so, what are its details and incidents?

"IV. Was there a partition between the senior and junior branches of the Bhamgarh family of the nature indicated in paragraph (2) (c) of defendants' written statement, dated 13th November 1908? If so, what is the effect of such partition on plaintiff's claim? Is plaintiff estopped from claiming a right to succeed to the property in suit?

"V. Did plaintiff's grandfather, Shersingh, receive a yearly grant of Rs. 210 as maintenance allowance under an 'Ikrarnamah' dated Magh Vadi 14 Sambat 1897, executed between Shersingh and Partab Singh? What is the effect of the partition and estoppel, if any, described in the last issue on this 'Ikrarnamah' and the arrangement made thereunder?

"VI. Has the British Government since its advent paid a definite sum to Shersingh in lieu of his Zamindari rights?

"VII. Is any of the property ancestral? Was all of it enjoyed by the several ancestors mentioned in paragraph (3) of the plaint? In particular are properties Nos. (30), (31), (46) and (53) in the possession of the defendants? What is the nature of property No. (53)?

"VIII. Is plaintiff the heir of Rao Himmat Singh?

"IX. Are plaintiff's claims for a declaration and for possession redundant?

"X. To what relief is plaintiff entitled?"

The learned District Judge who tried the case, C. Sestra Rao, in a lengthy and elaborate judgment, delivered on the 19th November 1910, analyzed in minute detail all the evidence given in the case, oral and documentary. He dealt at length with the early occupation of Nimar by Rajput Chiefs as described in the Settlement Reports of Captain Forsyth and the Zemindari Settlement Reports of Captain Mackenzie, Commissioner for the Nerbudda Division, and also with those portions of the latter report relating to the history of the Zemindari property, the subject of this suit, and he found amongst other things:—

(1) That in the Bhamgar family to which the parties litigant belong the brothers of a sonless Gaddawale are styled Kuar, and should the Gaddawale have a son that son is styled Kuar and the child's paternal uncles are styled Thakur.

(2) That in this same family the Gaddawale gets the title of Rao, and that the Indian Government, on the 29th January 1908, conferred that title on the appellant on his succession to Rao Himmat Singh, deceased.

He then summarizes in the following words the historical conclusions which the above-mentioned reports of Captains Forsyth and Mackenzie appeared to him to establish:—

(1) That the Bhibala, the family to which the litigants belong, sprung originally from the intermarriage of one of the invading Rajput chieftains with a member or members of a local clan inhabiting the hills bordering on Nerbudda, and are now true Rajputs.

(2) That the ancestors of the plaintiff came from the north and occupied the Central Nimar about 20 generations ago.

(3) That they subdued the Bhils three or four centuries prior to the Muhammadan conquest of Nimar and were chiefs. (Paragraph 40 of Captain Forsyth's Settlement Report.)

(4) That they brought with them the institutions of their race, one of which is Gaddi. The succession to the Gaddi being by primogeniture and the other members being provided with maintenance.

(5) That in the time of the Muhammadan rule the chiefs were constituted hereditary Zemindars or fiscal officers of their tracts with "hucs," and were allowed to retain the villages actually in their possession.

(6) That in later times of the Muhammadan rule the Rajput Zemindars were deprived of all fiscal functions, though they were allowed to retain the title of Zemindar and the hucs and lands attaching to their offices. (Paragraphs 120 and 121 of the Settlement Report.)

(7) The Zemindars had property in the lands which were considered their private property.

(8) The Rajput Zemindars rendered nominal service to the State till the advent of the British Government and the Zemindari settlement.

These hucs, which took the shape of percentages of revenue collections, were of considerable value.

The learned District Judge, having thus dealt with the historical aspect of the case, proceeds to dispose of the different issues raised on the pleading, especially the third and most important issue, namely: "Does a law or custom of primogeniture prevail in the Bhamgar family, and if so what are its details and incidents?" The burden of proving this issue he rightly held lay on the appellant. The examination of the evidence bearing upon this issue covers 17½ printed pages of the Record, from page 301 to page 318. He ultimately finds that the custom of primogeniture prevails in the family of the parties litigant; that under it women were excluded from inheritance, and that the male relative who is in the eldest line of male descent from the last holder or his father or grandfather succeeds. It will be observed that the learned Judge uses the present, not the past tense, "prevails," and that he does not state that the custom involves any restraint on alienation.

It is in their Lordships' view clear that there was abundant evidence before the learned Judge to justify him as a reasonable man in finding as he has found on this issue, and they do not find in the evidence anything to lead them to think that his conclusion was erroneous. Well, if he be right in this, this custom became the law of the family regulating the succession to the family estate. The ordinary Hindu Law did not apply to it save so far as it was not inconsistent with the custom. It is in their Lordships' view clear that such a custom may, if observed and acted upon, survive the primitive condition of things out of which it originally, from the very necessity of the case, sprung; and it is, they think, perfectly clear that the head of the family for the time being could not, by accepting from the Government of India a Sanad containing clauses inconsistent with the custom, destroy it or render it inoperative.

The learned District Judge then proceeds to deal with issues Nos. 4, 5 and 6. In reviewing the evidence bearing upon issues Nos. 4 and 5, he deals specifically with Exhibit P. 42, the agreement of the 21st January 1841, and the two Sanads dated the 18th December 1865, identical in all respects save as to the property dealt with, given to Rao Daolat Singh and Shere Singh respectively, and he finds that the evidence as a whole shows that there was no partition between Partab Singh and Shere Singh; that there was an agreement in January 1841, by which Shere Singh received Rs. 210 a year, a Jirat, and some trees as his maintenance allowance. On issue No. 6 he finds that the British Government realized the hucs, and that out of the huc due to Daolat Singh Rs. 210 were paid to Shere Singh, and the balance direct to him, and that Exhibit P. 42 lends support to the finding that Shere Singh received Rs. 210 direct from the Government. Ultimately the learned District Judge finds that the appellant is entitled to possession of the properties in suit except items Nos. 30, 31, 46 and 53.

Before dealing with the judgment of the Court of Apreal it would be well to examine this document, P. 42, considering the use which has been made of it by that tribunal. It is found at page 140 of the Record. It takes the form of a letter written by Shere Singh to Partab Singh. It runs thus :—

"I shall get Rs. 210 annually for my food and other expenses. You should, therefore, cause it to be paid to me directly from the Sarkar. (1) Chhote land of the village Rangaon. (2) Old Mango Grove at Bhampar. (3) Mowha Grove of Rampur. (4) The house situate on the road in which I live. I shall be receiving as above and I will serve the Raj and will go wherever ordered. My descendants and I will enjoy it. In case there shall be no descendant from me it will lapse to the Raj. I will not give it to anyone. I will not act against your pleasure."

It would be difficult to select words to indicate more complete loyalty and subservience to the Raj than do these words. It is simply an agreement by the head of the family to devote certain portions of the family property to the maintenance of a junior member, that is, an alienation pro tanto of an impartible estate which every head of such a family not restrained from alienation by a family custom is entitled to make, though the estate be impartible. [Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapur (2)] To treat it as it is treated by the Appellate Court at page 347 of the Record as an example of the semi-hostile assertion by the younger members of a family of a right to a provision out of the family as a permanent settlement, in the shape of a portion of the estate, is quite inaccurate.

The Appellate Court does not seem to have been of opinion that the evidence did not establish that the custom found by the District Judge to be an existing operative custom was not at some time or other before the Settlement of 1865 existing as an operative binding custom. So far they seem to concur with the learned District Court Judge. Where they differ from him apparently is that they hold that the custom, though once existing and operative, has ceased to be so, either because the primitive conditions out of which it sprung had ceased to exist, and, therefore, cessat ratio cessat lex, or because owing to the improvement in education and the spread of socialistic opinions consequent thereon, the custom has been so gradually but steadily and persistently encroached upon that it has, as it were, been eaten away, and has ceased to be observed or applied, or because it has been destroyed by the grant and acceptance of the Sanads above mentioned, since they contain provisions inconsistent with it. Indeed they regard these latter documents as decisive of the case.

The judgment of the Appellate Court contains many very lengthy quotations from the before-mentioned reports of Captains Forsyth and Mackenzie. The Court appears to have accepted as accurate the statements contained in these reports, though they involve, in some cases, as in the case of the agreement of the 21st January 1841 made with Shere Singh, the construction of a written document. At pages 346 and 347 of the Record, speaking of the report of Captain Forsyth, they say that it contains a reliable record of the antecedents of such families as that to which the parties litigant belong, and proceed to give a historical sketch of the conditions out of which the quality of impartibility of the estates of such families arose, as well as the circumstances under which it ceased to attach to them.

The outline of that history, they say, is "that certain families of Rajputs came into Nimar centuries ago, and settled here probably as rulers of petty domains there, then chiefly peopled by aboriginal tribes. . . . In days when the crude state of internal communications made decentralization of sovereign power indispensable, it is easy to understand that the Rajput clans, so established, even where nominally subject or in vassalage to some distant ruler, were practically independent chiefs in their own territories. Therefore, we find them with the royal title of Rao applied to the head of each clan, accompanied by such ensignia as a throne, a treasury and other attributes of sovereignty. Later, when the Muhammadan Dynasty asserted itself, and its own viceroys appeared on the scene, stripping the clans of their independence, the established Rajputs were still a power to be reckoned with, and they were reconciled and their loyalty secured by their appointment of each headman as the fiscal officer in charge of his estate. In this capacity . . . . the headman exercised considerable power. But as his unfitness for purely revenue work became more apparent, he was deprived of his powers by the substitution of a stipendiary establishment. Nevertheless for obvious political reasons his complacency was secured by a maintenance of his status and dignity. His title, his nominal authority over his tract, his property in land and the grant of perquisites, were continued, but it now ceased to be necessary that the clan should be represented by one acknowledged head. It is easy to understand that while each family possessed sovereign or quasi sovereign rights over any tract of country, it was indispensable that succession to the throne should be governed by a rule of primogeniture, and no doubt at that time and under those circumstances the family property as an undivided whole was under the governance of the family head, and remained attached to the Gaddi like any impartible Zemindari at the present day. Again, when the head of the family became the holder of a hereditary fiscal office it was still necessary to apply the rule of primogeniture for succession to the office."

No doubt one of the ways in which impartible estates may originate is by independent chiefs or feudatories, exercising almost autocratic powers, being gradually in the course of time reduced by a paramount power to the position of ordinary Zemindars; but these impartible estates may also owe their origin to family arrangements followed up in practice for many generations, whereby it was originally agreed that the family property should be impartible and be held and managed for the benefit of the whole family by a single member at a time in a certain order of succession, the other members being entitled to maintenance only, without any power of interference with the management.

It is difficult to see why a family should not similarly agree expressly or impliedly to continue to observe a custom necessitated by the condition of things existing in primitive times, after that condition had completely altered. Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the principle embodied in the expression cessat ratio cessat lex does not apply where the custom outlives the condition of things which gave it birth.

The Appellate Court do not appear to have attached sufficient weight to the vast mass of evidence given on behalf of the appellant to the effect that the custom relied upon, whatever its origin, has been acted on and applied down to quite recent times.

This Court proceed next to show how a custom arising out of ancient conditions affecting the succession to the estates of a family such as that to which the litigants belong was superseded, and the succession to and enjoyment of those estates became subject to the ordinary Hindu Law. At pages 340 and 341 of the Record the Court set out the orders of the Indian Government prescribing the mode in which the recommendation of Captain Mackenzie should be carried out. The orders run as follows:—

"That the full value of the Zemindar's land and cash perquisites should be ascertained, and that, after deducting the amount of expenditure which would fall on Government, in lieu of their services, they should receive the balance in rent-free estates, and thereby revert to the position of inamdars.

"That in giving effect to this measure lands whether plots ('zirait') or whole estates ('Jageer') already held rent-free by the Zemindars should remain undisturbed, and new grants of rent-free estates should be made only in commutation for that portion of the cash perquisites which might remain after making the prescribed deductions.

"That the future status of the Zemindars as inamdars should be regulated by the principles of the Madras Inam Rules each case to be considered and decided on its own merits."

The plain object of these orders is to change the tenure by which the owners of estates such as that of the family of the litigants held their estates, and the rights and obligations attaching to that ownership of them. The Appellate Court, at page 341, state:—

"that in carrying out the object so aimed at it was discovered that besides actual heads of families there had sprung up a certain number of junior sharers who for several generations had enjoyed property and allowances independently of the heads of the families to which they respectively belonged. These were carefully distinguished from those cadets, or junior members, who received allowances from or were maintained otherwise by the head of each family. Captain Mackenzie found that the inclusion of these junior sharers raise the number of individuals requiring treatment to 78, whereof no less than 44 were junior share holders"

That statement is based entirely upon Captain Mackenzie's report. It may or may not be an accurate description of the general condition of affairs in this district. Their Lordships have not the means of determining, nor are they called upon to determine that question, but it would appear to be clear that it is not an accurate description as applied to the estate of the litigants' family, for this reason that where the Appellate Court, at page 347, line 20, apparently attempt to give instances of the three junior sharers existing for generations on the estate in suit, they are obliged to select Shere Singh claiming under Exhibit P. 42 the maintenance agreement of 1841, and (Exhibit 51) an agreement made on the 24th January 1865, in contemplation of the intended Government settlement, whereby certain provisions were made by Rao Daolat Singh for the maintenance of his brothers Sheodan Singh and Ram Singh. It is not too much to assume that if other instances of shares having been enjoyed for generations by junior sharers were available, those of cadets, whose titles began in 1841 and 1865 respectively, would not have been selected.

At page 347 the Appellate Court continue to deal with the same point. They say:—

"Again when the head of the family became the holder of a hereditary fiscal office, it was still necessary to apply a rule of primogeniture for succession to the office. But now the once ruler of the family had become merely the representative of the family for the management of such property, and the receipt of such perquisites as attached to the hereditary office. Thereupon the ordinary Hindu Law began to be reinstated and junior members asserted themselves as share-holders Still, while the ruling power recognised only the office-holder, the 'younger sons' were still to some extent under his sway, and their shares at his disposal. But the recurring demand for shares, and the advance of socialism in the family, due to education and the evanescence of all real authority in the head, made permanent partitions of estate necessary. The subsistence which the younger brother once received as a favour from the lord of the manor now became a share claimed by him as a right, ever increasing in quantum towards that equality which is favoured by the ordinary Hindu Law, from which only the particular circumstances had for a time diverted enjoyment of the family property."

It is unnecessary for their Lordships to determine whether this reasoning would be sound as applied to any case. It is sufficient to say the facts which it assumes and upon which it is based do not exist in the present case. The Appellate Court have not been able to refer to a single instance other than those two already mentioned where the junior members asserted themselves as share holders in the manner described.

It only remains to deal with the Sanads. They run as follows: —

"Sir,

"Whereas you formerly held the office of Zemindar as a Pergunna Officer in the District of Nimar, and enjoyed certain allowances by way of Ziraut, Jageer, and cash percentages on public revenues, and whereas the services you rendered in that office will not in future be required by the Government, and whereas it has seemed fit to arrange for your proper maintenance in future in consideration of your previous services and present status: Therefore, the Governor General in Council has been pleased to order that your Ziraut and Jageer, as noted at foot hereof, continue in your possession in free-hold Inam, with the full power of alienation by gift, sale, adoption or otherwise, subject to good behaviour and the annual payment into the Government Treasury by half-yearly instalments of Rupees one hundred and fifteen as quit-rent.

"2. In token whereof this Sunnad is granted to you this Eighteenth day of December 1865.

'(Sd.) W. MUIR,

"Secretary to the Government of India."

Such a document as this is quite inapplicable to Shere Singh's case. He never held the office of Zemindar as a Pergunna or any other officer. He never enjoyed by virtue of such an office any percentages on public revenues. His maintenance is to be arranged in consideration of services he never was empowered to perform and never did perform. The reason why its use was resorted to is not far to seek.

At page 347 of the Record, line 29, the Appellate Court state that: —

"Captain Mackenzie found Shere Singh to be an independent sharer holding a distinct hereditable share independent of Rao Daolat Singh. It is reasonable to presume that Shere Singh himself led the Commissioner to that conclusion as a result of which he got an independent status as Zemindar and was given a separate Sanad in exactly the same terms as Rao Daolat Singh."

If Shere Singh did this he, it appears to their Lordships, grossly misrepresents his true position under the agreement of the 21st January 1841 (and he had no other title), but Captain Mackenzie, in the 38th paragraph of his report, states that: —

"38. '. . . . In very few cases is it known with any degree of certainty when the holdings enjoyed by these Zemindars were first acquired by them or in what they originated. It is, no doubt, probable that they were conferred in the first instance on some condition of service; and so it has been most convenient to assume as a general principle that they are service tenures. . . . So the service theory was maintained. It was the only theory upon which the tenures could be readily understood, written about, and generally dealt with. . . .'"

And accordingly Shere Singh's true position was misdescribed in the Sanad in order to fit the theory. As indeed was Daolat Singh's also to some extent. It occurs to their Lordships, there may have been another reason for inserting clauses expressly relieving those grantees from the further performance of their imaginary services.

The first case to be found deciding that the discontinuing of a service attached to an impartible estate did not alter the nature of that estate and render it partible is Ramrao Trimbak v. Yeshvantrao Madhavrao (3) heard and decided in 1885, twenty years after the Zemindari settlement; and it may possibly have been thought in 1865 that as the law then was supposed to stand, the release from these fictitious services would render the estate partible. But whether that be so or not, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that if this family custom relied upon and found applied to and bound the estate the subject matter of this suit, the head of the family for the time being could not destroy that custom or release his estate from it by becoming grantee from the Crown under such a document as these Sanads. For these reasons they think the Appellate Court dealt with the case on mistaken principles, that their decision was wrong and should be reversed, that the decision of the District Judge was right and should be restored, and this appeal be allowed with costs in the Appellate Court and before this Board, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES Nos 1883 AND 1933 OF 1917.

SHEBAITS OF SRI SRI SRIDHAR JEW THAKUR JOGENDRA NATH MAITY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Pleadings—Adverse possession, title by, not set up in plaint—Plaintiff, whether can succeed on plea of adverse possession.

The question whether a plaintiff can succeed on a title by adverse possession not set up in the plaint depends mainly on the facts of each particular case, and more particularly on whether the defendant has or has not been taken by surprise and whether he has had an opportunity of meeting the case so set up [p. 641, col 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Midnapur, dated the 26th of July 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Tamluk, dated the 21st of June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babus Narendra Chandra Bose and Satyendra Nath Mitter), for the Appellants.—These appeals arise out of two suits for recovery of possession on a declaration of title thereto. The first Court dismissed the suits. The Court of Appeal below decreed them on the ground that the plaintiffs had acquired title by adverse possession. My points are:—The learned Judge was not justified in granting a decree to plaintiffs on that ground, as it was not put forward in the plaint and no issue was joined on it. Secondly, if the plaintiffs can be permitted to succeed on such ground, there could have been no adverse possession for evidently their possession commenced since 1909. Adverse possession of an independent trespasser cannot be tacked to oust the possession of a third person. Refers to Ram Lakhan Rai v. Gajadhar Rai (1), Lakshman v. Moru (2), Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna (3), Secretary of State for India v. Vira Rayan (4), Guroo Churn v. Krishna Moni Gupta (5). Assuming that such possession could be adverse, the possession must be adequate in continuity, publicity and content. Refers to Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (6). Here merely because earth was thrown, that cannot be taken to be adverse possession. Their title must have been perfected before their possession was interrupted. Until the finding on the question of limitation is set aside, the lower Appellate Court cannot decide the question of adverse possession. See also Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (7).

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Sarada Charan Maity), for the Respondent.—The first point raised by the other side was placed before both the Courts and they arrived at different findings thereon. The case in Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (7) is not in point. It merely follows Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Ohunder Sircar (8), which is the leading case on the point. I submit the present case is stronger than Sundari Dassee's case (8) for this reason, that in the present case in my plaint I state that my predecessor was in possession, whereas in the case cited the plaintiff merely claimed lakheraj title in the plaint and claimed to have been in possession in Court when the case was gone into. Defendant never proved his possession to the satisfaction of the Courts. The mortgagor had mortgaged all the rights he had in the properties, so the mortgagee would be entitled to everything that the mortgagor acquired. Hence the mortgagee by his purchase stands in the shoes of the mortgagor.

As regards the second point I do not claim my right independently of the mortgagor. I acquired and have continued the rights of my predecessors. Therefore, there is no question of tacking adverse possession by an independent trespasser, as I claim to have actually acquired my right by adverse possession through my predecessors in-interest. It is not a case of dispossessing a true owner. The question is not one of independent trespassers. Reads Rustomjee's ndian Limitation Act at page 504 on the point of taking of possession. Refers to Lachho v. Har Sahai (9). In neither of the Courts below was it raised that the land in dispute was not mortgaged. There is no room for doubt that we were the purchasers in execution of the mortgage-decree in 909. The case ought to be dismissed, as all the points now raised were discussed and decided by the Courts below. Refers to Lilabati Misrain v Bishun Chobey (10).

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter, in reply.—The case in Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (8) is obviously distinguishable. Refers to Ananda Hari Basak v. Secretary of State (11). There is a clear distinction between a suit for declaration of title and a suit for possession on proof of plaintiff's title. Refers to Joytara Dassee v. Mahomed Mobaruck (12). If by the pleadings I was not called upon to meet the case I have been seriously prejudiced thereby. The plaintiff must produce the best available evidence. It is no use saying that the Court used certain expressions on the question of possession. The Sub-Judge has proceeded on the footing that plaintiff's predecessors were in possession. What was mortgaged was the pattai land. These lands could not have passed by the mortgage. There is nothing in the deed to show that there were other lands than the 15 plots which have been found to have been mortgaged.

The document distinctly says that. The other side apparently now want to set up a new case.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of two suits for recovery of possession of two plots of land on a declaration of the plaintiff's title thereto. The plaintiff's case is that these two pieces of land formed part of Jalpai Chak Purba and Paschim Gumai alias Kalagachee, which was permanently settled with the Raja of Mohisadal. On the 10th Assar 1281 corresponding to 7th June 1874, the Raja of Mahisadal granted a permanent lease of over 1,000 bighas of land to one Mohesh Chandra Kotal. These lands were held by Mohesh and his successors in-interest who are referred to as the Kotals and were mortgaged on the 14th August 1905 to one Pitambar Maiti. Pitambar brought a suit on his mortgage, obtained a decree and purchased the mortgaged properties in execution of the decree and was put in possession by the Court on the 12th August 1909. After Pitambar's death, in 1911, the plaintiffs in these suits succeeded to Pitambar's interest and subsequently made an endowment of these lands in favour of a deity, and the present suits were brought by the plaintiffs as Shebaits to that deity. The defendants claimed the lands as appertaining to the Jalpai Chak Gholl Andaria.

The first Court found that the plaintiffs had failed to establish any titles to the lands in suit and dismissed the suit.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the lands in suit were not specifically leased to the Kotals and has left open the question as to whether they appertain to the Chak claimed by the plaintiffs or to that claimed by the defendants, and has granted the plaintiffs a decree on the finding that they acquired a title by adverse possession.

Against this decree defendant No. 1 has appealed.

The main points urged in this appeal are, first, that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in granting a decree on a case not made in the plaint and on which no issue was framed, and secondly, that, if the plaintiffs could succeed on such a ground, they are not entitled to rely on the addition of the period of adverse possession of the Kotals to the period of adverse possession by Pitambar and the plaintiffs.

As regards the first point it is true that in the plaint no claim is made to a title by adverse possession.

On behalf of the respondents reference has been made to paragraph No. 2 of the plaint. At most, the facts there stated amount to a suggestion that a title by adverse possession might be made out, but certainly that paragraph does not amount to a definite claim to a title on that account, also no issue as to the title by adverse possession was framed in the Court of first instance. It, therefore, appears at first sight that the case falls within the general rule laid down in the case of Joytara Dassee v. Mahomed Mobaruck (12).

But on behalf of the respondents it has been pointed out that exceptions have been made to this rule and reliance is placed on the decision in the case of Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (8). The question, therefore, is whether the facts of this case bring it within the exception laid down in that decision. The latest case to which my attention has been drawn is the case of Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (7) and I may quote the remarks of my learned brother, Mr. Justice Mookerjee, from page 785,* in that decision: "The question next arises, whether the plaintiff has established a title to the disputed land by proof of adverse possession for the statutory period. Here we cannot overlook the fact that title by adverse possession was not explicitly pleaded in the plaint. As ruled by this Court in Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (8), the plaintiff may be allowed to succeed on a title by adverse possession pleaded for the first time in the Court of Appeal, provided such a case arises on the facts stated in the plaint and the defendant is not taken by surprise." Also in the case of Ananda Hari Basak v. Secretary of State (11) the same learned Judge makes the following remarks: "The Subordinate Judge, however, not very consistently went to the question in his judgment and found that the plaintiff had acquired a good title by adverse possession. The appellants take exception to this course and contend that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to succeed upon a case which was not made in the plaint. We think this argument is well founded and the case falls within the rule laid down in Joytara Dassee v. Mahomed Mobaruck (12) rather than within the rule in Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (8)."

I quote these remarks, as they show that the question whether a plaintiff can succeed on a title by adverse possession not set up in the plaint depends mainly on the facts of each particular case and more particularly on whether the defendant has or has not been taken by surprise, and whether he has had an opportunity of meeting the case so set up. In my opinion this case comes within the exception, and the facts and essential points resemble those in the case of Sundari Dassee v. Mudhoo Chunder Sircar (8).

It is contended that in that case one of the grounds of distinction was that that suit was not one for a declaratory decree. Personally I find some difficulty in appreciating the distinction between a suit to recover possession on a declaration of title and a suit to establish one's right to property and to recover possession. But it is clear from the judgment of Norris, J., in Sundari Dassee's case (8) that the case of Joytara Dassee v. Mahomed Mobaruck (12) was distinguished not on that ground but on the ground that the defendant was aware of the case which he had to meet. In that case it is stated that the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in the first Court. He appealed and in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court he distinctly gave notice to the other side, namely, that he was entitled to the land by adverse possession. Here, although no issue was framed on this title, evidence was adduced and the Munsif in his judgment dealt at considerable length with the question whether the plaintiffs have by adverse possession acquired any title to the lands." And also in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court the claim of a title by adverse possession was distinctly raised. I would, therefore, hold that although it is not claimed in the plaint, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on the proof of this title.

As regards the second point, Pitambar's possession commenced on the 4th August

1909. So obviously as the suit was brought in March 1914, the title by adverse possession could not have accrued after the commencement of Pitambar's possession. The general proposition that independent trespassers are not entitled to add to the periods of their different possessions is not disputed, but it is contended on behalf of the respondents, and in my opinion rightly contended, that this is not a case of independent trespassers. The Kotals held these lands in dispute claiming them as lessees under the Raja, and Pitambar and his successors also held them on the strength of their purchase of the lessees' rights. There appears to have been no interval between the possession by the original lessees and the possession by the purchasers at the mortgage sale. Also on the facts found the respondents can uphold this decree on the ground that at the time of their purchase their predecessors, Kotals, had already been in adverse possession of this land for a sufficient period which extinguished any interest which the defendant might have had. Though, as is pointed out on behalf of the appellant, the learned Subordinate Judge has not distinctly stated in his judgment when the adverse possession commenced, he has recorded his belief in the evidence on this point as given by the plaintiff's witnesses and from the judgment of the first Court, it appears that their evidence shows that the adverse possession commenced not later than 1289. This amounts to a finding of fact that the Kotals were in adverse possession for over 12 years before the plaintiffs purchased from Pitambar, and consequently as Pitambar by his purchase obtained all the rights of the lessees not only under the lease but also acquired by them by adverse possession under a claim of right set up by virtue of the lease, this point must be decided against the appellant. The findings of the lower Court, which are findings of fact, are sufficient to support the decree which the plaintiffs have obtained.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the lands in suit were not covered either by the lease or by the mortgage of the leasehold interest and, therefore, the plaintiffs by their purchase at the sale in execution of the mortgage decree obtained no title to these lands. I hold, however, that as the lessees when holding by adverse possession claimed the lands by right of their lease, that interest also passed by sale of the leasehold interest.

On behalf of the respondents it is contended that these lands were covered by the lease, but on the view I take it is unnecessary to consider whether the effect of the lease was to grant the entire Chak with the exception of certain specified lands or only to grant the 15 plots of lands described in the schedule in the document.

The result is that these appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE, TINNEVELLY—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 37—Fraudulent preference, proof of, requisites of—Burden of proof.

Where a transaction is impugned as amounting to fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the burden lies on the Receiver, or the creditors who impugn the transfer, to make out that the transfer was made with a view to give preference. It is not sufficient to prove that the transaction took place within three months of the insolvency, and that in fact it had the effect of giving preference to the transferee it must be shown positively that the transfer was made with a view to prefer the creditor to whom the transfer was made, and unless such an intention is made out, the mere fact that the transfer would have such an effect is not sufficient to bring the case within the scope of the law. [p. 643, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order, dated the 31st August 1918, of the District Court, Tinnevelly in Civil Suit No. 27 of 1917.

FACTS.—Appeal under the Provincial Insolvency Act against an order annulling a sale made in the appellant's favour. The money realised by the sale was found to have been utilised to pay off two other debts in part, besides the appellant's debt.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar (with him Mr. Subbarama Aiyar), for the Appellant.—Section 37, Provincial Insolvency

Act, applies to a sale made within three months of the adjudication in favour of a creditor. But a distinction has been drawn that the section applies only to voluntary transfers by the insolvent, and not to transfers made under "pressure." Legal process need not have been resorted to to constitute "pressure." See Nripendra Nath Sahu v. Ashutosh Ghose (1), see also Karsandas v. Maganlal (2), Official Assignee of Madras v. Mehta & Sons (3). The motive for transfer must be "preference of one creditor against another," and so necessarily relates to a voluntary preference. See also Nalam Viswanatham v. Official Assignee of Madras (4). And there is no suggestion that the price is inadequate.

Mr. V. Purushothama Aiyar (with him Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri), for the Respondent. —The Court shall presume a transfer within three months of the adjudication to be a fraud on creditors. The present transfer does not wipe off any debt, other than that of the appellant. And none of these debts have been proved before the Receiver.

JUDGMENT.—After the order of remand was made by this Court on 26th March 1918 giving an opportunity to the transferee, the transfer in whose favour is impeached in this case under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, both the parties adduced evidence relevant to the matter and we have now got to decide on that evidence whether there is a case under section 37. A ruling of this Court in Official Assignee of Madras v. Mehta & Sons (3) and another of the Calcutta High Court in Nripendra Nath Sahu v. Ashutosh Ghose (1) lay down clearly after a full discussion of the authorities that it is for the Receiver, who is impugning a transaction as amounting to fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, to prove the allegation. No doubt in the order of remand, the learned Judges seem to have taken the opposite view. This is a question of law and we agree with the decisions already mentioned. The facts of this case are that Nagalingam Pillai's creditors' petition to declare him insolvent was filed on the 27th January 1914 and the transfer, which is a deed of sale in favour of the appellant, one of the creditors, was made on the 11th December 19.3, that is, within 3 months of the insolvency. The consideration for the sale was Rs. 1,000, out of which Rs. 500 was paid towards the debt due to the vendee himself and out of the balance, Rs. 400 was paid to a relation of the respondent's witness No. 2 who had a mortgage on another property of the insolvent and Rs. 100 to another creditor who had a mortgage. These are practically all the facts we have before us, to find whether the case comes under section 37.

The law lays down that it is not sufficient to prove that the transaction which is impugned took place within three months of the insolvency and that in fact it had the effect of giving preference to the transferee, but it has to be shown positively that the transfer was made with a view to prefer the creditor to whom the transfer was made. The burden lies, as pointed out in the decisions, on the Receiver or the creditors who impugn the transfer to make out that the transfer was made with a view to give preference. Unless such intention is made out, the mere fact that the transfer would have such an effect is not sufficient to bring the case within the scope of the law. As we have suggested, beyond the fact that the transfer was made within three months prior to the insolvency and that it had the effect of paying the transferee in full, while the other creditors would probably receive much less than their debt, there is nothing on which we can hold that the transfer was made with the intention contemplated by law. It is not suggested that the consideration for the transfer was not the proper value of the property. The transferee, it may be mentioned, is not a relation of the insolvent, in which case the Court might be inclined to view the transfer with suspicion. And there is some evidence, though it cannot be said to be of a very cogent character, that the transferee had been pressing for payment of his debts and that it was in pursuance of that demand the sale was effected. Under the circumstances, we cannot uphold the view taken by the learned District Judge that the case fell within the purview of section 37 of the Insolvency Act.

The learned Pleader for the respondent before us suggested that his client was misled by the observation in the previous order of the High Court as to the burden of proof. But there is nothing to show that the respondent was in any way prevented from adducing any evidence either at the original trial or after remand. In fact after the order of remand, he did adduce some evidence and we do not think that we can entertain the suggestion that he would have adduced better evidence if he did not think that the burden lay on the other side. It was his duty to have adduced the best evidence he had, either to prove that the transaction amounted to fraudulent preference or to rebut the proof of the other side that the transfer was bona fide and made for valuable consideration.

In the result, we set aside the order of the District Judge and dismiss the petition with costs here and in the Court below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 105—Interlocutory order, right to attack, in appeal against final decree, nature of—Compliance with order, whether debars appellant from contesting it.

The right conferred by section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code is unqualified and by complying with the directions or findings of an intermediate order a plaintiff is not deprived of the right to raise in appeal the question of the propriety of such order and to attack its correctness. [p. 645, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued for possession by partition of definitely marked portions of certain premises, but was ordered to amend his plaint so as to include the whole of the premises under the penalty of having his suit dismissed. He amended his plaint accordingly. The first Court held that certain parts were not liable to be partitioned. In appeal the plaintiff attacked the order directing amendment of the plaint. The District Judge held that by complying with the order the plaintiff had divested himself of the right to dispute any part of the premises being included in the property to be partitioned. The plaintiff thereupon filed a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the plaintiff's compliance not being a voluntary one, he could go behind the order directing amendment of the plaint and that the lower Appellate Court erred in not considering and deciding whether this order was correct. [p 645, col 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 14th August 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd class, Jullundur, dated the 6th December 1917, passing a decree for 1/5th of the house.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Diwan Ram Lal, for Mr. Dalip Singh, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER.—The plaintiff-appellant instituted a suit for a $\frac{1}{4}$th share by partition of certain portions of premises. In his original plaint his claim related to the parts marked A and B on the plan on the record. In an amended plaint his claim related to the parts marked A, B, C, D and E. Thereafter, on the ground that other parts of the premises were joint and that a claim could not be made in respect of a portion only, the plaintiff was ordered, by an order dated the 30th April 1917, to amend his plaint so as to include the whole of the premises under the penalty, in the case of default, of having his suit dismissed. The proper order would have been one of rejection and not dismissal. The plaintiff amended his plaint accordingly. It was, no doubt, open to the plaintiff to elect not to amend further and to appeal from the rejection of his plaint.

One of the defendants, Inayat Shah, claimed the parts marked A and C as his exclusive property by virtue of his being the mutwalli of the khankah adjoining A. The first Court held, inter alia, that the parts marked A and C were wakf and not liable to be partitioned. The plaintiff appealed and in his third ground of appeal attacked the order of the first Court dated the 30th April 1917. The lower Appellate Court held that, by complying with the order of the first Court instead of letting his suit be dismissed and then appealing from the dismissal (which it held the proper course to be adopted) and by presenting the plaint in its final form, the plaintiff had divested himself of the right to dispute any part of the premises being included in the property to be partitioned.

No authority is given for this decision, which appears to be incorrect. Under section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 an appeal was given from an order directing the amendment of a plaint, but this right was not maintained by the present Code which by section 105 merely gives the right to attack such an order in the appeal from the decree in suit The right conferred is unqualified and there is nothing to support the contention that by complying with the directions or findings of an intermediate order a plaintiff is deprived of the right to raise the question in appeal and to attack the correctness of the order. It appears to me that a plaintiff is not compelled to run the risk of losing the whole suit by allowing his plaint to be rejected, as he well might under the law of limitation. The result of failure on appeal might be disastrous. A compliance under the circumstances of this case cannot be regarded as a purely voluntary one. No authority has been quoted to me, nor apparently does any exist, that, under such circumstances, a plaintiff cannot go behind an order for amendment, whilst section 105 of the Code apparently gives him the right to do so. I hold, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court erred in not considering and deciding whether the order of the first Court dated the 30th April 1917 was correct. The plaintiff appellant was entitled to have a decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question whether the parts of the premises alleged by him to be his exclusive property were of that description and whether the order of the first Court directing an amendment of the plaint was correct.

Apart from section 105 of the Code it would certainly be anomalous that, whereas a party has the right to appeal from a decree based on a finding of fact, he should have no such right, except by allowing the Court to reject his plaint, and possibly run considerable risk where the finding of fact results not in a decree but merely in an intermediate or interlocutory order.

In addition to the above I find that the lower Appellate Court has fallen into substantial errors. In dealing with grounds 2 and 3 of the appeal together, it was under the erroneous idea that the plaintiff was contending that the parts of the premises marked A and C ought not to have been included in the property to be partitioned, and that the appellant was precluded from this contention by the order of the first Court dated the 30th April 1917. As explained above, the plaintiff's claim prior to that order had been for the partition of these parts. He objected to the inclusion of entirely different parts which defendant No. 2 desired to include. Grounds 2 and 3 of the appeal related to distinct matters. Ground 2 challenged the finding of the first Court with regard to the parts of the premises held to be wakf. As to this the lower Appellate Court remarks: "Counsel for both sides addressed to me some eloquent arguments on the question whether part of the property is a khankah and wakf. I regret that I overlooked at the time the fact that this point was not mentioned in the grounds of appeal and so does not arise. However, the contention that parts of the disputed area are wakf was only brought forward on the assumption that the decision of 30th April 1917 could now be set aside. As I hold that it cannot, it is unnecessary for me to deal with the point."

The above remarks shew an entire misconception of the case of the appellant. It is clear that ground 2 of the appeal did raise the question whether the parts marked A and C were wakf and the order of the first Court of the 30th April 1917 was not in respect of these parts but in respect of parts which the plaintiff had not included in his plaint. The plaintiff prayed for the partition of parts A and C, and this prayer had been refused by the first Court on the ground that those parts were wakf. The plaintiff-appellant was entitled to contest the finding of the first Court on this point.

For the reasons stated above I remand the case to the lower Appellate Court and direct it to re-hear the appeal in respect of grounds 2 and 3 of the appeal instituted by the appellant in that Court in the light of the above remarks and to decide the matters raised thereby and to return its findings to this Court by an early date.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 69 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Principal District Munsif, Erode, in Original Suit No. 2250 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The award in this case is void, as also all proceedings subsequent thereto. Section 9 (3) of the Land Acquisition Act makes it imperative that the occupier of the land should have notice of the intended acquisition by the Government. Any proceedings taken under the Act without complying with that condition are null and void. See Rameswar Singh v. Secretary of State for India (1), Mysore Balakrishna Rao v. Secretary of State for India (2) as to the effect of failure to issue notice required by Statute.

Mr. S. Duraiswami Ayyar, for the Respondent.—The defendant had notice of the award and he had no other course open to him, if he felt himself aggrieved, than to ask for a reference under section 18. Section 12 states that the award is final and conclusive subject to the result of the reference under section 18. The fact that notice did not issue to any party interested or that the latter was ex parte in the enquiry by the Collector, will not nullify the award.

The cases cited by the appellant's Vakil do not apply. Neither of them bears on the acquisition of land.

The decision in Ganga Ram Marwari v. Secretary of State for India (3) is exactly on all fours.

JUDGMENT.—Under section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) the making of an award and taking possession of the land vest the property absolutely in the Government. It has been argued that, if notice on the occupier has not been served in accordance with section 9 (3) and section 45, the subsequent proceedings and the award are void.

Assuming that such service has not been sufficiently proved in the present case, section 12 provides that the award shall be final and conclusive, whether the persons interested have appeared or not, as to the question which can be dealt with by the Collector under section 11, subject to the right of the party to require a reference to the Court under section 18. The declaration made by the Government under section 6 is conclusive evidence that the land is needed for the purposes sanctioned by the Act. All that the parties interested can urge before the Collector is that the area of the land is not properly stated, the compensation proposed is insufficient and the amount has been wrongly divided amongst them. The defendant had notice of the award under section 12 and his remedy was, therefore, to apply for a reference under section 18, and no other remedy is provided by the Act.

CHIRANJU v. MOHAN LAL.

We think that the decisions cited by the learned Vakil for appellant have no bearing on the point. That reported in Rameswar Singh v. Secretary of State for India (1) does not relate to the acquisition of land, but merely decides that the owner of a franchise can sue for damages when land necessary for the exercise of his rights has been acquired without notice to him; it does not deal with the validity of the award and the vesting of the land thereunder. That reported in Mysore Balakrishna Rao v. Secretary of State for India (2) decides that a Forest Officer exercising judicial functions does not acquire jurisdiction until notice of his proceeding has been given to the party interested. The Collector in making his award is not acting judicially. In any case the award must be regarded as passing title to the property under section 16 until it has been set aside, and we think that cannot be treated as void in a suit in ejectment.

The case in Ganga Ram Marwari v. Secretary of State for India (3) is precisely in point and we respectfully agree with that decision.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 5th December 1917.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Babu Basudeo Lal, the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Puttu Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for pre-emption of the village of Sailapur, which the Deputy Commissioner of Hardoi as manager of the Court of Wards of the Kakrali estate had sold to the defendants for Rs. 52,500. The plaintiffs claimed that as under-proprietors in the village they were entitled to pre-emption as against the defendants and that no notice as required by Act XVIII of 1876 had been duly published. The plaintiffs also alleged that they had duly made a tender of the price asked for the villaga but their tender had been refused.

The defendants denied the plaintiffs' right to pre-empt, and they also pleaded that the notice required by Act XVIII of 1876 had been duly issued and that no tender had been made by the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the Deputy Commissioner as manager of the Court of Wards gave due notice of the intended sale as required by section 10 of Act XVIII of 1876 and that no tender was made by the plaintiffs. On these findings he has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit and the plaintiffs appeal.

There is no force whatsoever in the appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellants admits that he cannot dispute the actual service of the notice, that is, the fact that a notice of the sale was affixed to the chaupal of the village; but he argues that for two reasons that notice was not in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of Act XVIII of 1876. He points out that while section 10 requires that when any person proposes to sell any property in respect of which any persons have a right of pre-emption notice shall be given to the persons concerned, in the present case the notice itself (Exhibit A2) shows that the Court of Wards had already agreed to sell this property to Babu Mohan Lal and others before the notice was issued. He urges that in order to comply with the provisions of section 10 the notice must be issued before any contract to sell has been entered into, and that a notice issued after the contract has been entered into but before the actual sale has been completed is not a notice which complies with the provisions of section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act. In our opinion there is no force in this argument. A contract for the sale of immoveable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property (section 54, Transfer of Property Act), and so long as the sale has not been completed, the mere fact that a contract for the sale has been entered into prior to the issue of the notice clearly would not render the notice invalid. He further urges that in order to be a valid notice under section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act a notice stuck up on a chaupal of the village in which the property is stituate must remain affixed there for the period of three months, during which the price may be tendered by any person entitled to pre-empt. This argument also has no force. Section 10 of the Act provides that a notice given through a Court shall be deemed sufficiently given if it be stuck on the chaupal or other public place of the village in which the property is situate. It does not require that the notice shall remain affixed for the whole period of three months, and such a provision would be utterly unreasonable, as it would be tantamount to requiring the vendee to make provision for assuring that the notice should remain affixed for the long period of three months lest a claim might subsequently be made for pre-emption. Had any fraud either on the part of the vendor or the vendee in the matter of publication of the notice been proved, if for example it had been shown that although the notice had been duly stuck up at the chaupal it had been immediately afterwards removed by or at the instigation of the vendor or the vendee, it might reasonably have been argued that no valid notice had been given; but in the present case no such fraud is even alleged. There is evidence on the record that the notice remained affixed to the chaupal for at least fifteen or twenty days and there is further the admitted fact that the plaintiffs were aware of the issue of the notice; and two of them filed an application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge shortly after the notice had been affixed at the chaupal, in which they stated that a notice under section 10 of Act XVIII of 1876 had been issued. And there is further evidence that not only was the notice affixed at the chaupal but the fact that it was proposed to sell the property was notified throughout the village by beat of drum.

It is further urged that the appellants tendered the price but the tender was refused by the vendor. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that in fact the appellants never brought the sum of Rs. 52,500, the sale-price, to Hardoi; but even if it were held that they had brought this money to Hardoi, there is no evidence whatsoever on the record to show that any tender of it was made to the vendor. All we have is that the appellants filed an application before the Subordinate Judge stating their readiness to purchase and when they were properly referred to the vendor, they spoke about the matter to the mukhtar of the Court of Wards. The mukhtar of the Court of Wards has indeed denied that he was ever approached by the plaintiffs-appellants but even if we were to accept the evidence of the plaintiffs-appellants, there is nothing to show that any tender was ever made to the Deputy Commissioner, and indeed it is admitted by them that the money was left at the sarai and was never taken even to the mukhtar of the Court of Wards.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Messrs. B. R. Suri, Herbert and L. James, for the Appellant.

Mr. Santanam for Mr. Petman and Lala Bulwant Rai, for Chajju Ram, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 14th January 1918 the appellants, who are the Official Liquidators of the Amritsar and People's Banks, tendered their resignation of their office, and this is an appeal from the order of a Single Bench of this Court disposing of that application and accepting the resignation subject to certain conditions. At the opening of the case, Mr. Puri, on behalf of the appellants, requested the Court to sanction the appearance on behalf of the appellants of Mr Langford James, an Advocate of the Calcutta High Court who is not, however, enrolled in this Court; and after some discussion regarding the treatment meted out in a recent case in the Bombay High Court to an Advocate of this Court, we decided as a special case to hear Mr. James, on the strict understanding that our action should not be regarded as establishing a precedent and should not work prejudice to any action which this Court may see fit to take in the matter, and more particularly upon the assurance given to us by Mr. James himself that, so far as he was aware, no rule existed in the Calcutta High Court whereby an Advocate of this Court would be restrained from appearing before that Court.

Before us three main points have been urged on behalf of the appellants:—

(1) that an Official Liquidator is competent to resign at will and that the Liquidating Court has no say in the matter;

(2) that in this case, at any rate, even if the resignation of the Official Liquidators was subject to acceptance by the Liquidating Court, the Liquidators had shown good cause why their resignation should be accepted;

(3) even if the appellants failed on the two preceding arguments, it was contended that the quantum meruit fixed by the learned Judge in Chambers was altogether an inadequate remuneration for the efforts of the Liquidators.

Our findings in brief on these three points are that an Official Liquidator is not at liberty to resign without the sanction of the Court which appointed him and that in the present case the Official Liquidators have made out no good case why their resignation should be accepted. With regard to the third point, it is impossible for us to say, inasmuch as there is no evidence upon the record, whether the rate of remuneration proposed by the learned Judge in Chambers is adequate or not; but inasmuch as the appellants have expressed before us no desire to resign except unconditionally, we see no need to go into this question at the present juncture. Should, however, the appellants on some later date desire to retire from their post on terms, the adequacy of the rates proposed by the learned Judge could be reconsidered.

According to the rules made under the English Law, resignation of the Official Liquidator may be accepted by the contributories and the creditors but if those bodies do not accept the resignation, it is the Court which decides finally whether the resignation is to be accepted or rejected. The law in England is to this effect:—

A Liquidator appointed by the Court may resign or, on cause shown, be removed by the Court.

Here the words "on cause shown" obviously refer only to the removal by the Court. The Indian Law is contained in section 142 of the Companies Act which runs:—

Any Official Liquidator may resign or be removed by the Court on due cause shown.

It will be observed that in the Indian Act the construction of the section differs very considerably from that of the English Act, and we must hold that such a marked deviation was made of set purpose in order to leave no doubt that the words "on due cause shown" govern not only the removal by the Court but also the resignation. On these grounds we hold there is nothing in the law justifying the proposition that an Official Liquidator can resign at will without securing the concurrence of the Liquidating Court. The real question indeed is one of contract: at the time of his appointment, what did the Official Liquidator undertake to do? and to answer this question reference must be had to the order of appointment. Now, the appellants were appointed to liquidate the insolvent banks, and it is quite clear that the appointment contemplated the complete liquidation by the appellants of the insolvent concerns. Their remuneration, as has been found by another Bench of this Court, was fixed on an excessively generous scale but a sliding one, and it would be contrary to the principles of common sense, of business, and of equity that they should be permitted to resign at any moment on no better ground than caprice or resentment at enquiries regarding the nature of their past operations. A person who has entered into a contract may refuse to carry out that contract, but if he does so he is liable to pay forfeit, and the order of the learned Judge in Chambers amounts to an acceptance of the breach of the appellants' contract on their paying forfeit in the shape of a reduction of their remuneration. In the course of liquidation proceedings extending over four years, the appellants have acquired a wide and peculiar knowledge of the affairs of the insolvent banks. For the acquisition of this knowledge they had been liberally remunerated and if they are now permitted to resign, as it would be impossible for them to transfer their entire knowledge to their successor, it is obvious that the liquidation would be delayed and rendered more costly. On these grounds we hold that the appellants are not entitled to resign unconditionally.

We are not at all impressed by the argument that if the Official Liquidators have to give an account of their doings, the work of the liquidation will be hampered, but before us a fresh argument was adduced that Mr. Dignasse was in a bad state of health induced by the arduousness of his labours as Liquidator. Inasmuch, however, as there is no evidence on this point on the record, as it was not mentioned by the appellants in their application to resign and finds no place in the grounds of appeal to this Court, we can pay no attention to it. Other minor matters are mentioned in the grounds of appeal but none of them have been mentioned before us, and we hold them to be of no force. For these reasons, we dismiss the appeal with costs which must be paid by the appellants personally.

Appeal dismissed.

VITHALDAS CURSONDAS—PLAINTIFF

versus

DULSUKHBHAI VADILAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 129—Bombay High Court Rules (Original Side), r. 223—Originating summons, procedure by way of, when can be adopted—Suit for partnership accounts and damages, whether can be instituted by originating summons—Procedure.

An originating summons is not the proper procedure where the disputed facts are of such complexity as to involve a considerable amount of oral evidence. The action should be confined to matters which are capable of decision in a summary way. [p. 651, col. 2.]

An action was instituted by an originating summons in which the plaintiff sought a declaration that a partnership between himself and the defendants had been dissolved, and asked for an account of the partnership, damages for breach of the partnership agreement and an indemnity for certain liabilities incurred:

Held, that as considerable evidence would have to be taken in order to determine the matters in dispute, the procedure by way of originating summons was not the appropriate procedure for the action. [p. 651, col. 2.]

Mr. Kania, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Inverarity, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an action instituted by an originating summons in which the plaintiff seeks a declaration that a partnership between himself and the four defendants was dissolved in October 1918, an account of the said partnership, damages for breach of the partnership agreement from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and an indemnity for liabilities incurred in dealings with one Lallubhai.

The defendants object that the summons should be dismissed under rule 223, as this form of action is not appropriate to the matters in dispute.

Provision was made for this form of action by the addition of appropriate words in section 26 of the Civil Procedure Code. But as Order IV, rule 1, requires every suit to be instituted by a plaint, a suit cannot be instituted by originating summons under the Civil Procedure Code.

The procedure rests solely on rules made by this Court under the Letters Patent and section 129 of the Civil Procedure Code.

These rules generally follow the English procedure which is enacted in the Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court. These limit the procedure to the determination of questions of construction of deeds and Wills, of questions arising in the administration of an estate or trust and of questions arising out of requisitions and objections made between vendor and vendee of land.

As to the English procedure it seems clear that it does not apply where questions of fact are in dispute. Lord Lindley in the case of Powers, In re, Lindsell v. Phillips (1) said:—"A summons is not the proper way of trying a disputed debt where the dispute turns on questions of fact;" and again in Giles In re, Real and Personal Advance Company v. Michell (2) Cotton, L. J., said that this form of action "was intended...to enable simple matters to be settled by the Court without the expense of bringing an action in the usual way, not to enable the Court to determine matters which involve a serious question."

It is contended that these authorities do not apply as the Bombay rules are wider. There is some force in this contention, for our rules go further than the English rules and allow a partner to take out an originating summons and the procedure approximates more nearly to that of a regular suit, for the rules contemplate pleadings. A plaint is required by rule 218 and a written statement is permitted by rule 221.

The rules do not forbid questions of fact being determined on an originating summons, and I am not prepared to hold that this form of action is always inappropriate whenever there is a question of fact in dispute.

But I think it clear that an originating summons is not the proper procedure where the disputed facts are of such complexity as to involve a considerable amount of oral evidence. There is no machinery for discovery and inspection, and rule 223 indicates that the action should be confined to matters which are capable of decision in a summary way.

In the present case considerable evidence will have to be taken both as to the breach of contract alleged against the first and second defendants and the quantum of damages for which they are liable.

I, therefore, dismiss this summons with costs and refer the parties to a regular suit.

Negotiable instruments—Hundi—Maker of hundi, liability of, extent of.

The maker of a hundi is responsible for the money payable thereon, and his liability is not discharged by the holder in due course getting payment of what is due, and the ultimate drawee is entitled to recover from the maker what he paid on it. [p. 652, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 27th May 1918, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 10th December 1917.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Gokal Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of money due in connection with certain Hundi transactions to which the plaintiff and the defendant were parties. Bhagwan Das wanted some money to pay to his creditors and approached Jhamman Lal, who agreed to lend as much as he required. On the 22nd May 1916 Jhamman Lal drew a Hundi for Rs. 2,500 in favour of Baldeo Prasad on Bhagwan Das, which was payable in 61 days. In lieu thereof Bhagwan Das executed on the 27th May 1916 four Hundis, one for Rs. 1,000 in favour of Ishri Prasad-Ram Sahai, another for Rs. 350 in favour of Sadhu Ram-Ram Gopal, another for Rs. 400 in favour of Jathmal-Sadashuk'a and the last for Rs. 700 in favour of Hira Lal-Chunni Lal. All these Hundis were drawn on Baldeo Prasad who is now stated to have been the agent of Jhamman Lal, and they contained a note stating that Jhamman Lal was to be ultimately liable for the same. This note was described as Sri Nishani and indicates according to the evidence adduced in the case that the prima facie liability rested on Baldeo Prasad but the ultimate liability was enforceable against Jhamman Lal. The liability of Jhamman Lal under those Hundis was, therefore, something like that of a drawee in case of need.

The holders of those four Hundis recovered the moneys due on them and have no claim left as against Baldeo Prasad and Jhamman Lal, the drawees. Bhagwan Das accepted the Hundi for Rs. 2,500 drawn by Jhamman Lal but when it was presented for payment by Parbhu Dayal Manna Lal in whose favour Baldeo Prasad had endorsed it, he dishonoured it and refused to pay its amount. Parbhu Dayal-Manna Lal intimated the fact of dishonour to Baldeo Prasad who informed Jhamman Lal. Jhamman Lal thereupon paid the money due on the Hundi to Baldeo Prasad, from whom Parbhu Dayal-Manna Lal recovered what was due to them.

In the present suit Jhamman Lal claims the money due on the four Hundis executed by Bhagwan Das, of which he was the Sri Nishani drawee or roughly speaking a drawee in case of need. He also relies on the Hundi which he had himself drawn on Bhagwan Das in consideration of the same. The Court of first instance decreed the claim but the lower Appellate Court dismissed it

It is not possible, however, to understand the reasoning on which the decision of the lower Appellate Court proceeds. In regard to the four Hundis for Rs. 2,450 drawn by Bhagwan Das, the lower Appellate Court observes that they were duly honoured at the appointed time and the money due on them paid in the ordinary course. The liability of the maker is not, however, discharged by the holder in due course getting payment of what is due. Baldeo Prasad admits that he got what he had paid from Jhamman Lal. As the ultimate drawee of these Hundis Jhamman Lal is, therefore, entitled to recover what he paid on account of them from the maker.

In regard to the Hundi for Rs. 2,500 the lower Appellate Court observes that the only person who could complain that the Hundi had not been dealt with in accordance with law, that is who could complain that he had not been paid, was the holder of the Hundi. But that statement leaves out of account the liability of the acceptor as against the maker. Section 32 of the Negotiable Instrument Act (XXVI of 1881) lays down that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the maker of a promissory note and the acceptor before maturity of a bill of exchange are bound to pay the amount thereof at maturity according to the apparent tenor of the note or acceptance respectively, and the acceptor of the bill of exchange at or after maturity is bound to pay the amount thereof to the holder on demand. In default of such payment as aforesaid such maker or acceptor is bound to compensate any party to the note or holder for any loss or damage sustained by him and caused by such default. Bhagwan Das as the maker of the four Hundis for Rs. 2,450 is, therefore, responsible to Jhamman Lal for the money payable on them. He is equally responsible as the acceptor of the Hundi for Rs. 2,500 to pay the money due on that Hundi to Jhamman Lal or, in other words, to compensate the drawer for any loss or damage sustained by him and caused by his default in making the payment. Sections 78 and 90 of the said Act, to which the learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent has referred, have no application, because the holders of these Hundis have already received payment from Jhamman Lal. The acceptor never held the Hundi for Rs. 2,500 at or after maturity in his own right.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff-appellant decreed with costs here and hitherto and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till payment. The defendant-appellant will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

THE OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR, INDUSTRIAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED, IN LIQUIDATION—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KESHO DAS AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Companies Act (VII of 913), ss. 184, 186—Company in liquidation—Suit by Official Liquidator to recover money due on promissory note—Defendant, whether entitled to set off sum due to him—Liquidation Court, jurisdiction of—Summary process, whether justified Prior order of Liquidation Judge aisallowing plea of set-off, whether bar—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 6.

The Official Liquidator of a Bank in Liquidation sued to recover a sum of money due on a promissory note executed by the defendants, who claimed to set off against the plaintiff's demand the money received by the Bank by way of security for the due performance of his duties by K., one of the two defendants, on his appointment as cashier of the Bank. It appeared that the defendants were members of a joint Hindu family and that the money deposited with the Bank belonged to the family. Moreover, the Bank in its dealings had treated the money as belonging to both the brothers:

Held, (1) that the defendants who were debtors on the promissory note were creditors in respect of the money deposited as security and were, therefore, entitled to raise the plea of set-off. [p. 654, col. 1.]

(2) that as the defendants were not contributories of the Bank, the Court conducting the liquidation had no jurisdiction to recover by a summary process the money due from them on the promissory note; [p. 654, col. 1.]

(3) that an opinion expressed by the Liquidation Judge with regard to the plea of set-off did not operate as res judicata. [p. 654, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 23rd May 1917, varying that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhang, dated the 12th March 1917, decreeing the claim in part.

Diwan Niranjan Parshad, for the Appellant.

Mehta Bahadur Chand and Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and the cross-Appeal No. 2723 of 1917 arise out of an action brought by the Official Liquidator of the Industrial Bank for the recovery of a sum of money due on a promissory note executed by the defendants, Kesho Das and Wazir Chand, on the 16th of March 1912. The defendants, who are brothers, claimed to set off against the plaintiff's demand the money received by the Bank by way of security for the due performance of his duties by Kesho Das, who was appointed a cashier of the Bank. The Courts below have accepted this defence, and the main question for determination is whether the defendants are entitled to the set-off claimed by them.

It appears that Kesho Das was appointed a cashier in November 1910, and that on the 30th November 1910 a sum of Rs. 2,500 was deposited as security. The District Judge, concurring with the Court of first instance, finds that the defendants are members of a joint Hindu family, and that the money deposited with the Bank belonged to the family. This finding, which proceeds upon the evidence adduced by the parties, is a finding of fact and cannot be assailed in second appeal. Indeed, all the circumstances go to shew that the deposit was treated by the Bank as made by both the brothers, and it is beyond dispute that, when Kesho Das retired from the office of cashier, he was succeeded by Wazir Chand on the 1st February 1912 on the same security deposit. The Bank in its dealings regarded the money as belonging to both the brothers, and upon that finding it is clear that the defendants, who were debtors on the promissory note, were creditors in respect of the money deposited as security. The lower Courts were, therefore, right in giving effect to the plea of set-off, vide Mehr Chand v. Amritsar Bank (1).

As to the contention that this plea could not be entertained, because the Liquidation Judge has already disallowed it by his order of the 9th October 1915, it is sufficient to say that, as the defendants were not contributories of the Bank, the Court conducting the liquidation had no jurisdiction to recover by a summary process the money due from them on the promissory note. Mr. Niranjan Parshad admits that the liability on the promissory note could be enforced only by a regular suit, and it is obvious that the question of set-off could arise only with respect to the Liquidator's claim for the recovery of that money. Any opinion expressed by the Liquidation Judge cannot, therefore, preclude the defendants from putting forward their claim by way of set-off in answer to the plaintiff's demand; and we accordingly endorse the conclusion of the lower Courts that the bar of res judicata has not been established.

It appears that Wazir Chand was removed from his office on the 1st of December 1913, and there is nothing to shew that the money deposited by way of security could not be claimed by the defendants immediately after that date. The Courts below have held that on the 3rd of December 1913 the defendants gave notice to the Bank to set off the amount due to it on the promissory note against their security deposit, and to pay them the balance. In these circumstances we must hold that the Bank, whose claim was legally discharged, is not entitled to recover any interest after the 1st of December 1913.

For these reasons we dismiss the appeal preferred by the Liquidator, but accepting that of the defendants and reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow, alienation by—Reversioner joining in alienation, effect of—Necessity, proof of—Presumption—Burden of proof—Reversioner, right of, nature of—Estoppel.

The circumstance that a conveyance of a portion of her husband's estate is executed jointly by a Hindu widow and the then next reversioner, does not by itself create an indefeasible title in favour of the vendee, who can successfully resist a claim by the reversioners only on proof of legal necessity or such bona fide inquiry as entitles him to protection from a Court of Equity. A mere recital in the deed as to the existence of such necessity, by itself, is insufficient. Where, however, the alienation is made with the concurrence of, or jointly with, the then next reversioner, there is a presumption in favour of the validity of the transaction. [p. 655, cols 1 & 2; p. 656, col. 1.]

In order to discharge the burden of proving the existence of legal necessity, the true rule is that the creditor, to protect himself, where he is not shown to have made a bona fide inquiry, must prove that there was an actual pressure on the estate or danger to be averted, such as a threatened suit on a genuine debt, an outstanding decree or an impending sale, which the widow had no funds to meet. [p. 657, col. 1.]

RAMES CHANDRA CHAKRABARTI v. SASI BHUSAN UPADHAY.

Where persons contesting an alienation by a Hindu widow claim not through their father but directly as reversioners to the estate of the last male owner, they are not precluded by any rule of estoppel from disputing the validity of the alienation, nor are they affected by the circumstance that they had, after the death of their father and before the death of the widow, taken by inheritance land transferred by the widow by way of gift to their father. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Perganas, dated the 13th March 1918.

Babus Brajalal Chakrabarti, Biraj Mohan Mojumdar and Hiralal Chakrabarti, for the Appellants.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Rishindra Nath Sarkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land with mesne profits upon declaration of title. The disputed property admittedly belonged to one Mahim Chandra Chakrabarti, and upon his death, which took place on the 27th June 1892, passed to his widow Monmohini, who died on the 28th October 1915. The plaintiffs are the four sons of Umesh Chandra Chakrabarti, the brother of Mahim Chandra Chakrabarti, who died in 1908, and they claim the estate of their uncle as reversionary heirs after the death of their aunt The defendant is the son of Annapurna, a sister of Mahim and Umesh, and claims title to the property by purchase under a conveyance executed on the 16th June 1895 by Monmohini and Umesh. The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the conveyance does not operate against them and has dismissed the suit. On the present appeal, the substantial point for investigation is, whether the conveyance in favour of the defendant has passed to him a title operative against the plaintiffs as the reversionary heirs to the estate of their paternal uncle.

We may observe at the outset that the circumstance that the conveyance in favour of the defendant was executed jointly by the widow and the then next reversioner did not by itself create in his favour an indefeasible title. This is conclusively settled by the decision of the Full Bench in Debi Prosad Chowdhury v. Golap Bhagat (1), where it was ruled that the transferee acquires a good title as against the actual reversionary heirs, if the widow has alienated her entire interest in the estate inherited by her from her husband, with the consent of the whole body of persons entitled to succeed as immediate reversionary heirs: Gopeswar Misra v. Gopini Baishnabi (2) and Shyomadas Roy v. Radhika Prosad (3). This view has now received the approval of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (4). In the case before us, the conveyance covers a portion of the estate of Mahim Chandra inherited by his widow; consequently, the defendant can successfully resist the claim, only on proof of legal necessity or such bona fide enquiry as entitles him to protection from a Court of Equity.

It is well settled that in a suit of this description, instituted for recovery of property alienated by a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate, the burden of proving that there was legal necessity or bona fide enquiry rests in the first instance on the person who claims title from the widow: Amar Nath Sah v. Achan Kuar (5), Maheshar Baksh Singh v. Ratan Singh (6), Bhagwat Dayal Singh v. Debi Dayal Sahu (7), Nanda Lal v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (8) and Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (9). Recitals in deeds as to the existence of such necessity cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertion of fact which they contain; the existence of necessity must be substantiated by evidence aliunde: Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (9), Nanda Lal v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (8) and Ranga sami Gonnden v. Nachiappa Gounden (4). Where, however, the alienation is made with the concurrence of or jointly with the then next reversioner, a presumption arises in favour of the validity of the transaction. The exact nature of this presumption was described in the case of Debi Prosad Choudhry v. Golap Bhagat (1). The consent of persons who are the guardians of the widow and are, as the next possible takers of the estate, most deeply interested in its preservation, indicates the propriety of the transaction; but the presumption is not conclusive and is rebuttable. This follows from a long series of decisions of the Judicial Committee which were reviewed by the Full Bench and also from the later decisions in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Girindra Nath Mukerji (10) and Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (4). As the consent of the reversioners, who, in the words of Lord Dunedin in the case last mentioned, might fairly be expected to be interested to quarrel over the transaction, thus affords a presumptive proof of the propriety of the transaction, the circumstances under which the consent was given must be carefully scrutinised, and if it transpires that the transaction was in essence a device to divide the estate with the reversioner, his consent must manifestly lose its probative force. Let us now test the evidence in the light of these principles.

Mahim Chandra Chakrabarti, as the evidence unmistakably shows, was a man of means. The application for Letters of Administration presented by his widow on the 22nd July 1892, within a month of the date of his death, states that he left 1,584 bighas of land valued at Rs. 8,700, and a sum of Rs. 629 due from creditors against most of whom decrees had been obtained. There is no indication that the extent of the assets was overvalued; it is certainly not customary for people to overestimate the value of an estate where succession duty has to be paid. Besides, the statement in the case before us was verified by the defendant as also by the brother of the widow, who later on became a transferee of a portion of the estate. Different witnesses give varying figures for the income of the immoveable property; in our opinion, an estimate of Rs. 2,000 a year does not err on the side of excess. The widow obtained the Letters of Administration and entered upon the management of the estate. In less than three years, we find that she proceeds to execute almost simultaneously a number of documents whereby she alienates a considerable portion of the estate left by her husband These transactions may be conveniently enumerated as follows :—

(i) 15th June 1895—Conveyance of 261 bighas of land in favour of her brother Syama Charan Bhattacharyya for an alleged consideration of Rs. 3,499.

(ii) 15th June 1895—Conveyance of 285 bighas of land in favour of the defendant (her husband's sister's son) for an alleged consideration of Rs. 2,499.

(iii) 18th June 1895—Deed of endowment of 13 bighas 15 cottahs of land in favour of Trailokya Nath Chakrabarti for the worship of the family deities.

(iv) 18th June 1895—Deed of gift of 252 bighas of land, valued at Rs. 1,500, in favour of Umes Chandra (her husband's brother), the then next reversioner.

(v) 18th June 1895—Ekrarnama in favour of Umes Chandra undertaking not to act to the prejudice of the reversion in respect of the properties still left in her hands (area estimated at 705 bighas, i.e., less than a half of the entire estate).

There can be no doubt that each of these transactions formed part of a carefully organised and matured plan for distribution of the estate; we have the significant fact that stamps for the documents were purchased simultaneously from the same stamp vendor on the 12th March 1895. It may be added that there were intermediate alienations, namely, a permanent lease in favour of one Bangsi Mandal on the 14th April 1895, for a premium of Rs. 400; on the same date there was another lease in favour of Ainuddin for a premium of Rs. 740 and a conveyance in favour of Satish Chandra Chakrabarti for Rs. 300. There was also a mortgage of some land executed on the 15th June to Bangsi Mandal for a loan of Rs. 500, which is said to have been repaid the very next day, out of the alleged consideration for the sale to the defendant. The various alienations we have mentioned took place with the concurrence of the then next reversioner, and as the parties are proved to have acted under legal advice, the policy pursued is not difficult to appreciate. As the law was generally understood at that time, Hem Chunder Sanyal v. Sarnamoyi Debi (11), an alienation by a widow, even of a portion of the estate of her husband, was taken to convey an absolute title to the purchaser, provided it was made with the concurrence of the then next reversioner. No doubt, a general recital of necessity was also inserted in the deeds, but evidently the real foundation of the transactions was the consent of the immediate reversioner. The defendant now finds himself in a state of unexpected embarrassment by reason of subsequent judicial pronouncements; he is consequently driven to support the transfer in his favour, solely on grounds of legal necessity and bona fide enquiry. In our opinion, this attempt has ended in a complete failure

As regards legal necessity, we must bear in mind that it is not sufficient for the transferee to prove that there were some debts payable by the deceased full owner or his widow. A person who claims title under an alienation from her must prove that there was legal necessity for it, that is, such pressure on the estate at the time the alienation was made as justified the act of the widow. The creditor is not protected merely by proof that the money raised has been applied for the benefit of the estate. The true rule is that the creditor, to protect himself—where he is not shown to have made a bona fide enquiry—must prove that there was an actual pressure on the estate or danger to be averted, such as a threatened suit on a genuine debt, an outstanding decree or an impending sale, which the widow had no funds to meet: Rameswar Mandal v. Provabati Debi (12). Tested from this point of view, there is no solid foundation laid here for proof of legal necessity for the sale to the defendant. There is a general recital in the conveyance that Mahim had contracted debts which could not be repaid out of the income. There is no specification of debtors or of the amount of their dues. The only debt specified, namely, the mortgage executed in favour of Bangsi Mandal on the previous day, was manifestly illusory. The transaction, as we have seen, had been arranged at least three months earlier when the stamps were purchased on the 12th March 1895. The fact that a mortgage was executed on the 15th June and is said to have been repaid on the 16th June out of the alleged consideration for the conveyance, is not calculated to inspire confidence in the genuineness of the transaction. Evidence was brought forward at the trial to show that decrees had been obtained against the widow for small sums of money due for arrears of rent, but most of these appear to have been satisfied. Some rough account books of Mahim have been produced to show that from time to time he used to take loans from others; the aggregate of the entries selected comes to about Rs. 1,000. But the account books are obviously incomplete; in some places, entries have been cut out in an inexplicable manner; in other places, there is no credit side. It is impossible to draw any inference from these account books as to the financial position of Mahim at the time of his death. On the other hand, it is a matter for legitimate comment that the account books of 1895, that is, the year in which these transactions took place, are not forthcoming. They would have shown, if properly kept, the exact state of the family funds and the mode in which the alleged considerations for the sales and leases, if really received by the widow, were applied by her. No reliance can be placed upon the assertions made by the defendant in his oral testimony to show that Mahim at the time of his death was in debt to the extent of nearly Rs. 2,700. These allegations are not corroborated by contemporaneous documentary evidence and are not strengthened by testimony that Mahim sometime before his death had been sued by Sarat Kumari, one of his sisters-in-law, for a share of the ancestral properties of her husband. As already stated the evidence, if accepted, tends to show that Mahim sometimes used to take loans and at the time of his death probably left some debts. Beyond this the evidence does not carry us, and we have really no information as to the state of family affairs at or about the time when the series of transactions mentioned took place. We must not also overlook the fact that the defendant knows all about the transactions, while the plaintiffs have no personal knowledge of them; indeed, the first plaintiff was a child two years old when the sale took place, and his brothers, the other plaintiffs, had not been born then. In our opinion, the claim of the defendant cannot possibly be supported on the ground of justifying legal necessity.

As regards bona fide enquiry, the position of the defendant is, if possible, weaker still. He is by no means a stranger to the family. After the death of his father, he was brought up in the family of Mahim who was his maternal uncle. It is not necessary to determine what was the precise extent of the influence exercised on Monmohini by her brother and her nephew respectively. It is clear that the defendant was intimately acquainted with, even if he did not actually look after, the affairs of Monmohini. In these circumstances, no question of bona fide enquiry really arises.

We have further evidence to show that the consent of Umesh to the alienation was obtained under circumstances which makes it valueless as an indication of the propriety of the transaction. Umesh was a needy man and was in receipt of a small allowance from the estate of his father. This was withheld for a time, much to his inconvenience. In addition to this, we find that he received by way of gift land valued at Rs. 1,500, which was substantial enough, in his straitened circumstances, to induce him to assent to the transactions in favour of the defendant and the brother of the widow. In this view, we need not examine whether the alleged consideration for the sale to the defendant was actually paid by him to his maternal aunt. It has been suggested that he had no funds at his disposal to enable him to make the purchase. The circumstances are certainly suspicious, but we need not go into the point further, as the sale could not be supported even if it was for consideration.

On a review of all the circumstances of the case, we feel no doubt that the sale to the defendant was only one element in a scheme for the division of the estate, during the lifetime of the widow, among persons nearly related to her and well-acquainted with the state of the family. The end was intended to be achieved by a series of transfers effected with the concurrence of the then next reversioner, who was paid a substantial consideration as the price of his consent. There was no justifying necessity for these alienations and no occasion for such enquiry as affords protection to a bona fide purchaser for value.

We may add finally that whatever the position of Umesh might have been, the plaintiffs, though his sons, are not affected by any rule of estoppel. The plaintiffs do not claim through their father, but directly as reversioners to the estate of their uncle. The contrary view indicated in Rangappa Naik v. Kamti Naik (13), Muthuveeru Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (14) and Vinayak v. Govind (15) possibly received some colour of support from dicta in Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi (16) and Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (17), but was contrary to the principle enunciated in Bahadur Singh v. Mohar Singh (18) and has now been definitely negatived by the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (4). The plaintiffs are consequently not precluded by any rule of estoppel from disputing the validity of the alienation nor are they affected by the circumstance that they had, after the death of their father and before the death of their aunt, taken by inheritance the land transferred by way of gift to their father; this clearly does not operate as acquiescence or ratification.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the suit decreed with costs in both Courts. The case will be remitted to the Subordinate Judge for determination of the mesne profits.

Mortgage of undivided share—Partition—Mortgaged property, allotment of, to co-sharer—Mortgagee, remedy of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 22, 33—Cross-objections against co-respondent, whether permissible—Appellate Court, power of, to modify decree.

A mortgage of an undivided share in property which under a partition is allotted to another co-sharer cannot, in the absence of fraud, be enforced by the mortgagee except against the share allotted to the mortgagor in lieu of the share mortgaged. The remedy of the mortgagee is to proceed against the substituted property. [p. 660, col. 1.]

The filing of cross-objections by a respondent against a co-respondent is not illegal, and where an Appellate Court cannot do complete justice between the parties without opening the whole case, it can take into consideration the objections filed by one of the respondents, not only against the appellant, but against the co-respondent also, and to modify the decree, if necessary. Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for Respondent No. 1.

Syed Ali Muhammad, for Respondent No. 6.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a mortgage which was effected by Musammat Wazir Begam, the widow of Amir Haidar, and Muhammad Sajjad and Muhammad Asghar, sons of Amir Haidar, in favour of the plaintiff-respondent, on the 15th October 1909. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 250, out of which Rs. 175 were left for payment to Musammat Imam Bandi, a prior mortgagee. It has been found that out of Rs. 175, Rs. 150 were paid to Musammat Imam Bandi in satisfaction of the prior mortgage and that no other money was due to her. It was asserted on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the remaining Rs. 25 were paid back by him to the mortgagors, but he was unable to prove that allegation. The Court, therefore, awarded the plaintiff-respondent a decree for the recovery of Rs. 225 with interest against the mortgaged property.

The dispute in this appeal relates to two matters. The first matter is concerned with the liability of the property mortgaged. The property mortgaged was a phulwari in the town of Sitapur. The alleged owner of the phulwari was Amir Haidar, but it is not clear whether he inherited it from his father or had acquired it himself. It is not disputed, however, that there was a 4 annas in share in the village Angrasi which was partitioned between the heirs of Musammat Ahmadi Begam, the daughter of Ashiq Ali, and the heirs of Amir Haidar, the son of Ashiq Ali.

On the 8th September 1904, Musammat Wazir Begam executed a deed of partition wherein she acknowledged that the heirs of Musammat Ahmadi Begam were entitled to a one-third share in the 4 annas of the village Angrasi held by her and her sons. In 1911 Nazir Haidar, Muhammad Sajjad and Muhammad Asghar, sons of Amir Haidar filed a suit for a declaration that the said deed of partition was fictitious. The sons of Musammat Ahmadi Begam, namely, Syed Muhammad, Muhammad Said and Muhammad Askari, were defendants to that suit On a reference to arbitration made through the Court, the arbitrator decided on the 9th February 1912 that inasmuch as Syed Muhammad disclaimed any share in the Angrasi property, his $\frac{1}{3}$ pies share should go to the sons of Amir Haidar and inasmuch as Muhammad Said and Muhammad Askari were willing to dedicate half of their share, namely, $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies, to religious purposes, that dedication should be upheld. In regard to the remaining $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies share held by Muhammad Said and Muhammed Askari, he held that it should be given to the sons of Amir Haidar in exchange for some land in Mohalla Kot and a grove and phulwari now in question. This award was accepted by the Court before which the suit was pending, and a decree was passed in accordance with it on the 9th March 1912. The effect of that decree was to substitute for the security held by the plaintiff respondent the property which the mortgagors obtained by virtue of the above award. There are no materials on the record to determine the exact value of the phulwari mortgaged or the aggregate value of the grove or the Angrasi property. All that can be said is that the Angrasi property given to the sons of Amir Haidar was of greater value than the land, grove and the phulwari awarded to the defendants-appellants. The award says so.

The Courts below refused to give effect to the award, holding that the mortgage was antecedent in point of time and must, therefore, have precedence over the distribution of property made by the award. But as held in Mahadin v. Sheo Prasad (1), a mortgage of an undivided share in property which under a partition has been allotted to another co sharer cannot, in the absence of fraud, be enforced by the mortgagee except against the share which has been allotted to the mortgagor in lieu of the share mortgaged. The remedy of the mortgagee, where there is no fraud, is to proceed against the substituted security. There is nothing to show that any fraud was intended to be perpetrated in the proceedings which terminated in the decree of the 9th March 1912. The proper course, therefore, for the mortgagee is to proceed against the substituted security, which, in the absence of better materials for identifying it, must be treated as included in the 10/16ths share of the mortgagors in the $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies share of the village Angrasi, which was allotted to the sons of Amir Haidar in exchange for the land in Sitapur, and the grove and phulwari referred to.

The next point relates to the omission of the lower Appellate Court to enter in the decree a direction that the prior charge claimed by Musammat Imam Bandi will be treated as satisfied. The Court of first instance directed the sale of the phulwari subject to that prior charge, but as the lower Appellate Court found that the prior charge was satisfied and that finding has not been challenged here, the direction contained in the decree of the first Court ought to have been expunged.

On behalf of Musammat Imam Bandi, it is urged that no respondent can be permitted to file a cross-objection against a co-respondent and in support of that contention reliance is placed on Sajjad Husain v. Bakar Ali (2). The powers conferred by Order XLI, rule 33, of the Code of Civil Procedure are, however, more extensive than those conferred by the old Code of Civil Procedure, upon which the decision above referred to proceeded. In Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (3) the cross-objection filed by a respondent against a co-respondent was admitted and in Abdul Ghani v. Muhammad Fasih (4) it was recognised that if the Appellate Court could not do complete justice between the parties without opening the whole case, it could take into consideration objections filed by one of the respondents not only against the appellant but, it may be, against the co-respondent also and to modify the decree against them, if necessary.

The appeal and the cross-objections are, therefore, allowed and the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court will be modified in so far that the decree will be enforceable against nothing more than the 10/16ths share of the mortgagors in the $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies share of the village Angrasi, which was given by the defendants-appellants in lieu of the phulwari and some other property given to them in exchange. The condition laid down in the decree of the first Court, namely, that the sale shall be made subject to the rights of defendant No. 2 under her decree of conditional sale, dated the 5th November 1906, will be treated as cancelled. The parties will, in the circumstances, bear their own costs of this appeal.

Diwan Bahadur GOVINDA DOSS CHATHURBUJA DOSS AND OTHERS— RESPONDENTS.

Trust, charitable—Dedication of building for use by particular sect or class—Cy-pres, doctrine of, application of—Re-construction of building after death of founder, whether justifies application of cy-pres—Occasional use by objects of trust, whether justifies use by others at other times—Construction of document.

The trustees of a charitable endowment cannot convert its funds to purposes other than those marked out by the instrument of trust or the scheme regulating the charity. [p 663, col. 1.]

The trustees cannot make a cy-pres application on their own authority merely because they consider it desirable to do so. [p. 663, col. 1.]

Where a building is dedicated expressly for use by a particular sect or class or denomination of persons whenever they halt there, its occupation by other persons at other times, when it is not used by the class for whom it was founded, cannot be permitted. [p 663, cols. 1 & 2.]

The fact that a building founded for use by a particular class was afterwards re-constructed by members of another class or by the public, will not justify the application of the cy-pres doctrine, unless the sect for whom the building was intended has become extinct. [p. 663, cols. 1 & 2.]

A follower of Vallabachari, founder of a sect, dedicated a building for use by 'Samastha Vallabha Kul':

Held, that the intention of the dedicator was to restrict the use of the building only to the descendants of the founder who were priests of that sect, and not to all Vallabha Vaishnavas. [p. 663, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, dated the 22nd April 1918, made in the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Original Suit No. 414 of 1916.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit, which was instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, are Vallabha Vaishnavas belonging to a sect founded by one Vallabha Chariar. Among his followers are included Gujarathi Vaishnavas, Marwadis and Bhatias. The appellant (4th defendant in the suit) and the plaintiff are Gujarathi Vaisyas, the 3rd defendant, who is a respondent in the appeal, is Bhatia and the 5th defendant, another respondent, is a Marwadi. The only question in the appeal is as to the terms of the trust founded by one Shamdoss Balakrishnadoss in 1827. He dedicated a building for the purposes mentioned in his Will. The original Will is not forthcoming, but a document purporting to be a true copy has been produced which is Exhibit A in the case. It is contended by Mr. Rangachari who appears for the appellant that the genuineness and accuracy of this copy have not been satisfactorily proved. But that apparently either the original Will or a copy of it was forthcoming in 1876 cannot be doubted, for we find that Exhibit B, a document which is not impugned, recites the contents of the Will of Balakrishnadoss and those recitals, so far as the question in issue is concerned, are in substantially the same terms as those of Exhibit A.

The contention of the appellant is that the building was intended primarily for the use of the Maharajis or descendants of Vallabhachari, who held the position of priests of this sect when they came to Madras, and that when it was not required for such purposes it might be used by the Gujarathi Vaisyas, followers of their sect, on the occasion of marriages. The contention of the respondents is that although the pilgrim, priests, that is, the descendants of the founder of the sect, are preferentially entitled to the use of the building whenever any of them visits Madras, it may be used, when it is not so occupied, by all the followers of the Vallabha sect including Bhatias, Marwadis and Gujarathi Vaisyas as for purposes of marriage and the like.

The learned Judge, as we read his judgment, seemed to be disinclined to adopt the view that the original purpose of the dedication was that the building should be used only by the priests when they were on a visit to Madras; he thought that having regard to the dictionary meaning of the word Kula, coupled with the word Samastha, it could be inferred that the entire Vallabha sect or, as the learned Judge says, the whole body of the disciples were intended to be the beneficiaries of this trust. Then the learned Judge goes on to say that if that were not the proper construction of the clause in the Will, he would be inclined to hold that this was a fit case for applying the doctrine of cy-pres and, that so applying it, he would hold that all the followers of the Vallabha sect should be allowed to use the building on ceremonial occasions.

Having heard the question fully argued we have come to the conclusion that the founder of the charity intended the building to be used by the descendants of Vallabhachari, that the words in Exhibit A "Samastha," "Vallabha Kul" should be read with what follows in the next sentence, namely, that Sri Maharaj when he may come to Madras may halt therein, and that whenever the house was not occupied by the Maharajis, i. e., priests and descendants of Vallabhachari, it should be let on rent so that the taxes and the repairs might be met out of the income. It seems to us to be clear that "Vallabha Kul" was not meant to include all Vallabha Vaishnavas and that it was only intended to mean the descend ants of Vallabhachari, who are priests of this sect. The recital in Exhibit B is almost identical. That document came into existence in 1876; at that time the building had to be entirely re-built. The leading men of the Gujarathi Vaisya community put their heads together and with the consent of the Maharaj who happened to be present in Madras decided to put up a new building on the same foundation, and they did so at considerable cost. Two persons, the father of the present plaintiffs and the uncle of the 4th defendant who found the money, were made trustees with the consent of the caste people and the priest. The document, Exhibit B, was then drawn up. It begins with a recital of the contents of the Will of Balakrishna Doss which, as already stated, are to the same effect as the paragraph which we have discussed, namely, that Balakrishnadoss left a Will by which he made a gift of the house "with a view that all Balakas (children) of Vallabha Kul who may come may halt therein." There can be no doubt that by "all Balakas of Vallabha" only the descendants of Vallabhachari were intended. But then Exhibit B goes on to say that without interfering with the accommodation of the Vallabha Kul Balakas and Bhatias, i.e., their messengers or agents, and Virakta Vaishnavas (devotees among Vaishnavas) who might come to Madras, if the "caste people" were to ask for the use of the building for marriage, they should be allowed accommodation without charging them any rent. This provision for the "caste people" is clearly an addition to the original uses to which the building was dedicated as recited in Exhibit B and in Exhibit A. We may incidentally mention here that a question was raised as to the meaning of 'caste people' and we have no doubt that by 'caste people' were intended only Gujarathi Vaisyas. All the signatories are Vaisyas and they had contributed the funds for re-building the house. It cannot be said that they belong to the same caste, as for instance, Bhatias and Marwadis. We may also refer to Exhibit G, the stone inscription on the building, where also the beneficiaries are stated to be the "Sri Vallabha Kool's (family's) Balakas (children) and Sri Bhathiajis (which admittedly means their agents) to halt therein." Then if we look at the extract from the certificate register Exhibit D, that also leaves no room for doubt as to who are the objects of the trust. For it says that "the property in question was bequeathed by a Will as charitable endowment for the halting and lodging of the Gujarathi pilgrim priests, etc., by the said Shyama Doss. We may refer to the case of Mohan Lalji v. Gordhan Lalji (1), when the phrase Ballava Kul was held by the Privy Council to mean the descendants of Ballavachari. Mr. Rangachari argued that although that might have been so originally, yet as the building was re-erected in 187[illegible] with the money contributed by two of the leading men of the Gujarathi Vaisya community and as it has been frequently used since then by members of that community on occasions of marriage, we must presume that the original grant was for the benefit primarily of the priests and secondarily of the members of the Gujarathi Vaisya community. We cannot accept this contention for, as already stated, we have got the words of the grant which admit of no ambiguity.

It was further contended that even granting that the original objects of the dedication were the Vallabha priests, having regard to the fact that the building was entirely reconstructed in 1876 and also having regard to the subsequent user, there was a valid and binding change in the objects of the trust, that it is to say, we must hold that the objects now include the use of the building by the Gujarathi Vaisya community on occasions of marriage and for like purposes. But we have no hesitation in holding that this argument is unsound. As stated in Tudor on Charities, page 224, "nor can trustees convert the funds to other purposes than those marked out by the instrument of foundation or the scheme regulating the charity." And although a cy pres application may be desirable, it is not for the trustees to make that application on their own authority. The same proposition is laid down in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume IV, on page 191: "However desirable it may be, in no circumstances can trustees of a charity apply the trust funds cy pres on their own authority, without the direction of the Court or the Charity Commissioners." Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Ismail Ariff v. Ahmed Moolla Dawood (2) have also laid down a similar proposition with respect to a Muhammadan endowment.

Then it was suggested on behalf of the respondents that the Court ought to apply the doctrine of cy pres in this case. We do not, however, think that there is any room for such application. It is not suggested that the descendants of Vallabhachari are extinct. There is evidence that at least 40 or 50 such priests are living at the present time and also that they occasionally come to Madras to visit their disciples and followers. It may be that they only come to Madras occasionally, perhaps only once in a few years though their agents or Bhatias come here more frequently. Nonetheless, if the founders intended that the building should be used solely by the Maharajis (priests) whenever they chose to come here, it is not for us to say that the building should be used for other purposes whenever the priests do not occupy it. The founder apparently did not desire that the building should be used by any persons other than the descendants of Vallabhachari. It was on that account that he laid down that when the building was not in their occupation, it should be let out on rent for purposes of meeting the expenses of repairs and other outgoings. It has not been suggested that the income derived from rent has left any surplus. In fact the repairs since 1876 have been made by the followers of Vallabha sect by contribution. We do not, therefore, see that there is any room for the application of the doctrine of cy pres in this case.

The result is that the decree of the learned Judge will be modified by declaring that the Haveli mentioned in the Will of Kambi Shamdoss Balakrishna Doss, deceased, made in or about the year 1827 is for the benefit of the descendants of Vallabhachari, so that they or their agents may stay there during their visits to Madras, instead of the declaration contained in paragraph 4 of the decree, and the case will be remitted to the Court of first instance for disposal on the other questions. The plaintiffs, who have been discharging the duties of trustees and who came to Court in order to get declaration as to the objects of the trust and to have a proper scheme settled, are entitled to have their costs (both here and on the Original Side) paid out of the estate. As regards the other parties, they will bear their own costs throughout. We may mention that they did not want to take their costs out of the trust estate and even if they had, we do not think we would have been justified in allowing the parties except the plaintiffs to take their costs out of the estate. The memorandum of objection follows the order on the appeal.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by father to pay off debt incurred for purchase of new property, validity of—Antecedent debt, what is—Legal necessity—Sons, failure of, to object at time of alienation, effect of—Delay in objecting, effect of.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the consent of the sons of a Hindu to an alienation by their father may be inferred from their failure to object at the time to the alienation. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Where there is delay in impeaching an alienation by a Hindu father of the family property, the burden of proving that the alienation was not for a legally necessary purpose is upon those who seek to have the alienation set aside. [p. 665, col. 1.]

A sale of a small portion of a joint Hindu family property to pay off a portion of a debt incurred for the purchase of new property may be justified. [p. 665, col. 1.]

A debt, which is only precedent to but not entirely disconnected with the subsequent debt, is not an antecedent debt. [p. 665, col. 1.]

Where a sale is effected by a Hindu father and the bulk of the consideration is found to have been taken for legal necessity, the sons cannot question that sale [p. 665, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 2nd February 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 18th December 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows. On the 3rd of June 1904 a sale deed was executed by four persons, namely, Ram Sukh and his widowed sister-in-law Musammat Jaibasi and Ramdas and his widowed sister-in-law Musammat Balwanta, in favour of the defendants-respondents for the sum of Rs. 800. In this case we are only concerned with the half share belonging to Ramdas and Musammat Balwanta. The suit was brought by the sons of Ramdas, who were alive and adults at the date of the sale, to recover possession of the half share sold by the deed on the ground that the family was joint, the property ancestral, and that there was no legal necessity for the sale. Ramdas is alive and joined as a defendant, but he has taken no part in the case. The Court of first instance decreed the claim on the finding that out of the total consideration of Rs. 800 only Rs. 283 were for necessity, that is to say, that out of the consideration of Rs. 400 paid for the half portion of the property now in suit only Rs. 141-8-0 were for necessity and Rs 258 8-0 were not for necessity. On appeal the District Judge found that the Munsif was not justified in disbelieving the defendants' witnesses as to the consideration for the deed and the objects on which it was expended, and held that legal necessity was established with regard to Rs. 583 of the Rs. 800. He also would by implication appear to have held that the rest of the consideration except Rs. 17 (which might be disregarded) was in payment of antecedent debts. He further held that the fact that the alienation impugned was not called in question by the plaintiffs for just on twelve years raised a presumption, in the absence of some evidence to the contrary, that the alienation was made with their consent. In this appeal it is urged that the facts found by the learned District Judge to constitute legal necessity in respect of Rs. 583 would not constitute such necessity on the proper view of the law and further that as there was no distinct finding of the District Judge that the remaining Rs. 217 were for legal necessity, the decree giving the defendants possession of the half village should have been made subject to the payment by them of one half of Rs. 217.

The defendants' case was that Rs. 250 were paid to one Deo Kali and Rs. 283 to one Basant, due to them in respect of a purchase of other Zemindari property effected by Ramdas and Ram Sukh a short time before the deed now in question, and that Rs. 50 were paid for the purchase of a pair of bullocks. It is contended by the appellants that a debt incurred for purchase of Zemindari property on behalf of the family is not a debt for legally necessary purposes. From the evidence of the defendants' witness, Taqakul Husain, it appears that the vendors represented to the defendants that this purchase was for the benefit of the family. I am of the opinion that, considering that the plaintiffs have waited so long to impeach the alienation, the burden of proof that these representations were not true was on them. There is no evidence to show that the purchase of this property was not for the benefit of the family. It could scarcely be urged that the manager of the family can never run into debt on behalf of the family. In Krishnaswami Doss, In re (1) it was held that a sale of ancestral immoveable property for the purpose of buying new property was not per se an improper alienation and that each such sale would have to be judged on its merits. It would follow that a sale of a small portion of the family property to pay off a portion of a debt incurred for the purchase of new property may be justified. It was for the plaintiffs to prove that the purchase was not justified and they have failed to do so. I also concur in the finding of the learned District Judge that the consent of the sons of Ramdas to the alienation may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be inferred from their failure to object at the time to the alienation. They were all grown up at the time. It has been suggested by the respondents that in any case the Rs. 583 raised by the sale in suit, in order to pay off the money due for the new purchase, would be an antecedent debt. This I cannot concede. It would appear from the evidence that when the purchase of the new property was effected, there was an intention to sell off this family property to raise part of the purchase money. The debt then, therefore, although precedent, could not be said to be entirely disconnected in fact with the sale of the family property. As to the second plea the evidence of the first three witnesses produced by the defendants, if believed, would show that Rs. 200 out of the balance of Rs. 217 were advanced for the payment of antecedent debts. The District Judge has stated that he believes these witnesses. Impliedly, therefore, he must have believed the evidence that the Rs. 200 were for the payment of antecedent debts. This is a finding of fact which cannot now be impugned. There remains only Rs. 17 of the consideration to account for and this sum may obviously be disregarded, it being impossible to sell property for the exact sum required at the moment by the necessities of the Hindu family. See Buniyad Husain v. Mata Din Singh (2).

On the above grounds, therefore, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Udipi, dated the 4th March 1918, in Small Cause Suit No. 68 of 1918.

SESHAPPA HEGGADE v. CHANDAYYA HEGGADE.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Petitioner.—The right to maintenance of a member of an Aliyasanthana family is property. What was assigned was the arrears that had already fallen due to plaintiff's assignor. The assignment is not opposed to section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. The right is based on the ownership of property. Maradevi v. Pammaka (1), Manikkath Ammini Ammal v. Nanikkath Padmanabha Menon (2) Clauses (d) and (h) of section 6 do not militate against the rule. Clause (d) refers to a right personal to the owner. Clause (h) relates to transfers of property. A right to future maintenance may not be assigned or attached but the right to past maintenance may.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondent.—The right to maintenance can neither be attached nor assigned. Plaintiff's claim is unsustainable under the general law. Bhyrub Chunder Ghose v. Nobo Chunder Gooho (3), Narbudabai v. Mahadeo Narayan (4). The assignment is also opposed to clauses (d) and (h) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. See Palikandy Mammad v. Chingoran Keloth Valia Arpa (5).

In any event, if the right to maintenance is property, the suit is not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. Saminatha Ayyan v. Mangalathammal (6).

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—I do not propose to express any opinion on the question which my learned brother has dealt with—whether the plaintiff's claim is sustainable. My reason is that there is no decree before us, which we are entitled to test with reference to the considerations arising in connection with that question. The decree was passed by a Small Cause Court without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the claim is a claim for maintenance. See Saminatha Ayyan v. Mangalathammal (6). The only order we can pass, in my opinion, is that the decree be set aside and that the lower Court do return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Each party will bear his own costs throughout up to date.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This is a suit for arrears of maintenance by an assignee. The assignor is a member of an Aliyasanthana family. The suit was brought in the Small Cause Court for arrears which had already fallen due. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the assignment is opposed to the Transfer of Property Act. In my opinion, this conclusion is wrong. I do not think that section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act is opposed to the assignability of the right which the plaintiff seeks to enforce. It is undoubtedly property, because it is now well settled that the right of a member of a Malabar Tarwad or of an Aliyasanthana family to maintenance is based on ownership of property, and not because he is entitled to be paid a fixed allowance by the Karnavan who must be regarded as the true owner of the property. In Maradevi v. Pammaka (1) this principle was laid down and this is followed in a case to which I was a party, viz., Manikath Ammini Ammal v. Nanikkath Padmanabha Menon (2). In an earlier case Chandu v. Raman (7), this Court held that the right to maintenance by a junior member of a Tarwad can be made a charge upon a specific portion of the Tarwad property. Therefore, it seems to me to be clear that the right to maintenance which a member of an Aliyasanthana family or a junior member of a Tarwad possesses is property, and, therefore, the first portion of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act is complied with. Mr. Adiga for the respondent contended that the assignability is opposed to clauses (d) and (h) of the same section. Some support is given to this argument by the observations of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Palikandy Mammad v. Chingoran Keloth Valia Appa (5). The question before Sadasiva Aiyar and Moore, JJ., in that case related to the attachability of the right to maintenance under a money decree obtained against a widow. Therefore, the present question did not arise for decision directly in that case, but Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in coming to the conclusion that the right to maintenance was not attachable, refers to clauses (d) and (h) of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. I will take clause (d) to

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 383; 36 M. 203; 11 M. L. T. 112; (1912) M. W. N. 109; 22 M. L. J. 309.
(2) 48 Ind. Cas. 104; 41 M. 1075; 35 M. L. J. 509; 24 M. L. T. 498.
(3) 5 W. R. 111.
(4) 5 B. 99; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 68.
(5) 34 Ind. Cas. 381; 40 M. 302; 30 M. L. J. 361.
(6) 20 M. 29; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 21.
(7) 11 M. 378; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 264.

which the learned Judge refers. That refers to an interest in property restricted in its enjoyment to the owner personally. I do not think it can be said that the right to maintenance is a right of that kind. That clause contemplates cases like service-tenures or the office of an Archaka in a temple, which is restricted in its enjoyment and cannot be transferred by the office holder. Then as regards clause (h), the transfer must not be opposed to the nature of the interest affected thereby. This again relates to cases of property which are known as extra commercium, for example, transfer to a non Hindu of a right in a religious office : that would be opposed to the nature of the interest affected thereby. I do not think that a right to maintenance is covered by either clause (d) or clause (h) of section 6. I am supported to some extent by the observations of the learned Judges who decided Annapurni Nachiar v. Swaminatha Chettiar (8), wherein they say that at any rate where, as here, the amount payable is subsequently fixed by agreement or by decree, a transfer of a widow's right to maintenance from her late husband's estate would be good. I understand the distinction to be this, that you cannot attach maintenance which is to fall due at some future time but where the maintenance has become payable, it is attachable. That is well settled. Therefore, so long as a decree-holder does not attempt to anticipate an income which is to fall due, there can be no objection to his obtaining decree and subsequently attaching the allowance when it becomes payable. Subject to this limitation, I fail to see why a right to maintenance should not be assigned. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Transfer of Property Act is not opposed to the assignability of the maintenance of a member of a Malabar Tarwad or of a member of an Aliyasanthana family.

Mr. Adiga next attempted to argue that under the general law a right to maintenance should not be assigned and he quoted two cases, one in Bhyrub Chunder Ghose v. Nubo Chunder Gooho (3) and another in Narbadabai v. Mahadeo Narayan (4), in support of this proposition. So far as my experience goes in Madras, it has always been regarded that a right to maintenance which has already fallen due can be assigned and can be attached and, as I said before, there is nothing either in the Transfer of Property Act or in the Civil Procedure Code which prohibits such a transfer or such an attachment. I am, therefore, not prepared to hold that under the general law a right to maintenance is not assignable.

This conclusion lands Mr. Sitarama Rao's client in another difficulty. If it is in the nature of a right in property and a right to maintenance that he has purchased, then the suit will not lie in a Small Cause Court. The decision in Saminatha Ayyan v. Mangaluthammal (6) is in point. Even the decision quoted by the learned Vakil, Achutan Nair v. Kunjunni Nair (9), shows that such a suit is taken away from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court. I would, therefore, direct that the decree be set aside and that the lower Court do return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. I agree with my learned brother as to the order as to costs which he proposes to make.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 63—Secondary evidence—Document referred to in previous statement—Statement made by party or authorised agent—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), Chap. VII A—Lands held rent-free—Grant, lands not held under—Assessment of rent, whether permissible.

RATIPAL SINGH v. UDAI BHAN PARTAB SINGH.

A statement made by a party or his authorised agent in a previous suit, in which he refers to a document which is against his interest, is secondary evidence of that document. [p. 669, col. 2.]

Chapter VII A of the Oudh Rent Act does not apply to lands held rent-free merely by reason of their being so held, if it is found that they are not held under any grant. [p. 670, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 2nd April 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 30th May 1916.

Mr. Mohammad Wasim holding brief of Mr. Haidar Husain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiffs-appellants for a declaration that in respect of certain plots of total area of 15 bighas 8 biswas in the village of Jitpur they own the subordinate right known as didari. This means that they were once the superior proprietors of the village in which the lands are situated and on transfer to the predecessors-in interest of the present proprietors of the village they received these lands by way of consolation for the loss of their superior proprietary rights. When these lands were given, the new superior proprietors became liable for the revenue payable in respect of them and consequently the old proprietors, who retained these lands occupied the position of under proprietors in respect of them. The cause of action as stated in the plaint consists of the following alleged facts:—

(a) that the plaintiffs and their ancestors have been in proprietary and adverse possession of the said lands from before the former settlement,

(b) that the defendant Zamindar denied the plaintiffs' right by suing them for assessment of rent as if they were mere rent free holders,

(c) that the Board of Revenue, when hearing a third appeal against two decisions in favour of the assessment of rent suit, directed the present plaintiffs to sue in the Civil Court for a declaration of their alleged right.

Now the fact (a) is stated in a very equivocal manner. It is not clear whether the plaintiffs rely on a title based on grant or whether they rely on a title based on adverse possession. In the two lower Courts they were allowed to take up both pleas alternatively. The learned Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, without coming to a clear finding as to whether the title of the plaintiffs was based on a grant, found that this title had at any rate accrued by adverse possession. In appeal the learned District Judge of Fyzabad found that there was no evidence to prove a grant and also that adverse possession to this particular land was not proved. Both these findings are impugned in appeal before me.

The following facts have been proved by the evidence. The village in which these lands are situated was originally owned by the descendants of one Basawan in four branches to be seen in the genealogical tree on page 3 of Exhibit 6 which refers to the family as it existed in 1877. They sold the village in portions to Jaidat, the predecessor-in-interest of the present defendant. Their last share of the village was sold in 1856 and in 1864 the defendant's predecessor-in-interest got a decree for proprietary right. See Exhibit A2. In 1870 Nageshar, representative of one of the four branches of Basawan's family, applied in the Settlement Court for a declaration that he and his family possessed the didari right in respect of 46 bighas 6 biswas. He arrived at a compromise with the superior proprietor, whereby he was recorded as having the right in respect of 20 bighas 19 biswas. As regards the other 22 bighas 7 biswas it was agreed that the ex-proprietors should be entered as mere tenants of these. It is common ground that the lands in suit in this case were not comprised in the 20 bighas and 19 biswas, but it is strenuously maintained by the appellants that they must be deemed to be comprised in the 22 bighas 7 biswas. The compromise is Exhibit A6, dated the 17th February 1870, and in this compromise it is stated that Nageshar had been claiming the didari rights on behalf of the entire body of the ex proprietors. The compromise states that if any member of the family was subsequently to claim any didari right, he must get it out of the 20 bighas 19 biswas. Exhibit A5 is the order of the Court accepting the compromise. Subsequently to this two other members of the family, Huba Singh and Ganga Prasad Singh claimed, lands as their sir in separate cases. Their names do not appear in the genealogical tree mentioned, as they must have died before 1877. Their claims were all dismissed on the ground that they were entitled to nothing outside the 22 bighas 7 biswas. Exhibits A7 and A10 are the claims, Exhibits A8 and A11 are the plots and Exhibits A9 and A12 are the judgments of the Court. In the Record of Rights of the Regular Settlement of 1870 Gajraj and his cousin, Sukhnandan, appear as ordinary tenants of 15 bighas 10 biswas. It is maintained by the appellants that this area was part of the 22 bighas 7 biswas. In 1871 the Taluqdar issued a notice of ejectment against Gajraj in respect of the 14 bighas 17½ biswas in his name. The notice of ejectment was cancelled because the Mukhtar of the Taluqdar made the following statement:—

"My client, i. e., the Taluqdar, wrote a Sanad for one bigha out of every eight bighas. Mr. Clark told us to pay Rs. 523 due by Gajraj and Nageshar. We did so. He then told us to confiscate the didari until they repaid. Plaintiff (i. e., Gajraj) has not as yet paid rent, so I issued notice of ejectment. They (meaning Gajraj) never sued at settlement. Gajraj owed Rs. 261-8-0. Nageshar the same. We compromised with the latter. We never sued Gajraj for the money but thought Mr. Clark's order which was verbal sufficient. We did not sue for confiscation of the didari nor the adjustment of rent."

Again in 1887 the Taluqdar issued a notice of ejectment against one Chet in respect of 7 bighas 9½ biswas. It is stated in the judgment in that case, Exhibit 6, that Chet got his title from Gaya Prasad, who is a distant cousin of Gajraj as shown in the genealogical tree referred to. It would appear, however, that Chet got the difference between the whole 22 bighas 7 biswas referred to in Nageshar's compromise and 14 bighas 17½ biswas in respect of which the notice of ejectment referred to above was issued against Gajraj. 22 bighas 7 biswas less 14 bighas 17½ biswas leave 7 bighas 9½ biswas. This notice of ejectment was also cancelled on the ground of the Taluqdar's admission in the previous case against Gajraj.

We now come to the present litigation. This litigation commences with a suit for assessment of rent on the present appellants in respect of 15 bighas 8 biswas. The Assistant Collector and the Collector in appeal held that the appellants could not prove that they were didaris, chiefly because they failed to prove their relationship with the original proprietors. In third appeal to the Board of Revenue the appellants were told to establish their claim to didari right in respect of the 15 bighas 8 biswas in the Civil Court.

Two questions arise for decision by me in appeal:—

1. Was the District Judge right in holding that the appellants had failed to prove their title by grant?

2. Was the District Judge right in holding that they had failed to prove their title by adverse possession?

As regards question 1, the District Judge has held that the sanad to which Ramjas, agent of the Taluqdar, referred in his admission (made in Gajraj's case), quoted at length above, is not forthcoming and that no secondary evidence of its contents has been given. It appears to me that this statement of the agent was itself secondary evidence of the sanad. Again he has held that no decree for didari rights was obtained in the Settlement Court in respect of the land in suit. This must be admitted. But it is admitted by Counsel on both sides that there is no limitation to a time within which an under-proprietor, basing his claim on the fact that his title was existing previous to the proclamation of the 15th March 1856, can get a decree affirming his title provided that no event has occurred to impose on him the liability to sue within a special period. In this case, however, such an event has occurred. As a result of the litigation in the Settlement Court between Nageshar and the Taluqdar an entry in the Settlement Khewat was made that the under-proprietary rights existed only in respect of 20 bighas 19 biswas. It is the plaintiffs' own case that the 15 bighas 8 biswas now in question fell within the 22 bighas 7 biswas in respect of which the occupiers were entered as mere tenants, that is to say, as persons having something less than an under-proprietary right. When that entry was made, the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest should have brought a suit for declaration of his under-proprietary right. The period of limitation for bringing such a suit would be six years. Not having done so, he has lost his right to a declaratory decree on the basis of a sanad. It makes no difference that before the six years were up, the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest may have, in contesting an ejectment notice by the Taluqdar, raised the claim to be an under-proprietor in respect of these 15 bighas 8 biswas. So far as they are claiming a title by a grant, they are time-barred.

As to the claim based on adverse possession, it is urged by the appellants that on the date when the Taluqdar's notice of ejectment against them as ordinary tenants was cancelled owing to the Taluqdar's agent having admitted the giving of a sanad, they must be admitted to have held the didari right by adverse possession. The learned District Judge would have allowed this contention apparently if he had found it proved that the 15 bighas 8 biswas now in suit were identical with the 14 bighas 17½ biswas in respect of which the notice of ejectment was issued in 1871. He has pointed out that the area is different and that even if the area had been the same, there is nothing to show that the lands are identical. In view of the facts shown above, I am of the opinion that the prima facie case was made out that the lands were identical It was never suggested how the appellants could be holding the 15 bighas 8 biswas in suit unless they were the 14 bighas 17½ biswas which they held in 1871. The slight difference in area may well be explained by presuming either difference in measurement or some encroachment.

The respondent's Counsel has put in a comparative statement showing the plots in the cultivation of Gajraj and Sangram Singh, the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs, at the time of the regular settlement, the plots in the cultivation of Nihal Singh, a brother of Huba Singh, whose suit for sir rights was dismissed and the plots in possession of absolute strangers. He contends that this statement shows only 6¼ bighas as in the possession of Gajraj and Sangram Singh. He, therefore, maintains that only 6¼ bighas out of the 15 bighas 8 biswas can be deemed to be included in the 14 bighas 17½ biswas in respect of which the notice of ejectment was cancelled in 1871. This reasoning is not valid in my opinion. In the settlement papers plots were only shown in the names of actual occupiers. Nihal and the other "strangers" may have been in possession of the plots shown in their names as holding from Gajraj and Sangram Singh. The fact that Huba Singh's suit for sir rights was dismissed in respect of two plots which fall within the 15 bighas 8 biswas now in suit would not prevent Gajraj or Sangram Singh having possession of those plots at the date of the notice of ejectment. Indeed this comparative statement at least proves for certain that a part of the 15 bighas 8 biswas now in dispute was held by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs at the date of the notice of ejectment in 1871. It, therefore, strengthens the plaintiffs' case.

For our knowledge of what happened in the ejectment case brought by the Taluqdar against Gajraj in 1871, we are dependent upon Exhibit 6, which is a judgment of Mr. Dyson, District Judge, dated the 19th April 1887, in a similar ejectment case against Chet referred to above. It does not, however, appear to be denied that Gajraj set up the didari right in 14 bighas 17½ biswas in that case and that his claim to such right was upheld From that time on he must be deemed to have been holding the land under a claim to the didari right. In 1877 the Limitation Act of 1877 contained a provision (not existing in Act XIV of 1859) similar to section 28 of the present Limitation Act, IX of 1908. This provision is that at the determination of the period limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property his right to such property shall be extinguished. The question then is whether the Taluqdar could have sued to eject Gajraj and what was the period of limitation for assessment of rent under Chapter VIIA of the Rent Act, but that Chapter was not enacted until 1901. In any case it does not appear to me that Chapter VIIA has any application to the present case. The grant by the Taluqdar under the sanad has never been revived and the appellants' title does not rest on any grant. It is urged by the respondent's Counsel that the Board of Revenue has interpreted the words in section 107A of the Oudh Rent Act that the proprietor may sue to resume possession of or to have rent assessed on any land purporting to be held rent free, whether by grant in writing or otherwise, to mean that the Taluqdar can sue under this section merely on the ground that a person is holding rent-free*. The Board of Revenue may have held that when land is held rent free, in the absence of evidence to the contrary it is to be presumed to be held under a grant. But I cannot believe that it has held that notwithstanding evidence that a land is not held under a grant, the section will apply merely by reason of the land being occupied rent-free. In this case it has been held proved on the respondent's own contention that the land cannot be deemed to be held under a grant. From the date of the litigation between Nageshar and the Taluqdar in 1870 the land was held by the plaintiffs in adverse possession. The correct view of the case appears to me to be this. The Taluqdar could have sued any time after 1870 for the ejectment of Gajraj as a person who had no title whatever. The suit should have been brought in the ordinary Civil Court and not in a Rent Court. As the Taluqdar failed to bring such a suit, the appellants must be deemed to have acquired didari right in the land by adverse possession. It has also been suggested that the admission of Ramjas on behalf of the Taluqdar amounted to an acknowledgment of Gajraj's rights. This, in my opinion, is not so. Reading the statement quoted above of Ramjas' agent in the light of the proceedings between Nageshar and the Taluqdar in the Settlement Court and in the light of the fact that under proprietary rights were confiscated until revived by the order of the Court, it cannot be said that the agent admitted any subsisting right of Gajraj at the date of the ejectment case.

I have omitted to allude to the fact that in the Jamabandi of the current settlement the plaintiffs are recorded in the remark column of the Jamabandi as holding as didars of the 15 bighas 8 biswas. The respondent's Counsel has objected that the Jamabandi is not a register which the Settlement Officer had to prepare and that, therefore, section 57 of the Land Revenue Act will raise no presumption as to the correctness of this entry. He is not correct in this plea. Section 55 of the Land Revenue Act prescribes as one of the registers to be prepared by a Settlement Officer a register of persons cultivating or otherwise occupying lands. It also requires the nature and class of their tenures to be entered. Rule 103 of the Patwari Rules in the Board's Circulars, Department VII, states that the Khatauni-Jamabandi is a register of persons cultivating or otherwise occupying land and that the record shall be prepared in a given form. The form given shows that the Khatauni-Jamabandi is a single sheet with sixteen columns, of which columns one to nine together with any remarks regarding them in column sixteen constitute the Khatauni and the remaining columns constitute the Jamabandi. It is, therefore, clear that this entry in what the Counsel calls the remarks column of the Jamabandi is really a portion of the Khatauni or register of cultivators. The entry was, therefore, prima facie evidence. As to the learned District Judge's remark that this entry is discounted by the fact that the plaintiffs are not described as didars in the Khasras, the Khasras are no presumptive evidence and so the absence of the entry in the Khasras is immaterial. Indeed the absence of the mention in the Khasra and the presence of it in the Khatauni shows that the entry in the latter was made under the direction of the Settlement Officer. As to the remark that the Settlement Officer had no power to determine titles at the last settlement it must be presumed that the Settlement Officer acted regularly. Under section 54 of the Land Revenue Act he had power to enter undisputed entries. We must presume that this entry was not disputed at the time. The entry is, therefore, in favour of the plaintiff both as to the identity of the 15 bighas 8 biswas with the land in respect of which the notice of ejectment was issued in 1871 and also in favour of their allegation of having acquired the didari rights in the 15 bighas 8 biswas somehow or other.

My finding then is that Gajraj, the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs, acquired the right he claimed by adverse possession for 12 years subsequent to 1871. The Taluqdar's suit for assessment of rent against the present appellants could have been dismissed on this ground and also because the facts show that there was never any grant so that Chapter VII A was inapplicable.

I allow the appeal with costs in all Courts.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 95—Common manager, whether can be appointed to share of estate.

Under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the appointment of a common manager to a share of an estate, and not to the whole estate, is illegal.

Rule against an order of the District Judge, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 29th May 1917.

Babus Biraj Mohan Majumdar, Prakas Chandra Mojumdar and Satish Chandra Munshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—In this case it appears that on an application made on the 3rd September 1907 one Amulya Chandra Banerjee was appointed common manager under the provisions of section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of two estates, namely, Estate Dihi Adgola bearing No. 76 or 79 of the Bogra Collectorate and Dihi Suratoil or a 13-annas 15 gandas 2-karas share therein spoken of as a Subam and apparently representing a separate estate created by partition. Amulya Chandra Banerjee died sometime in the month of April 1916 and thereupon, after directing the issue of and endeavouring to serve notices upon all the proprietors of these estates, the District Judge proceeded to appoint a successor of the said Amulya Chandra Banerjee. Subsequently on the 20th September 1916 the District Judge did appoint one Nogendra Chandra Ganguli to be the common manager on the conditions and in the terms and with the powers under which Amulya Chandra Banerjee had held the office. Meanwhile it appears that of the Dihi Suratoil of which Amulya Chandra Banerjee had been appointed common manager, a certain number of shares had been excluded from the common management. It is, therefore, urged here that the appointment of Nogendra Chandra Ganguli, being an appointment to a share of an estate and not to the whole estate, is not in accordance with law. Another objection urged, which is common to both these estates, is that notices have not in fact been served upon all the co-sharer proprietors. The parties who appear here, however, did receive notice and did in fact appear before the District Judge. If it be the case that any of the other co sharer proprietors did not receive notice, they have made no complaint either before the District Judge or here, and we need not further consider this objection. The objection, however, taken in the case of Dihi Suratoil appears to be well-founded. It has been laid down in a number of cases in this Court that the appointment of a common manager must be to the entire estate and not to a portion thereof.

In so far, therefore, as the appointment of Nogendra Chandra Ganguli to be the common manager in respect of Dihi Suratoil or a portion thereof is concerned, we direct that the said appointment be set aside and that the learned District Judge do in respect of that estate commence proceedings anew. In so far as he has been appointed common manager to the Dihi Adgola No. 76 or 79 of the Bogra Collectorate, the appointment will not be interfered with.

This Rule is accordingly made absolute to the extent indicated above. We make no order as to costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 58, 145—Execution of decree—Arrest of judgment-debtor—Surety bond for release of judgment-debtor, whether can be enforced in execution proceedings.

A security bond executed in favour of a decree-holder to obtain the release of a judgment-debtor from imprisonment in execution, and filed in Court, whereupon the release of the judgment-debtor is ordered under the proviso to section 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, must be regarded as a matter of record in the Court as much as if it had been executed to the Court itself, and is consequently enforceable against the surety in proceedings in execution. [p. 672, col 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Bellary, in Execution Petition No. 18 of 1918 (I. A. No. 258 of 1918).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar and D Srinivasa Row, for the Appellant:—The lower Court should not have issued the warrant against the surety. The contract was entered into out of Court and the decree-holder could only enforce the terms of the bond by suit. The fact that the bond was executed in connection with the execution proceedings against the judgment debtor will not affect the decree-holder's remedy. See Subbaraya Pillai v. Sathanatha Pandaram (1) and Nadanaligi Kurugodappa v. Angadi Soogamma (2).

The mere filing of the bond in Court, which was not expressly asked to take action, will not entitle the decree-holder to enforce it in execution.

No doubt there is a stipulation in the bond itself for its enforcement in execution. But the Court cannot acquire jurisdiction, which it has not, by the consent of parties.

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachari, for the Respondent:—It is not correct to say that the agreement between the parties was out of Court. The bond was filed in Court impliedly with appellant's consent. It had become a matter of record. Secondly, the appellant has expressly submitted to execution proceedings in the bond. He is estopped from questioning the proceedings which the decree-holder had a right to take.

JUDGMENT.—In this case appellant and another person executed a security bond to the respondent, who held a decree against one Narayana Row, to obtain the release of the last mentioned from his imprisonment in execution. The bond was filed in the lower Court with respondent's application for the release of Narayana Row; and his release was ordered under the proviso to section 58 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The respondent subsequently applied for a warrant of arrest against appellant, as he failed to pay the decree amount in accordance with the provisions of the bond. This appeal is against the order of the lower Court issuing warrant.

The appeal is argued here on a ground not apparently relied on in the lower Court, that the bond having been given out of Court can be enforced only by suit, not by proceedings in execution of the decree in connection with which it was given; and no doubt, if the facts were as this statement of the argument assumes them, the decision in Subbaraya Pillai v. Sathanatha Pandaram (1) and the observations of Spencer, J., in Nadanaligi Kurugodappa v. Angadi Soogamma (2) would justify it. But the facts actually before us differ from those assumed in material respects.

Firstly, as already stated, the security-bond was filed in Court and was left there. The Court no doubt was not asked to consider its terms or their propriety. But it was certainly asked to take action, statedly on the ground that the bond had been given; and, as the bond itself refers to the request which preceded its execution, it must be taken to have been presented to the Court with the concurrence of the surety and judgment-debtor.

It must accordingly be regarded as matter of record in the Court as much as if it had been executed to the Court itself.

Secondly, the bond provides that in case of the judgment-debtor's default, execution can be taken against him. It is argued that the parties cannot give the Court jurisdiction by their consent. But the facts of the present case resemble those in Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (3) the circumstances that the bonds in question therein were executed to the Court not affecting the general ground on which the decision proceeded, that "the respondent had, by the proceedings in question, come under an obligation, which was capable of being enforced by proceedings in execution" and that "upon the ordinary principles of estoppel he could not be heard to say" that the relief claimed was not obtainable under the decree.

For these reasons the lower Court's decision must be confirmed, the appeal against order being dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow, mortgage executed by, jointly with reversioners—Legal necessity—Presumption—Reversioner, whether can impugn mortgage.

A joint mortgage by a widow and the reversionary heirs of her husband, detailing the property mortgaged by each, shows that the reversioners assented to the mortgage by the widow, and such assent is presumptive evidence of the existence of legal necessity. Until that presumption is rebutted, it is not open to one of the reversioners, who eventually succeeds to the reversionary rights, to impugn the mortgage made by the widow. [p. 675, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 2nd March 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 24th August 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a two-pies share of the village Rustampur, which belonged to Bakhtauri, who died in 1878, leaving a widow, Musammat Maharani. Bakhtauri had two brothers, Bhawani and Jhaulal Bhawani died leaving three sons, Chhedi, Sukhnandan and Matadin. On the 13th August 1881 Musammat Maharani, Chhedi and Jhaulal executed a mortgage of a 4-pies share of the said village in favour of Hazari Lal in lieu of Rs. 225. The mortgage deed recited that each of the mortgagors had separately mortgaged her or his respective share and had taken a specific amount of the mortgage money for her or his own use. In regard to Musammat Maharani it was stated that she had mortgaged her 2-pies share in lieu of Rs. 112-8-0. The deed of mortgage provided that the mortgagee should get possession over the mortgaged property; but it is stated by Hazari Lal that he never got possession. Chhedi and Jhaulal paid their portion of the mortgage money and redeemed the 2-pies share which they had mortgaged.

On the 14th June 1883 Musammat Maharani mortgaged her 2-pies share with Kunji Lal in lieu of Rs. 200, out of which Rs. 150 were left by her with the mortgagee for payment to Hazari Lal on account of his prior mortgage of the 13th August 1881. This mortgage was simple and was attested by Sukhnandan. It provided for payment of the mortgage money with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and authorised the mortgagee to sue for foreclosure, if the mortgage money was not paid within a specified period.

In 1893 Kunji Lal sued for foreclosure on foot of that mortgage and got a decree which was subsequently made absolute. In pursuance of the decree absolute for foreclosure, Kunji Lal got possession over the mortgaged property on the 18th November 1895. The defendants Nos. 1 to 15 are the legal representatives of Kunji Lal.

Musammat Maharani died in 1914. Jhaulal was then alive and was the nearest reversionary heir of her husband. On the 7th

September 1916 the legal representatives of Jhaulal joined Chhedi, Sukhnandan and Matadin in making a gift of the 2-annas share left by Musammat Maharani in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff filed the present suit for possession of that share, alleging that the mortgage effected by Musammat Maharani in favour of Kunji Lal was made without legal necessity. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim. Its finding was that the mortgage was made for legal necessity with the consent of Jhaulal and Sukhnandan. The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that no such legal necessity or consent was established.

Its finding would have been fatal to this appeal but for the fact that out of the consideration money advanced under the mortgage of the 14th June 1883, Rs. 150 were applied to the discharge of a prior mortgage made by Musammat Maharani in favour of Hazari Lal, to which Jhaulal and Chhedi had consented by joining in the mortgage. It is true that Jhaulal and Chhedi had, by virtue of that mortgage, borrowed some money for their own purposes and mortgaged their property too; but the fact that a joint mortgage was executed by Musammat Maharani, Jhaulal and Chhedi, detailing the property mortgaged by each, shows that Jhaulal and Chhedi had assented to the mortgage of a 2 annas share by Musammat Maharani. Such assent is, as pointed out in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiarpa Gounden (1), presumptive evidence of the existence of a legal necessity. That presumption not having been rebutted, it is not open to Jhaulal, who eventually succeeded to the reversionary rights, to impugn the mortgage, made by Musammat Maharani in favour of Hazari Lal. The money due to Hazari Lal was paid by Kunji Lal out of the consideration left with him by Musammat Maharani under her subsequent mortgage of the 14th June 1883. It does not appear how the sum of Rs. 150 was arrived at. Hazari Lal states that Kunji Lal paid him that amount; but inasmuch as the mortgage of the 13th August 1881 did not provide for the payment of any interest, no damages recoverable for the failure of the mortgagor to deliver possession could be added to the mortgage money. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, be made liable to pay anything more than Rs. 112-8-0 secured by the mortgage of the 17th August 1881, with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem as stipulated in the subsequent deed. The amount which the plaintiff is thus liable to pay is Rs. 301-8-0.

The appeal is accordingly allowed and the claim of the plaintiff decreed for possession of the disputed property subject to the payment of Rs. 301-8-0 to the defendants Nos. 1 to 15. The parties will, in the circumstances, bear their own costs throughout. In case of non-payment the suit shall stand dismissed.

SHEIKH BAHADUR SARKAR— DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 89, 115—Accounts, suit for, by principal against agent—Failure of agent to render account, whether amounts to refusal within meaning of Art. 89—Limitation.

Article 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is applicable to a suit for accounts by a principal against his agent, although there is an agreement by the agent to render accounts every year. Article 115 of the same Schedule does not apply to such a suit. [p. 677, col. 2.]

The mere failure of the agent to render accounts on demand does not amount to refusal to render accounts within the meaning of Article 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. The question whether the failure of the agent to render accounts amounts to refusal within the meaning of Article 89, depends upon the circumstances of each case. [p. 676, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 31st August 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, Iswarganj, dated the 9th December 1914.

BHABATARINI DEBI v. SHEIKH BAHADUR SARKAR.

Babu Shama Charan Maitra, for the Appellant.

Babu Surja Kant Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts by a Zemindar against his Tahsildar. It is found that the defendant acted as plaintiff's Tahsildar from 1309 to 1317 B. S., when he left service. He did not render accounts nor did he submit the account papers. The suit was instituted in April 1913.

The Court of first instance passed a preliminary decree directing the defendant to render accounts for the entire period. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the claim for the period 1309 to 1316 B. S. was barred by limitation and the defendant was liable to render accounts for Baisakh 1317 only.

A suit for accounts against an agent is governed by Article 89 of the Limitation Act. That Article provides that the period of limitation for a suit by "a principal against his agent for movable property received by the latter and not accounted for" is 3 years from the date when the account is during the continuance of the agency demanded and refused, or where no such demand is made when the agency terminates. It has been held by the Judicial Committee that "movable property" in Article 89 includes money: see Asghar Ali v. Khurshed Ali Khan (1).

The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to bring the suit within 3 years of the termination of the agency, unless there was demand and refusal during the continuance of the agency.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the contract was to submit accounts on the expiry of each year, and as accounts were demanded every year and the defendant neglected to render the accounts, such neglect is tantamount to refusal. So limitation of 3 years runs from every breach and as such plaintiff's claim for accounts from 1309 to the end of 1316 is time-barred.

The question for consideration, therefore, is whether a mere failure to render accounts amounts to a refusal within the meaning of Article 89. The question has been considered in several cases in this Court. In Hari Narain Ghose v. Administrator General of Bengal (2) the agent, on account being demanded from him, at first promised to render it in Assin 1279 but never fulfilled the promise, and the learned Judges were of opinion that he "virtually refused to render the account at that time". The suit, however, was brought in Assar 1282 and was, therefore, not barred, and the learned Judges in holding that the suit was not barred made that observation. The observation was relied upon in the case of Ersin Sarkar v. Biradi Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (3). In the case of Madhusudan Sen v. Akhil Chandra Das (4) it was held that if there has been a demand, failure to respond to the demand is refusal within the meaning of Article 89 The learned Judge (Mookerjee, J.), however, observed, "there may, however, be cases where omission to render accounts may not be a refusal within the meaning of Article 89." On the other hand in the case of Jhapijhanessa Bibee v. Rama Sundari (5) Coxe J., observed: "I must confess, speaking with the greatest respect, that I feel some difficulty in holding that the mere neglect to render accounts which the defendant has agreed to render can be deemed to be a refusal within the meaning of Article 89."

Although an express refusal may not be necessary to bring a case under Article 89 (although Dr. Whitley Stokes is of opinion that "refusal" in the Article means an "express refusal:" see Anglo-Indian Codes, Volume II page 987) because the agent may never expressly refuse to render accounts, we are of opinion that the question whether the failure of the agent to render accounts amounts to a refusal within the meaning of Article 89 depends upon the circumstances of each case. The failure to render accounts every year may be due to a variety of reasons, such as illness of the agent or the account papers not being ready. Sometimes the accounts cannot be prepared within a short time after the expiry of the year, and once they fall into arrears there is sometimes considerable delay in rendering accounts. Cases of Gomastas not being ready with accounts every year are very common.

(5) 16 Ind. Cas. 414; 16 C. L. J. 288; 16 C. W. N. 1042 at p. 1048.

Sometimes it is due to mere procrastinations. It cannot be affirmed in such a case that the failure to render accounts necessarily amounts to a refusal. In the present case the plaintiff's Naib stated (as pointed out by the lower Appellate Court), "every year we made demand of accounts and he (the defendant) was all along saying that he would render accounts." The defendant was retained in service and evidently so long as the Gomasta was in service, his promise was relied upon. In the absence of any other circumstances, the mere failure to render accounts in the present case did not constitute a "refusal" within the meaning of Article 89, when the defendant all along said that he would render accounts and this distinguishes the present case from the cases mentioned above.

The defendant agreed to submit account papers yearly. It is contended that Article 115 applied to the case and as there was a breach of obligation on the part of the defendant at the end of each year, the claim for more than 3 years is barred. It seems to us, however, that a suit for accounts and for money due on taking accounts is not a suit for compensation for loss caused by breach of the contract to render accounts. There are no doubt some decisions in support of the view that Article 115 is applicable to such cases: see Moti Lal Bose v. Amin Chand Chattopadhaya (6), Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (3), Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (7) and Jhapijhanessa Bibee v. Rama Sundari (5), though in the last case Coxe, J., felt some difficulty in "regarding a suit for accounts or for the sum found due thereon as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract." On the other hand in the case of Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (8) it was held on a review of the earlier authorities, including the decision of the Judicial Committee in Asghar Ali v. Khurshed Ali Khan (1), that Article 89 is applicable to a suit for accounts by a principal against his agent. The case of Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (8) does not appear to have been considered in the cases of Easin Sarkar v. Barada Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury (3) and Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (7). Then again the cases of Jogendra Nath Roy v Deb Nath Chatterjee (9), Hafezuddin Mandal v Jadu Nath Sahu (10) and Chandra Madhab v. Nabin Chandra (11), Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das (4) show that Article 89 is applicable to such cases. The case of Chandra Madhab v. Nabin Chandra (11) was taken up to the Privy Council [see Nabin Chandra v. Chandra Madhab (12)] and although there was an agreement in that case to render accounts from time to time, Article 89 was applied to the case. We are accordingly of opinion that the suit is governed by Article 89, although there was an agreement to render accounts every year.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is set aside in so far as it disallows accounts from 1309 to the end of 1316. The case will accordingly go back to the Court of first instance in order that accounts may be taken as directed by the preliminary decree of that Court. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Cy pres, doctrine of, applicability of, to India—Sajjadanashin powers and duties of—Court, whether can remove sajjadanashin—"Urs" and "Fatehas", performance of, legality of—Appeal, second—Remand—Matter decided in order of remand, whether can be re-opened.

SUJJADA SHAH v. SHAW HABIT.

The doctrine of cy pres, being in harmony with the spirit of the Muhammadan Law relating to the administration of charities, is applicable to India, and is applied when from lapse of time and change of circumstances it is no longer possible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or donor in the exact way in which he has directed it to be applied but it can only be applied beneficially for similar purposes by different means. [p. 681, col. 2]

A Court has the power to remove a sajadanashin, or to appoint a new man in the office, supposing it to be one which truly involves the performance of the duties of a spiritual and religious character inseparably connected with the personality of the sajadanashin, unless there is very strong and clear evidence of custom and usage by which it can be shown that if the sajadanashin misconducts himself in his office he cannot be interfered with by the Court. The ordinary law of waqfs, with such modifications as may be required by the practice of the institution concerned or of similar institutions, applies to a sajadanashin. [p. 682, cols. 1 & 2.]

The performance of urs and fatehas is valid according to the Muhammadan Law, as administered in India, if these rites involve the distribution of food to the poor. [p. 681, col. 2.]

It is not open to the High Court to re-open any decision arrived at by it in an order of remand in second appeal, when the matter again comes up before it after remand. [p. 680, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Nellore, dated the 12th February 1917, in Original Suit No 50 of 1913.

Messrs. P. R. Ganapathi Aiyar and T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this appeal we are asked to consider a scheme with respect to certain waqf properties in the District of Nellore, which has been framed by the Subordinate Judge under the directions of this Court. In order that our conclusions on the important points raised before us may be fully understood, it is necessary that the history of the institution and the litigation in connection with it should be briefly recited. It appears from the entries in the Inam Register of 18.1 that Fauzdar Abdul Khader Khan, brother of Nawab Wallajah, the ruler of the Carnatic, granted two villages called Velpulagunta and Komalammapadu in Fasli 1185 (about 1775 A. D.) to Hazarath Khaja Rahamtulla Saheb, a religious-minded and pious Mahomedan, "as a present to the Prophet Muhammad for the purpose of feeding the poor." The grant was subsequently confirmed by Nawab Wallajah himself. In the order of confirmation it was stated that the villages were placed in the charge of the donee so that he might feed Syed Mahomedans, good men and poor men and ascribe the virtue to Muhammad (meaning the Prophet). Eight other villages forming part of the waqf and set out in the Inam Register were about the same time purchased by Khaja Rahamtulla Saheb for a nominal price from the then Jagirdar of Udayagiri for the purpose of dedicating them to pious objects, namely, feeding the poor and meeting the expenses of a mosque which Khaja Rahamtulla Saheb had built.

This pious founder died without leaving any issue or heir, but in his lifetime he had nominated his wife's brother's son, one Ghulam Nakshband Saheb, as his successor in charge of the waqf properties. Ghulam Nakshband, apparently a Pathan by birth, was succeeded by his son Mohideen Saheb and on the latter's death, his brother Mahomed Akbar Khan assumed management in disregard of the claims put forward on behalf of the minor son of Mohideen Saheb on Ghulam Rahamtulla Saheb. This was at the time of the Inam inquiry in the sixties. By that time it would seem that the memory of Hazarath Khaja Rahamtulla Saheb, who was virtually the founder of the whole waqf properties, for it was he that was apparently instrumental in inducing the Nawab of the Carnatic to make a free grant of the two villages mentioned above, had, as it often happens, gathered considerable sanctity. His tomb became a shrine and an object of veneration in the locality and people began to resort there to redeem their vows. His Urs came to be celebrated with much ceremony and his tomb gradually began to overshadow the mosque. There can be little doubt that the pious founder himself would have been much surprised at the way his original objects were getting transformed about a century after his death and much more so at the state of things prevailing at the present time. There could be no doubt that his main intention by the endowment was to maintain the mosque built by him in an efficient condition as a house of prayer, so that the religion of Islam might spread in the neighbourhood. The other object which he had in view was to help deserving poor men, especially among the Syeds, who in those days were prominent in Mahomedan society as a cultured and enlightened class and helped much in spreading Islamic civilisation in India. To what extent the original objects which Khaja Rahamatulla Sahib had in view were becoming obscured in the sixties would appear from the prominence which the performance of Urs and Fatehas at the tomb had acquired as a feature of the institution. That, it is needless to point out, could not have been within the contemplation of the founder himself. When we come to more recent times, we find that the so-called Sajjadanashin for the time being began to treat the waqf properties as if they were his private properties. Only some of the religious ceremonies were kept up, which no doubt served to secure the homage of the ignorant Mussalmans of the neighbourhood for the holder of the office and his family. He began to make free grants of waqf properties to his wife and children and to make alienations by way of mortgages and leases for long terms. The mismanagement and misappropriation which were apparent even in the sixties became more and more flagrant, coming to a head in the time of the father of the present appellant Shah Muhammad Usuf and the appellant himself. The list of alienations set out in the plaint is enough to indicate the state of things at the time of the suit. The acting District Judge, Mr. Wallace, before whom the suit (Original Suit No. 21 of 1906) for the removal of the defendant from his office was first tried, summed up his findings in this way: "Finding as I do that the defendant, when he assumed office, acquiesced in all the irregularities and illegal alienations of trust property by his predecessor, that he obtained from him no accounts or record of his administration, that he made no attempts to get back the trust properties improperly alienated, that he has deliberately withheld from the Court important accounts of the trust, that he has neglected to maintain any intelligible system of accounts, that he has produced in Court as the accounts of the trust accounts altogether unreliable and probably fabricated, and this in spite of the warnings conveyed by several Government Officials and that this is done in all probability to hide his acts of misappropriation of the trust funds, that he has given large bonds on his personal security, while practically pledging trust properties therefor, that he has never made any proper enquiries whether the bonds which he allowed to be met from trust funds are chargeable on trust funds, that he has inextricably mixed up his personal credit with the trust credit and regarded them as one and had made no attempt to keep his personal obligations and liabilities separate from those of the trust, that he has not in fact resumed the Inams noted in paragraph above and thus secured their rents for the trust, while he has out of trust property presented his own wife with Inam land, that he has not been properly carrying out the conditions of the endowment and has, without the Court's sanction, ceased the performance of the Urs ceremonies for deceased Sajjadas, that owing to his incompetent administration the allowance due to the founder's descendants and the wages due to servants are irregularly paid or are largely in arrears, I am emphatically unable to hold that his continuance in the office is for the benefit of the trust. I hold that his administration is shown to be grossly incompetent with no check whatever on wholesale frauds and misappropriations and that the trust must inevitably suffer if it remains longer in his hands." The truth and accuracy of that finding has not been seriously challenged in subsequent proceedings and it could not well be, as it is in absolute accordance with the facts.

Mr. Wallace directed the removal of the appellant from the headship of the institution, to which office the designation of Sajjadanashin or rather "Sujjada" was erroneously attached. When the matter came up here, the High Court by its order dated 15th November 1915 remanded the case for finding on some fresh issues among others as to what were the functions of the Sajjadanashin which were in any way distinct from those of an ordinary Mutawalli and were of a spiritual nature? This order was passed in the two Appeals Nos. 244 of 1911 and 109 of 1914 preferred respectively from the decrees in Original Suit No. 1 of 1906 already mentioned and Original Suit No. 50 of 1913. Mr. Wallace having directed the removal of the trustee by his decree in the first suit, Suit No. 50 of 1913 was instituted for the framing of a proper scheme and the appointment of a new trustee and for similar reliefs. The lower Court after enquiry found that the persons holding the so called Sajjadanashin's office in this institution were not spiritual or religious preceptors in any sense and that they had no disciples and no doctrines of Sufiism or anything else to teach. In short the duties ordinarily attached to office of a Sajjadanashin did not appertain to the position which the defendant and his ancestors have been occupying. All that they had to do was to conduct the annual Urs and to offer Fatehas at tombs, and none of these could be said to be functions incapable of being performed by other Mahomedans. As regards maintenance of the daily service at the mosque or of the especial services in the mosque on Fridays or on the occasion of the Ramzan, the Eedul-Fitar and the Bakrid, the work was capable of being attended to by any Mutawalli of a mosque. As regards the income of the trust properties the finding is that the net income is about Rs. 5,586, after paying the Government Peishcush. Out of this the descendants of the 2nd Sajjadanashin, Ghulam Nakshband, have been receiving allowances of Rs. 151 8-0 a month, that is, Rs. 1,818 0 0 annually, as set out in Exhibit J. The balance of Rs. 3,778 was what was available for the maintenance of the mosque and the tomb and for the upkeep of the charities and the performance of religious rites and ceremonies. After meeting all these expenses about Rs. 1,000 a year is estimated as the annual saving, exclusive of the income of the two villages which at the date of the suits had been reserved by the Government but to recover which action has, we understand, been taken. If those two villages are restored, the annual surplus would ordinarily be between two and three thousands a year or more.

On receipt of this report Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar gave certain directions for the framing of a scheme with liberty to the parties to apply. This scheme has now been submitted to us, and in connection therewith we have first to consider what exactly was the scope of the directions given by the learned Judges. It is not open to us at the present stage to re-open any decisions arrived at by them on any of the questions in controversy. See Latchumammal v. Gangammal (1). The learned Judges have held: "In this case it is clear that the religious duty, which the defendant, as Sajjada, is bound to perform in connection with this institution, ought to be differentiated from the secular management of the tomb, mosque and its endowments. The broad effect of this, I take it, is that the office of Sajjadanashin should be kept up. The religious duties peculiarly attached to that office are the performance of the Urs and the Fatehas according to the usage of the institution. The rest of the duties in connection with the mosque and the tomb can be separated and relegated to an ordinary Mutawalli or trustee." I must say that if the matter were res integra, I should have had no hesitation in holding that it was wholly superfluous to retain the office of the so called Sajjadanashin in addition to that of a trustee or Mutawalli. The term Sajjadanashin is an absolute misnomer in connection with this institution, though this is not only instance in which I have found the word wholly misapplied in this Presidency [see for instance Dost Muhammad Khan v. Nazir Ali Sahib (2)]. The attempt made by the defendant, who has been guilty of every conceivable act of mismanagement and misappropriation in connection with the trust, to bolster up his position on the strength of the designation of Sajjadanashin is utterly wanting in bona fides. His evidence in support of his pretensions is transparently false. However that may be, we must give effect to the order of the Court already made in his favour.

The next question argued upon the directions relates to the allowances which the descendants of the 2nd Sajjadanashin are being paid. These persons' names are set out in Exhibit J, and a reference to it would show that most of them receive small doles, sometimes as little as annas 8 a month, aggregating altogether to about Rs. 150 a month.

Though the language of the directions on this point is not very clear or explicit, I do not think that the learned Judges could have intended that this system should be perpetuated. In the first place, payment of those allownces is based entirely on a practice which clearly came to be prevalent owing to the misconduct of a succession of men in charge of the trust properties. In the second place, supposing we are in a position to impute to the founder the intention of benefiting the descendants of the man whom he had nominated as his successor with some portion of the income of these properties, the present method does not, in my opinion, carry out the intentions in the true sense. With every generation the allawances available for each individual must necessarily diminish, and it could not be for the benefit of the family of the 2nd Sajjadanashin that every individual among his descendants should get insignificant doles on a steadily decreasing scale. The learned Judges at the same time may be taken to have held that the persons who are at present receiving allowances should not be deprived of them and that in any scheme to be framed for the future some portion of the income should be so applied as to afford a chance to the descendants of the 2nd Sajjadanashin generally to benefit thereby. I may here appropriately quote some observations made by Jessel, M. R., in the well-known case in Campden Charities, In re (3) in propounding the principle of cy pres doctrine. "In the first place, the scheme is made in pursuance of what is commonly known as the cy pres doctrine, and, in cases like this, it is applied where, from lapse of time and change of circumstances, it is no longer possible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or donor in the exact way in which he has directed it to be applied, but it can only be applied beneficially to similar purposes by different means." (page 323.) Then at page 327: "But ought we, sitting here simply to interpret the law, to hold ourselves bound by the words of the Will to distribute the large sum of money in doles in this fashion? I think we ought not. As I said before, we must consider not only the change in amount, but the change in circumstances. * * *, A distribution of 50 shillings in each half year among a few poor people in a small village, as I said before, would be intolerable on a large scale in a large town like Kensington. But was it the intention of the testatrix? Here again I would say emphatically, No."

The cypres doctrine is applied when from lapse of time and change of circumstances it is no longer possible beneficially to apply the property left by the founder or donor in the exact way in which he has directed it to be applied but it can only be applied beneficially for similar purposes by different means. This general principle, as I had occasion to point out from original Arabic authorities in Muthukana v. Vada Lavvai (4) is also in harmony with the spirit of the Muhammadan Law relating to the administration of charities. Now it cannot be questioned that the eleemosynary doles are as demoralising and mischievous in their effects in this country as elsewhere. The history of this very family is but an illustration of the way in which doles have the effect of pauperising the recipient. Having regard to the change of circumstances, the maintenance and support of poor Mohamedan students giving preference to those among the descendants of the 2nd Sajjadanashin would undoubtedly best carry out the benevolent intentions of the founder. For this purpose a fund should be formed out of the surplus left after meeting the expenses of the repair and maintenance of the tomb, the salaries of the trustees and the Sajjadanashin and the necessary establishments and expenses in connection with the celebration of the Urs and Fateha ceremonies according to the practice prevalent hitherto as found by the Subordinate Judge. The persons named in Exhibits J and F shall receive their allowances during their lifetime. As each one dies, the amount payable to him or to her shall lapse into the fund for the support of poor Mohamedan students.

I ought to mention that the performance of Urs and Fatehas has not been objected to in this case, and Benson, J., and myself held in the above mentioned case in Muthukana v. Vada Lavvai (4) that such objects are valid according to the Muhammadan Law as administered in India, if these rites involve the distribution of food to the poor. That decision has been confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council and as in this case the evidence shows that on the occasion of the Urs and the Fatehas at this institution food is distributed to the poor, such a gift must be held to be valid.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, in his arguments, on behalf of his client relied much on the sacred character of the office of Sajjadanashin and reference was made to the well known case relating to khankhahs in Mohiuddin v. Saiyiduddin (5), Secretary of State for India v. Mohiuddin Ahmed (6), Piran v. Abdool Karim (7). He also relied strongly on a decision of Banerjee, J., in Ishtiaq Ahmed v. Saiyid Massaod Ahmed (8). As regards this last case, I am not at present prepared to express my assent to the proposition laid down there that the Court has no power to remove a Sajjadanashin or to appoint a new man in the office, supposing it to be one which truly involves the performance of the duties of a spiritual and religious character inseparably connected with the personality of the Sajjadanashin. The nature and the functions of the office of Sajjadanashin properly so-called are, if I may say so with respect, correctly set out in their general features in Piran v. Abdool Karim (7) and Mohiuddin v. Saiyiduddin (5) mentioned above. But in none of those cases does Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, now a member of the Judicial Committee, lay down the proposition enunciated in Ishtiaq Ahmed v. Saiyid Massaod Ahmed (8). On the other hand he applies the law of waqfs to these religious institutions, though he points out at the same time that by usage there are certain peculiar features in the office of Sajjadanashin which distinguish it from that of an ordinary Mutawalli. But it is difficult to see that if the office is capable of being transferred at all from one person to another, why the power of changing the incumbent of the office, in the absence of any such reservation in the grant itself, should be confined to the existing incumbent. Whatever the Sufisitic doctrines may be that are taught in any particular khankhah, it can hardly be pretended that there would be anything peculiar and absolutely confined to that individual institution. Nor could it well be said, for instance, that if a Sajjadanashin dies without nominating a successor, the khankhah with all its properties must remain without a head. The different orders of Sufis or Fakeers in India have their own khakhahs or takias, and it could not be an insuperable difficulty for the Court in a proper case to select a fit candidate on the advice of competent persons well versed in the rules of that or similar institutions or relegate the appointment to them. Unless there is very strong and clear evidence of custom and usage by which it can be shown that if the Sajjadanashin misconducts himself in his office he cannot be interfered with by the Court, I should be inclined to say that the ordinary Muhammadan Law of waqf must apply to him with such modifications as may be required by the practice of the institution concerned or of similar institutions. I do not think it would be safe to draw much upon the analogy of Hindu Mutts, which no doubt present some features of resemblance to khankhahs but which must be governed by rules of Hindu Law and their own usages. But I only wish to mention that the latest pronouncement of the Judicial Committee on the position of the head of a Mutt has thrown considerable doubt on the view of the law propounded in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (9). It is not, however, necessary in this case to discuss any further the law relating to Sajjadanashins properly so called, for the office which the defendant and his ancestors have been holding is that of Sajjadanashin merely in name but in fact nothing more than the office of an ordinary Mutawalli or trustee.

Mr L. A. Govindraghava Aiyar raised the question relating to the importance of the office of Sajjadanashin in order to plead for a large stipend to his client than that of Rs. 30 per mensem allowed in the scheme of the Subordinate Judge. It seems to me, this amount is more than sufficient for the duties he has to perform. The trustee on the other hand who will have the charge of the trust properties and their management should be paid an adequate salary according to the qualifications of the men available As regards the establishment, it does not seem to be necessary to have a separate revenue inspector. On the other hand it would be desirable to secure a competent clerk who, in addition to keeping accounts and writing letters, may be able to render some assistance to the trustee in the general management. The Peish Imam is allowed in the lower Court's scheme a salary of Rs. 4 per month. This seems to me to be wholly inadequate. He is an important functionary, his duty being to lead the prayers and deliver sermons, and he ought to be well read in Mahomedan religion and theology. He should be a man able to inspire respect by his character and bearing and the pay should be sufficient to attract men of such qualifications. Appeal dismissed with costs and memorandum of objections allowed. Costs to come out of the estate.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the exhaustive judgment of my learned brother. In a case relating to charity in Hindu temples Muthukrishna Naicken v. Ramchandra Naicken(9)] which was heard by both of us a few days after, I have discussed at some length the applicability of the doctrine of cypres to Indian customs. I am in entire agreement with my learned brother in holding that the doctrine of cypres as expounded by the Master of the Rolls in Campden Charities, In re (3) is applicable to India. In this country the mode of feeding in temples and Mutts is of such a character that it is not the needy or incapable that receive assistance, but is the idler and the profane that are benefited. The question put by Jessel, M. R., might very well be put in India: "Could it have been the intention of the donor that his money should be spent upon such men?" My answer is what the learned Lord Justice has so emphatically given. I, therefore, agree with the judgment of my learned brother and in the order as to costs in the appeal and in the memorandum of objections.

Adverse possession—Acquiescence—Estoppel, equitable—Land lying unoccupied—Encroachment by erecting buildings—No mistaken belief as to ownership—Demolition of buildings.

No question of adverse possession or limitation can arise in respect of land practically lying unoccupied. [p 684, col. 1.]

A question of acquiescence or equitable estoppel may arise where the owner of land sees another person erecting buildings upon it and, knowing that such person is under the mistaken belief that the land is his own property, purposely abstains from interference with the view of claiming a demolition of the buildings when erected. Where, however, the person encroaching on the land of another cannot be said to have been acting under any mistaken belief as to the ownership of the land, no question of acquiescence or equitable estoppel can arise. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for possession of certain land by the demolition of the chabutra built thereon by the defendant and the closing of a door which the defendant had opened in his house towards it. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the land over which the chabutra had been built and towards which the door had been opened formed part of No. 1405 khasra and belonged to the plaintiff. The chabutra in question is said to have been constructed and the door opened some time in 1907. The defendant pleaded that he had built the chabutra with the permission of the Municipal Board to whom the land belonged.

The Court of first instance dismissed the claim but the lower Appellate Court decreed it so far as the chabutra stood on plot No. 1405 khasra abadi.

It appears from the khasra abadi prepared at the time of the First Regular Settlement that plots Nos. 1404 and 1405 were in the occupation of Dwarka Prasad, the ancestor of the plaintiff, whose house and chhappar stood thereon. Plot No. 1397 belonged to the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant. Plot No. 1403, which is something like a square or open piece of land standing between houses Nos. 1402, 1405 and 1397, was entered as the sahan of all those houses. The Nazul Register and some other documentary evidence produced go to show that in 1905 the defendant applied for permission to build a chabutra on the Nazul land. He was asked to pay rent, to which he agreed. He was thereupon granted permission to built chabutra on plot No. 1403 1 khasra, which stands between plot No. 1404 and No. 1397. Instead of confining the chabutra to that portion, the lower Court finds that he has encroached on a portion of plot No. 1405, thereby converting to his own use that portion of the land which was lying between the houses of the parties and belonged to the plaintiff. The finding cannot be challenged in second appeal.

No question of adverse possession or limitation can arise in respect of that land, because that land was practically lying unoccupied. No acts of physical possession could have been exercised over it by either party, and the plaintiff's title to it continued undisturbed till the chabutra was built thereon by the defendant after obtaining permission in respect of plot No. 1403 1 in 1906. Having obtained permission to build on plot No. 1403-1, it cannot be said that he acted bona fide in building a chabutra on plot No. 1405 khasra.

As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (1), where the owner sees another person erecting buildings upon it, and knowing that such other person is under the mistaken belief that the land is his own property, purposely abstains from interference, with the view of claiming a demolition of the building, when it is erected, a question of acquiescence or equitable estoppel may arise. Such is not the case here. The defendant has not produced the lease, which was granted to him by the Municipal Board A plan must have been prepared at that time, showing how far the land extended, which was included in the lease. No copy of such a plan, if it was prepared, has been produced. It cannot, therefore, be said that he was acting under some mistaken belief as to the extent of the land leased to him.

The plaintiff respondent has filed a cross objection with regard to the dismissal of his claim for closing the door but that cross objection is not now pressed.

The appeal and the cross-objection are dismissed with costs.

Appeal and cross objection dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 92, proviso 4, 115—Lease—Oral evidence showing that condition was dispensed with, admissibility of—Estoppel.

A written lease for five years provided that if the lessee desired a renewal, he should give a notice in writing three months before the expiration of the term of the lease The last day on which such notice was to be given was the 31st of January 1917. No written notice was in fact given by the lessee, but he brought a suit for the renewal of the lease and wanted to prove that on the 15th of January 1917 one of the lessors had told his wife that there was no need to give a written notice provided for by the lease and hence no written notice for renewal had been given:

Held, (1) that in view of the provisions of section 92, proviso 4, of the Evidence Act, the alleged statement of the lessor regarding the written notice for renewal was not admissible in evidence; [p. 688, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that such a statement, on being assented to by the lessee, amounted either to a modification or rescission of the contract of lease within the meaning of section 92, proviso 4, of the Evidence Act; [p. 688, cols. 1 & 2]

(3) that the statement did not amount to an estoppel on the part of the lessor so as to preclude him from denying that the notice provided for by the lease had in fact been given. [688, cols. 1 & 2.]

D'CRUZ v. JITENDRA NATH.

Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 20th June 1918 :—

"In this suit the plaintiff claims specific performance of a covenant for renewal contained in a lease dated 8th July 1912 and made between the defendants of the one part and the plaintiff of the other part, whereby the defendants demised premises No. 1, Beparitolla Lane, to the plaintiff for a term of five years commencing on the 1st May 1912 and terminating on the 30th April 1917, at the rent and upon the covenants contained in the indenture of lease. One of the covenants contained in the indenture provides that, in case of due payment by the lessee (that is the plaintiff) of the rents reserved and the due performance and observance of the conditions and covenants therein contained, the lessee should be entitled to a renewal of the lease for a further period of five years on the same terms and conditions as those contained in the lease except the condition as to a further renewal, and the covenant further provides that notice in writing must be given by the lessee to the lessors of the lessee's intention to renew the lease three months before the expiration of the first mentioned period of five years. It is common ground between the parties that no written notice in writing to renew the lease was given by the plaintiff to the defendants three months before the expiration of the lease, that is to say, the 30th April 1917. But the plaintiff's case is that on or about the 15th January 1917 one of the defendants, Ganga Churn, came to the premises to collect the rent, that he there met the wife of the plaintiff who said that she and the plaintiff were going to leave the house and that thereupon Ganga Churn said that they had been good tenants, that he desired them to remain and said that there was no need to give the written notice provided by the lease. It appears that on the 30th March 1917 the plaintiff wrote to the defendants stating that his lease was about to expire and that he would be glad to have a renewal for a further period of five years on the same terms and conditions as those specified in the original lease. No answer as given to this letter until the 23rd April, when the defendants' Attorney wrote to the plaintiff saying that no written notice as provided by the lease had been given by the plaintiff to renew his lease and that he must deliver up possession at the expiration of the term covered by the lease. It is the plaintiff's case that on the 7th April 1917 Ganga Churn, the defendant, again came to the premises, saw the plaintiff and agreed with him to renew the lease, and, therefore, his case is that, although no written notice was given in accordance with the terms of the lease, such written notice was waived by the defendants and that, this being so, he is entitled to a renewal of his lease of the premises. Counsel for the defendants raised the following issue:—

'Did the plaintiff give notice in writing to the defendants of his intention to take a renewal of the lease three months prior to the expiration of the lease, and if not, is the plaintiff entitled to any relief?'

Counsel for the defendants further contended that having regard to the provisions of section 92, proviso 4, of the Evidence Act, it was not open to the plaintiff to give any evidence of any verbal modification of the lease and that, therefore, I could not go into the question raised on behalf of the plaintiff as to whether or not Ganga Churn agreed to waive written notice of renewal. I think that this contention of the defendants is well-founded. Section 92, proviso (4), of the Evidence Act provides that the existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any contract, grant, or disposition of property may be proved except in cases in which such contract, grant, or disposition of property is by law required to be in writting or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents. Now, it seems to me that the lease, being for a term of five years, must be registered and being for a period of more than one year it must be in writing. Having regard, therefore to the provisions of section 92, sub section 4, of the Evidence Act, I think that if I allow evidence to be given of the alleged verbal agreement to waive written notice, it would be a modification of the contract within the meaning of proviso (4) of section 92.

On behalf of the plaintiff the following argument was raised upon the proviso, namely that an option for renewal is not required by law to be registered and that, therefore, he is not debarred by proviso 4 from giving evidence with regard to the written arrangement. But I think that this argument is founded on a fallacy. The contract which the plaintiff seeks to modify is not a particular clause in the lease but the indenture of the 8th July 1912, which admittedly required registration, and it is not open, I think, to the plaintiff to split up the various clauses and provisions of that indenture and say that each of them is a separate contract.

Then on behalf of the plaintiff further arguments are urged. It is said that, although the option provides for a three months' notice, time is not of the essence of the contract, and I was referred in support of this proposition to various cases and, amongst others, to the case of Lennon v. Napper (1) and to some remarks which will be found, of, I think, Lord Mansfield, at page 685 of the report. So far as Lennon v. Napper (1) is concerned, I think the case and the remarks to which I was referred have no bearing upon the case before me. The remarks seem to me to deal with cases of leases for lives and of the right to substitute another life on the dropping of one of the lives named in the lease, and there Lord Mansfield is dealing with the construction of such a contract as a whole and is considering whether upon the construction of such a contract time is of the essence of the contract. The other cases to which I was referred are the well known cases dealing with contracts of land where Courts of equity for very good reasons, having regard to difficulties of title, have always held that time, unless specifically made of the essence of the contract, is not of the essence of the contract in such cases. Therefore, I think that none of these cases have any application to the matter before me and I think that clearly the time of three months provided in the option for renewal contained in the lease was of the essence of the contract. Then, secondly, it is said that although the option specifically provides that the notice shall be in writing that is really not essential and that any notice would be good. That to my mind would be to make a new contract for the parties, which the Court cannot do. The parties have agreed that the option for renewal should be exercisable by means of a notice in writing, and presumably they meant what they said and I do not think that that will be satisfied by any oral notice.

Then the last argument that was urged on behalf of the plaintiff was that the oral agreement alleged, waiving a written notice, was a substituted mode of performance of a term in the contract. I confess I do not quite understand what is meant by this, but it seems to me, for the reasons that I have already stated, that if I were to accede to this and allow evidence of the oral agreement to be given, I should be disregarding the provisions of section 92, proviso 4, of the Evidence Act.

I have taken no evidence in this case and, therefore, I am expressing no opinion as to whether or not the plaintiff would succeed in establishing before me the case that was opened in his behalf, but I am simply deciding the case upon the preliminary objection taken by Counsel for the defendants that in this case oral evidence is not admissible to prove that written notice was waived by the defendants or one of them. For these reasons, the suit fails and must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2."

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves, by which he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The suit was for the specific performance of an agreement contained in an indenture of a lease dated the 8th of July 1912, which was for a period of five years from the 1st May 1912, to grant the plaintiff a renewal of the lease of the premises in question: and, the matter depends upon a covenant in the lease which was to this effect:—"That in case of due payment by the lessee of the rent hereinbefore contained hereby reserved and the due performance and observance of the conditions and covenants on his part to be performed and observed the lessee shall be entitled to have a renewal of the lease of the said demised premises for a further period of five years on the same terms and conditions as are herein contained except the present condition as to further renewal provided that the lessee gives notice in writing to the lessors of his intention to take such renewal three months before the expiration of the said first mentioned period of five years." There is no doubt that a notice in writing of the lessee's intention to take a renewal was not given three months before the expiration of the said first-mentioned five years. Such a notice, in order to comply with the terms of the covenant, ought to have been given on the 31st of January 1917, at the latest. It was not so given, and the plaintiff has alleged that the notice as required by the contract was not given because of certain communications which passed between the plaintiff and his wife on the one hand and one of the defendants on the other: and, with regard to that, the statement of the learned Judge may be taken as accurately setting out the facts: He says, "The plaintiff's case is that on or about the 15th January 1917 one of the defendants, Ganga Churn, came to the premises to collect the rent, that he there met the wife of the plaintiff who said that she and the plaintiff were going to leave the house and that thereupon Ganga Churn said that they had been good tenants, that he desired them to remain and said that there was no need to give the written notice provided by the lease. It appears that on the 30th March 1917 the plaintiff wrote to the defendants stating that his lease was about to expire and that he would be glad to have a renewal for a further period of five years on the same terms and conditions as those specified in the original lease. No answer was given to this letter until the 23rd April, when the defendants' Attorney wrote to the plaintiff saying that no written notice as provided by the lease had been given by the plaintiff to renew his lease and that he must deliver up possession on the expiration of the term covered by the lease. It is the plaintiff's case that on the 7th April 1917 Ganga Churn, the defendant, again came to the premises, saw the plaintiff, and agreed with him to renew the lease, and therefore, his case is that, although no written notice was given in accordance with the terms of the lease, such written notice was waived by the defendants and that, this being so, he is entitled to a renewal of his lease of the premises."

The question, in my judgment, depends upon the terms of section 92, proviso (4) of the Indian Evidence Act. The first part of the section is as follows: "When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives-in-interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms." For the purpose of seeing what is meant "by any such contract grant, &c.," it is necessary to refer to section 91 which provides as follows: "When the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document, and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract....."

Section 92, proviso (4), is to this effect: "The existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract, grant or disposition of property may be proved, except in cases in which such contract, grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents." There is no doubt in this case that the lease which is the contract in question was reduced to writing, and inasmuch as it was a lease for five years, it was required by law to be reduced to writing and it was also necessary to register it—there was no dispute that the writing required registration according to law. Therefore, if the alleged agreement, which is relied on by the plaintiff, amounted to a rescission or a modification of the lease, evidence of that agreement could not be given inasmuch as the alleged agreement was made orally.

But the learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant in this Court has argued that the arrangement, which was verbally made between the plaintiff's wife and one of the defendants on one occasion and between the plaintiff and that defendant on another occasion, was not a rescission or modification of the contract, but it was merely a waiver of the performance of one of the provisions of the contract. For the purpose of deciding this question it is necessary to consider what was the real nature of the transaction. In my judgment, the arrangement, if made as alleged by the plaintiff, amounted to an oral agreement to rescind the clause in the contract, which provided that a written notice should be given: or, it may be said that the alleged arrangement amounted to an oral agreement to modify the contract (which was the lease in this case), and that consequently evidence of the alleged oral agreement was not admissible. I base my judgment upon the express terms of the section and I think it is not necessary to refer in detail to the many cases which have been cited to us.

Then it is said that the alleged arrangement between parties amounted to an estoppel and the defendants are estopped from denying that the notice provided by the contract had in fact been given. In my judgment, that point will not avail the plaintiff. This was not, in my judgment, a case of estoppel—there was no representation of an existing fact upon which the plaintiff changed his position: on the contrary, if it amounted to anything, it amounted to an undertaking by one of the defendants that he would not in future call upon the plaintiff to perform a provision of the contract, which, in my judgment, cannot be relied upon as an estoppel in this case.

For these reasons I think that the judgment of the learned Judge was right and it should be upheld. The result follows that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—The lease in this case provided that a notice should be given in writing if renewal was desired. The last day on which such notice was to be given was the 31st of January 1917. No written notice was in fact given The appellant, however, says that on the 15th of January 1917 one of the defendants told his wife that there was no need to give a written notice provided for by the lease. What was then the effect of this alleged statement made by one of the lessors and assented to by the appellant? Is it a waiver, or is this a case of rescission or modification of the written agreement, or have we to deal with it as a case of estoppel? In my opinion, there was no waiver, because what was said was said before any breach of the contract occurred, namely, on the 15th of January, and the written notice of renewal was not due until the 1st of February. Upon the facts stated, if true (they are denied, though our judgment must proceed upon the assumption that the statement was made), this was a statement that the lessee need not do something on a future date which under the lease he had contracted to do in the event of his desiring to continue the lease for a further period of five years. Such a statement, in my opinion, amounted to either a modification or rescission within the meaning of section 92, proviso (4), of the Evidence Act. It may be regarded as a modification if we look to the whole of the lease of which this term was a part, or we may call it a rescission if we look to this particular clause of the lease the operation of which, it was said, was dispensed with by this arrangement. Section 92, proviso (4), excludes this oral statement or agreement.

Thirdly, there was no estoppel, because, though, if the facts were correctly stated, there may have been a representation, and possibly an alteration of the condition, there was in fact no representation of a thing within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act. Such representation as there was was not a representation as to a past or present fact but was a statement of the intention of one of the lessors that on a future date he would no insist upon the performance of a condition to which he was entitled by virtue of the lease: in other words, he would dispense with the written notice which the lease provided for.

On these grounds I hold that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 394 OF 1919.
(CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 327 OF 1919).

September 26, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

In re P. KANDASWAMI MUDALIAR—ACCUSED—PETITIONER.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 269, scope and applicability of—Madras City Municipal Act (III of 1904), s 366—Small-pox patient directed to be removed by Health Officer to Isolation Hospital—Removal to isolated house, whether unlawful disobedience of order—Prevention of infection—Prosecution, what to prove.

In a case under section 269, Indian Penal Code, the prosecution must make out not only that there was disobedience to an order of an executive officer directing the doing of a certain act to prevent the spread of an infectious disease but also that the disobedience was unlawful and negligent and had also the effect of spreading the infectious disease. The gist of the unlawful act is that there must be danger of the infection spreading. If care is taken to avoid the infection, the act cannot be said to be unlawful or negligent and no offence is committed under the section The mere failure to carry out an order which could otherwise have been bona fide obeyed by the avoidance of the danger of infection, cannot be regarded as an offence under section 269 of the Penal Code. [p. 690, col. 2; p. 691, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Health Officer of the Madras Municipality directed the removal of a small-pox patient to an Isolation Hospital, but the patient's father removed him instead to an isolated house under the advice of his doctor:

Held, that the disobedience to the Health Officer's order under section 366 of the Madras City Municipality Act did not amount to an offence under section 269, Indian Penal Code, as the accused's action prevented the spread of the infectious disease. [p. 691, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner by the Court of the Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, in C. C. No. 7124 of 1919.

FACTS.—Accused was convicted under section 269, Indian Penal Code, for disobeying an order of the Corporation Health Officer under section 363 of the Madras City Municipal Act (III of 1904). The accused's son was suffering from small-pox and he was ordered to remove him to the Isolation Hospital. But instead the accused removed him to an isolated house.

Mr. K. P. Kesava Menon, for the Petitioner.—Section 366 of the City Municipal Act is drafted on the corresponding section of the English Public Health Act of 1886, and it has been held that a sufficient compliance with the order would satisfy the requirements of the law. The object of the law is not to punish but to prevent the danger spreading to others. See 23 Halsbury's Laws of England, page 454, Warwick v. Graham (1).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The Health Officer is the judge of fact under section 366. The question, therefore, is whether the Magistrate was competent to go into the question at all.]

I submit that section 269 requires that the Act should be unlawful or negligent. In the present case, the removal was without delay to a place which was accommodative and isolated. Mere disobedience of a technical kind will not suffice.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The English law is differently worded. Section 366 constitutes the Health Officer the sole judge. The disobedience of the order is an unlawful act within the meaning of section 269, Indian Penal Code. Section 366 imputes knowledge by notice. An offence under section 269, Indian Penal Code, is to be deemed to have been committed. See clause (3).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—In cases of resistance or disobedience like the present, it can be contended that the public servant ought not to have promulgated the order.]

Section 366 excludes the possibility of such contentions. Compare section 188, Indian Penal Code. In Cahoon v. Mathews (2) the want of this power of ordering removal to hospitals necessitated an acquittal. See pages 498-499.

ORDER.—The facts of the case are these. The accused was asked by the Health Officer of the City of Madras to remove his son to the Isolation Hospital at Krishnampet as the child was then suffering from small-pox. The child was being treated by Dr. V. Rama Kamath, a certified medical practitioner. This gentleman advised the accused to remove the patient to an isolated house, which was done. Thereupon this prosecution was launched under section 269 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate was apparently of opinion that as the Health Officer was the sole judge of the justness of the order to remove the infected child to a hospital, he had no option but to convict the accused of the offence. There is an affidavit that the Magistrate did not permit evidence being given as to the precautions taken by the accused to avoid infection. The question for consideration is whether this conviction is right. Under section 366 of the Madras Municipality Act (Act III of 1904) under which the order for removal was made, it must appear to the Health Officer that a person is suffering from a dangerous disease, has no proper lodging or accommodation or is lodged in a place occupied by more than one family. Then he can order the person to be removed to the Isolation Hospital. So the Health Officer has to be satisfied not only that a person is suffering from infectious disease but also that the infected person has no proper lodging or is lodged in a place which is occupied by more than one family. In this case, no doubt, at the time the order was made the son of the accused was being lodged in a place which was occupied by more than one family. Therefore, the order in its inception was right, although it is defective in that it gave no option to the accused to lodge his son in a proper place. The further question is whether the action of the accused in providing a separate lodging in which there were none living but the patient and himself was such a violation of the order as brought him under section 269 of the Indian Penal Code. The 3rd clause of section 366 says: "Whoever, having charge of a person in respect of whom an order is made under sub-section (1), disobeys the said order shall be deemed to have committed an offence punishable under section 269 of the Indian Penal Code." The learned Crown Prosecutor suggested that this notional imputation of crime deprived the Magistrate of power to enquire into elements which constitute the offence under section 269. It would be dangerous to hold that the prosecution is not bound to prove the offence, because the local Legislature has enacted that a violation of the order of an executive officer is punishable under a particular section of the Code. The Penal Code is an all India Statute, and anybody charged under it has the right to expect of the prosecution proof that he has committed the offence as defined in the section. Turning to the Indian Penal Code I find that, to bring the offender within it, he should have unlawfully or negligently done an act which he knew or had reason to believe to be likely to spread the infection of any disease dangerous to life. The accused in this case is not charged with disobeying the order of a public servant lawfully promulgated. He is charged with having knowingly spread the infection of disease; wherefore the question is, not whether the order of the Health Officer in its inception was right, but whether the conduct of the accused in choosing the alternative of sending his son to an isolated house was an offence under section 269. Before I refer to cases I must draw attention to the language of the section. It uses the words "unlawfully or negligently" and not "illegally". As was pointed out by Lord Ellenborough in Reg. v. Vantandillo (3), an indictment which charges a person to have done an act unlawfully or injuriously must assume or prove that there was no lawful excuse. Le Blanc, J., said this: "Neither did they pronounce that every person who inoculated for this disease was guilty of an offence, provided it was done in a proper manner, and the patient was kept from the society of others so as not to endanger a communication of the disease. In such a case the law did not pronounce it to be an offence." So the gist of the unlawful act is that there must be danger of the infection spreading. If care is taken to avoid such an infection, the act cannot be said to be unlawful or negligent. In fact the City Municipality Act contemplates that the action will not amount to an offence if a proper lodging or accommodation is found for the infected person. When we remember that section 269 does not use the word "illegal" which has been defined by section 43 as being applicable "to everything which is an offence or which is prohibited by law" but uses the word "unlawful," it is clear that the prosecution must make out not only that there has been disobedience to the order of the Health Officer but also that the disobedience was unlawful and negligent and had also the effect of spreading the infectious disease. The case near in point is Cahoon v. Mathews (2). In that case a mother was directed to remove her daughter to an Isolation Hospital. She refused to comply with the order unless she was herself allowed to accompany her child. Thereupon she was charged under section 269 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Judges held that as in her own house there were no lodgers, as the order to remove was passed upon a misapprehension as to the existence of lodgers and as sufficient accommodation was provided for the infected child, the mother did not act unlawfully or negligently. The learned Judges say and I entirely agree with these observations of theirs: "An act, however, may be lawful though it may be illegal." Therefore, although in the present case the refusal to comply with the direction of the Health Officer might have been illegal as defined in section 43, I am not prepared to hold that it was unlawful when it is found that proper precautions were taken to prevent infection and to provide a suitable lodging for the person infected. I may refer in this connection to the weighty observations of Lord Blackburn and Lord Watson in Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill (4). Lord Blackburn said: "On those who seek to establish that the Legislature intended to take away the private rights of individuals lies the burden of showing that such an intention appears by express words or necessary implication." Lord Watson in the same case said:—"Where the terms of a Statute are not imperative, but permissive, the fair inference is that the Legislature intended that the discretion as to the use of the general powers thereby conferred should be exercised in strict conformity with private rights." The Health Officer would have been well within his rights if he had told the accused that he should either provide a proper lodging for the son or he should remove the child to the hospital. That would have been, in the language of Lord Watson, an exercise of discretion compatible with private rights. The mere failure to carry out an order which could otherwise have been bona fide obeyed by the avoidance of the danger of infection, cannot be regarded as an offence under section 269 of the Indian Penal Code. I must, therefore, quash the conviction. The learned Crown Prosecutor informed me that in case I came to the conclusion that the Magistrate was not justified in shutting out evidence he was not prepared to press for the case being sent down for further enquiry. All that is necessary in a case of this description is to state the principle which should guide the Magistrate under similar contingencies. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

(3) (1815) 4 M. & S. 73; 16 R. R. 389; 105 E. R. 762.

Appeal against the order of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 5th May 1919.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th February last Ram Sarup, son of Ganga Prasad, aged 6 years, was murdered for the sake of his ornaments. In consequence of a statement made by Musammat Gulaba, the body of Ram Sarup was recovered in the afternoon from a place where it was buried in the house belonging to Narain, her father. The ornaments worn by the boy when he was murdered were also recovered from another place in the same house, where they were buried. Musammat Gulaba stated that Musammat Jasoda had brought Ram Sarup into her house and killed him. Musammat Jasoda is also called Musammat Menda.

Both Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba were tried for murder and convicted. The former has been sentenced to death and the latter to transportation for life. They appeal and the reference for confirmation of the sentence of death passed on the former is also before us.

It appears that Ram Sarup was playing on the morning in question somewhere outside the house of Narain. Musammat Gobindi, the daughter of Gokul, aged 15 years, and Debi Dayal, son of Gokul, aged 18 years, were playing with him at marbles. Siddhu and Gauri Shankar, the brothers of Musammat Gulaba, were also playing there. Musammat Gulaba was returning after easing herself when Musammat Jasoda, who lives in an adjoining house, met her and told her that she would enable her to have enough to eat and drink for two months and that she would ask her father, Narain, to post a letter to her brother and get her married at Parer. Her suggestion was that Ram Sarup should be killed and his ornaments divided. Musammat Gulaba asked her brother, Siddhu, to take away the cattle for grazing. She asked Gauri Shankar to go and get grass. There was no one in the house of Narain at the time.

Musammat Jasoda asked Ram Sarup to come, saying that she would give him a kitten. Musammat Gulaba offered to give him some marbles. As the boy approached Musammat Jasoda took him by the hand into the house of Narain and closed the door from inside. Musammat Gulaba went along with them too. Ram Sarup was wearing bangles on the hands and feet and a Kardhani or girdle made of silver. He was not thereafter seen alive.

At noon the mother of Ram Sarup, finding that the boy had not come back to the house, went and informed her husband, Ganga Prasad, who made a search but without any effect. On the same day he made a report at the Police station, Safipur, stating that his son, Ram Sarup, was missing. On his return he learnt from Debi Dayal and Musammat Gobindi that Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba had taken the boy to the house of Narain. He asked Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba, but they said that they knew nothing of the boy. He set people to watch round the house of Narain and himself sat watching during the night. Early on the next morning he went to the Police station and made another report at 9 A. M. stating that the disappearance of his son was due to the collusion of Bihari, his wife and the daughter of Narain, who were not giving out any clear facts and making statements which gave rise to a suspicion in his mind that his son was the subject of their machinations.

Maula Bakhsh, the Head Constable attached to the Police station, started the investigation. He searched the house of Musammat Gulaba but found nothing there except a bamboo stick and a log of wood, both of which were stained with blood. He also searched the house of Musammat Jasoda and found a Dhoti and a Lenhga, which, he suspected, were blood-stained. Musammat Gulaba had gone that morning to bathe in the Ganges. At about 3 P. M. when she returned home, he enquired from her and got information which led to the discovery in the house of Narain of the body of Ram Sarup and the ornaments which he was wearing when he was murdered. Musammat Jasoda was present at the time when the body and the ornaments were discovered. In fact it is stated that when Musammat Gulaba was unable to find the ornaments at the place where she was digging, Musammat Jasoda asked her to dig near the wall. Musammat Gulaba then dug as Musammat Jasoda had directed and found the ornaments there. The finding of the body and the ornaments was reported at the Police station at 4 P M.

Musammat Gulaba made a statement which was recorded by the Committing Magistrate under section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 16th February 1919. Therein she did not directly incriminate herself. She stated that Musammat Menda alias Musammat Jasoda had committed the murder and that she told her not to do so but Musammat Jasoda threatened to kill her. She admitted that she had caught the boy when he was killed, a circumstance from which an inference as to her guilt might reasonably be made, but suggested that she had done so with the intention of saving the boy. When examined by the Committing Magistrate afterwards under section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, she said that Musammat Jasoda told her that if she joined her in killing Ram Sarup both of them would go and sell the ornaments at Safipur and share the proceeds by halves. She admitted that she had directed her brother, Siddhu, to take away the cattle and her other brother, Gauri Shankar, to go to the Arhar field, but denied that she had caught hold of the boy or joined in committing the murder. She asserted that she had caught hold of Musammat Jasoda to save the boy, but judging from her previous conduct and the story she had related on the 16th February 1919 that statement is an absolute lie.

A statement made by an accused person which suggests an inference of guilt may amount to a confession, though the person making the statement may directly repudiate his participation in the crime. Such a statement may be taken into consideration against the person making the statement, but as pointed out in Empress of India v. Gunraj (1), it might be unsafe to use it against a co accused. The statement made by Musammat Gulaba before the Committing Magistrate under section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to which she adhered in the Court of Session, shows her, however, to have been at all events an accessory present at the murder; and if that was so, it can be used against the co-accused, if sufficient material corroboration is forthcoming. Musammat Gobindi and Debi Dayal state that they were playing with the boy Ram Sarup when Musammat Gulaba sent her brothers away and that Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba took the boy into the house and chained the door from inside. The dead body of the boy and his ornaments were subsequently found buried in that very house.

It is suggested on behalf of Musammat Jasoda that Gokul, the father of Musammat Gobindi and Debi Dayal, bore an ill-will towards her. Musammat Jasoda states that about 3 years ago a daughter of Gokul named Musammat Parbati had eloped with a person named Chhedi and that Gokul had suspected her of having brought about the elopement and stopped his women-folk from visiting her house. It does not, however, appear that Gokul was in a position to influence Musammat Gulaba. Musammat Gulaba returned from her bath in the Ganges at about 3 P. M. The body was soon afterwards recovered and a report of the recovery made at the Police station at 4 P. M. In the report made by Ganga Prasad on the 14th February 1919 at 9 P. M., it was stated that both Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba were suspected. Ganga Prasad says that he had learnt from Debi Dayal and Musammat Gobindi on the previous night that Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba had taken Ram Sarup to the house of Narain. There is no allegation that Ganga Prasad bore any ill-will towards Musammat Jasoda, and there is no reason why he should have helped in the concoction of evidence against her.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge and the Assessors believed the evidence for the prosecution and we see no reason to take a different view. The complicity of Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba is in our opinion established beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt. A log of wood and a bamboo stained with blood, with which the boy was struck before he was killed with an axe, were recovered from the house of Musammat Gulaba before the body was recovered.

Musammat Jasoda was the prime mover in the murder. She took the boy inside the house of Musammat Gulaba and murdered him and buried his body and the ornaments there, because, as Musammat Gulaba says, she said that she was a kept woman and her house would be the first to be searched. There is nothing to extenuate her guilt. Musammat Gulaba, being a young girl, was persuaded by her to join in the murder.

We dismiss the appeals of Musammat Jasoda and Musammat Gulaba accordingly, confirm the sentence of death passed on Musammat Jasoda and direct that it be carried into effect according to law.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 275 OF 1919.

August 4, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

In re PULI SUBBA REDDI—PRISONER—APPELLANT No. 24.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 298, 300—Trial by Jury—Omission to direct Jury not to be influenced by non-admissible statement—Misdirection—Juror conversing with stranger before conclusion of charge, effect of—Verdict, whether should be set aside.

The mere omission to direct a Jury not to be influenced by a statement which they are told is not evidence, does not amount to a misdirection of any importance. [p. 694, col. 2.]

The fact that a Juror has a conversation with a stranger during an adjournment of the Court before the Judge's charge is concluded, is not a sufficient ground for interference by the High Court. [p. 695, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Vellore Division, in Case No. 12 of the Calendar for 1919.

Dr. S Swaminathan, for the Appellant.—The evidence of P. W. No. 35 regarding the contents of a case diary maintained by the Police Inspector should not have been received. The Judge should have told the Jury in his charge that they should not allow their minds to be influenced by it. This amounts to a misdirection.

The affidavit of the Pleader who defended the 24th accused in the lower Court refers to an irregularity in the conduct of the trial. A Juryman was seen conversing with two strangers, when the Court adjourned and while the charge was yet unfinished. That is in contravention of the 2nd paragraph of section 300, Criminal Procedure Code, which has the effect of rendering the verdict illegal. Benimadhab Kundu v. Emperor (1).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—As to the misreception of evidence the Judge distinctly told the Jury that it was not evidence. That is enough.

As to the conversation of the Juryman with strangers, the fact was not mentioned to Court immediately and it is urged for the first time only in appeal.

JUDGMENT.—There was no doubt some misreception of evidence when prosecution 35th witness's statement in re-examination as to what was written in a case diary kept by the Circle Inspector, who was not a witness, was allowed to go on the record. The Judge, however, told the Jury that this was not evidence and his mere omission to direct the Jury not to be influenced by this statement does not, in our opinion, amount to a misdirection of any importance. The Judge further reminded the Jury on the question of identification that the identification parade had been held after the 24th accused had been taken to Kaligiri in the presence of the witnesses who afterwards identified him, and he observed that it was useless for the Sub-Inspector to deny it.

It was for the Jury after this to put what value they thought proper on the evidence of the identifying witnesses.

As regards the finding of stolen property in the possession of this accused, there was no misdirection as the Judge clearly explained to the Jury the nature of the possession that there was in this case.

Dr. Swaminathan has asked us to find that the verdict of the Jury was vitiated by the fact, asserted in an affidavit filed in this Court and sworn to by the Pleader who defended the 24th accused in the Sessions Court, that during an adjournment of the Court before the Judge's charge was finished one of the Jurors was seen conversing with two strangers. In Benimadhab Kundu v. Emperor (1) a fresh trial was ordered in a case where one of the Jury held some communication with a stranger in the Court compound after the Judge had finished his charge but before the Jury had delivered their verdict. That was a case which fell within the scope of section 300 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

(1) 46 Ind. Cas. 513; 46 C. 207; 27 C. L. J. 553; 22 C. W. N. 740; 19 Cr. L. J. 737.

The present case does not do so, as the charge was not over at the time. The proper course for the Pleader to have taken was to inform the Sessions Judge what he had seen as soon as the Judge resumed his seat on the Bench, but he did not do so and nothing was in fact done in the matter till the accused was convicted and the case came up to this Court in appeal. In the circumstances we do not consider we should interfere.

The appeal is dismissed.

BRINDABAN—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182—Giving false information of threatened breach of peace—Burden of proof—Offence, essentials of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476, proceeding under—Notice to accused, whether necessary—Failure to give notice, effect of.

Where proceedings are initiated against a person under section 182 of the Penal Code for giving false information of a threatened breach of the peace, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove not merely an absence of a reasonable and probable cause for giving the information but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Although notice to the person immediately concerned is not essential in a proceeding under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, yet an order passed without such notice, particularly where there is no evidence one way or the other to show a dishonest motive, will not be upheld. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Unao, dated the 9th June 1919.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Jagannath Prasad has a daughter, who is stated to have been first betrothed to Brij Kishore, one of the sons of Brindaban. The 9th June 1919 was fixed for the celebration of the marriage; but before that date arrived, Jagannath Prasad for some reason or another entered into an engagement with another person named Jagannath for the marriage of that daughter with the brother of the latter, fixing the same date for the purpose. It is obvious that there was in the circumstances a danger of two marriage parties reaching the house of the father of the bride. Brindaban came to know of the engagement made by the father of the bride with the brother of Jagannath and feeling that there was a danger of a breach of the peace, if both the marriage parties reached simultaneously, he moved the District Magistrate to restrain both the parties for a week from proceeding with the celebration of the marriage. The learned District Magistrate granted an ex parte order in the terms asked for.

On the next day Jagannath, the brother of the prospective bridegroom, appeared and objected to the restraint imposed on him. The learned Magistrate set aside his previous order and directed the prosecution of Brindaban under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. It was not proper, however, for him to have passed such an order without giving an opportunity to Brindaban to show cause against it. No evidence was taken. Brindaban apparently believed that there would be a danger of a breach of the peace, if both the marriage parties proceeded simultaneously to the house of the father of the bride.

SHER DIL v. EMPEROR.

He was, of course, ill-advised in moving the Criminal Court for a redress, for even if the contract of betrothal was broken, his remedy lay elsewhere. There is no reason, however, to question his bona fides.

As pointed out in Emperor v. Ramchandra Yeshwant Adurkar (1), to bring a case under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code it is necessary for the prosecution to prove not merely an absence of a reasonable and a probable cause for giving the information but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given. If it is true that the marriage had been first settled with one of the sons of Brindaban and was afterwards settled without any information to Brindaban with the brother of Jagannath, as asserted here, it cannot be said that the information given was false. It is possible that Brindaban may have had notice that the engagement made with his son had been broken off; but this is a matter on which no evidence was gone into.

Section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure nowhere says that in proceedings under that section a notice shall be given to a person who is immediately concerned thereby, but as observed in Thakur Das v. Emperor (2) and Ram Piari Rai v. Emperor (3), the Court looks with disfavour upon any order which is passed without such notice, particularly in a case where there is no evidence one way or the other on the record to show a dishonest motive.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the order passed by the Court below discharged.

Appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Shahpur, dated the 21st August 1918, convicting the appellant.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Sher Dil, a Pathan of Mauza Chapri in the Mianwali District, has been convicted of the murder of Samundar Khan, who originally came from the same village, and sentenced to death.

The facts alleged by the prosecution are as follows: Samundar Khan went with his daughters, Ghanammi and Gulai, about 12 and 8 years old respectively, to look for work in the Canal Colony. He met Sher Dil, who was accompanied by his mother, sister and two brothers, and they advised him not to go in the direction he intended as plague was prevailing. He turned back and the two parties travelled together. One morning they stopped to rest at a place about two kos from Rangpur, and while they were there, Sher Dil suddenly attacked Samundar Khan, giving him several blows with the back of a hatchet and killing him. He then dug a pit close by and buried Samundar Khan's body in it. The party proceeded on till they reached Pilo Wains where Sher Dil sold the two girls, whom he represented to be his sisters. Musammat Ghanammi was sold to Mehr Khan for Rs. 300 and Musammat Gulai to Shera for Rs. 88 and the marriages were performed. Sher Dil and his relations then departed. In the morning Musammat Ghanammi began crying and told Shera's mother, Musammat Fatima, P. W. No. 15, that Sher Dil was not her brother and that he had killed her father. Mehr Khan and another man went after Sher Dil's party and told them that Musammat Ghanammi was crying and did not want to stay. Sher Dil returned with his relations, paid back the money he had received, and took the two girls away with him. They went to Khaglanwala, wher Sher Dil's mother, sister and brothers left him. In the morning the sentry on the roof of the Khaglanwala Police post saw Musammat Ghanammi and her sister running and crying, followed by Sher Dil who was threatening them. He asked the girls what was the matter and Musammat Ghanammi said that the man had murdered their father and she was afraid he might sell them again. Musammat Ghanammi's statement was recorded by the Sub-Inspector and Sher Dil was arrested. Musammat Ghanammi afterwards pointed out the place where she said her father had been killed and the place where he had been buried. The ground at the latter place had been dug up by animals. All that was found was a man's bones. The Assistant Surgeon to whom they were sent for examination says that there were no cuts on the bones, and he is unable to state the cause of death.

Before the Committing Magistrate the deceased's daughters, Musammat Ghanammi and Musammat Gulai, and the appellant's mother, Musammat Gul Masti, his sister, Musammat Shah Masti, and his brothers, Mir Badshah and Lal Badshah, all deposed to having seen Sher Dil kill Samundar Khan with a hatchet. Of these witnesses Mir Badshah was not examined in the Sessions Court as he had enlisted in a regiment at Quetta. The others all retracted in that Court the statements made before the Magistrate and deposed to the effect that Samundar Khan was not struck with the hatchet, but that he had fever and a boil on the groin and that as he was sitting down he fell back and died.

The case against the appellant rests on the depositions of these witnesses given before the Committing Magistrate and transferred to the record of the Sessions Court, Mir Badshah's under section 33 of the Evidence Act and the others' under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code.

The learned Sessions Judge has given certain reasons for believing those statements in preference to the statements made at the trial. First he says that if Samundar Khan had a plague bubo, he would hardly have been in a condition to travel on foot. But even if the statements of the witnesses he exaggerated in this respect, it is still quite possible that Samundar Khan may have died suddenly from heart failure. Next it is urged that if Samundar Khan had not been murdered, his companions would have carried him to the cemetery and buried him there. This argument has little force, seeing that the party was some miles away from the nearest village or habitation. Then it is said that Musammat Ghanammi had no good reason for falsely accusing Sher Dil of murdering his father. But it appears to us quite possible that she invented the story of the murder when she was at Pilo Wains because she did not wish to remain with Mehr Khar, and that she repeated the accusation at Khaglanwala in order to get free from Sher Dil, who she was afraid would sell her to some one else. It is also possible that she and her sister may not have been present when their father died, and that from his dying suddenly and being buried by Sher Dil they may have really thought that Sher Dil had murdered him.

As regards the fact of Sher Dil's mother, sister and brothers having given evidence against him in the Committing Magistrate's Court, this may be accounted for by their being afraid that they would themselves be charged with abetting the murder if they did not give evidence in support of Musammat Ghanammi, for it is admitted by the Sub-Inspector Aziz Beg that they were at the beginning suspected by the Mianwali Police of complicity in the murder and were under supervision.

There are, on the other hand, several points in favour of the appellant. To begin with, the story of the murder having been committed openly, not only in the presence of Sher Dil's relations but also in the presence of Samundar Khan's daughters, does not appear to be a probable one.

Secondly, it is, as noticed by the learned Sessions Judge, a point in the appellant's favour that no blood was found on the coat which Samundar Khan was wearing at the time of his death and which appears to have been recovered from a camel man to whom it had been given, notwithstanding that in the first information report Musammat Ghanammi said that blood had flowed from her father's mouth and nose.

Thirdly, there is the fact that after Samundar Khan's death Sher Dil took the children first to a Chhabil near Billu, where he bought food from Arjan Singh (P. W. No. 17) and then to two other villages before reaching Pilo Wains, where they arrived on the third day, and that the girls made no complaint at any of those places. The learned Sessions Judge thinks they might have been intimidated by Sher Dil, but would Sher Dil, if he had been the murderer of their father, have taken such a great risk, knowing that they might at any time have accused him to the people they met?

Then it is surely strange that the girls should have allowed themselves to be sold and given in marriage by their father's murderer without saying a word about the murder. It was not till the next morning that Musammat Ghanammi told Musammat Fatima that Sher Dil had murdered her father. What is still more remarkable is that, as is stated by Musammat Fatima and Mehr Khan, Musammat Ghanammi and her sister went to the length of embracing Sher Dil when he came back to Pilo Wains to take them away and return the money. This was most unnatural conduct if the prosecution theory as to Samundar Khan having been murdered is true. Musammat Fatima says that when Sher Dil returned, Musammat Ghanammi admitted that the story she had told was a pretence which she had made in order that she might be able to rejoin her party. If that is true, it is impossible to rely on the evidence which Musammat Ghanammi gave before the Magistrate.

In Umar v. Empress (1) Plowden, J., expressed the opinion and that a conviction based solely on evidence given by the winesses before the Committing Magistrate and retracted by them at the trial is unsustainable, and a similar view was taken by Banerji, J., in Queen-Empress v. Jeochi (2) and Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (3).

We think in the present case not only that it would be unsafe to convict solely on the statements made by the alleged five witnesses of the murder before the Committing Magistrate but that there are strong grounds, apart from the fact of the statements having been retracted, for doubting their truth.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit Sher Dil and direct that he be set at liberty.

Appeal accepted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1100 OF 1918.

February 7, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Richardson and Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, KT.

BHAIRAB CHANDRA BARUA —ACCUSED —PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190 (1) (a), 200, 202—Complaint—Examination of complainant, omission of, effect of—Order calling upon accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for bringing false charge, nature of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate making order to proceed with trial.

A Magistrate who under section 190 (1) (a), Criminal Procedure Code, takes cognizance of a case on a complaint ought to examine the complainant before issuing summons. But his omission to do so is a mere irregularity and does not go to the root of his jurisdiction. [p. 701, cols. 1 & 2.]

An order passed by a Magistrate calling upon a person to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 211 of the Penal Code, is neither in form nor in effect an order under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code. Such an order is not one under any provision of the Criminal Procedure

Code and even where it leads to an inquiry by another Magistrate, it does not in any way affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who took cognizance of the case to summon the accused and proceed with the trial [p. 701, col. 2; p. 702, col. 1]

Rule against an order of the Sessions Judge of Jalpaiguri, dated the 22nd November, 1918, affirming that of the Deputy Magistrate of Jalpaiguri, dated the 15th September 1918.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree in the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother. We recently had occasion (Criminal Revision No. 988 of 1918 decided on the 22nd November 1918) [Harihar Roy v. Emperor (1)] to consider the question whether the report of a Police Officer disclosing the commission of a non-cognizable offence was a "Police report" within the meaning of section 190 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code or a "complaint" within the meaning of section 1 (4) (h). The conclusion at which we then arrived was that it must be one or the other. That being so, the Magistrate in the present case had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the non-cognizable offence disclosed in the report submitted by the investigating Police Officer, the offence, namely, of making a false charge punishable under section 211 of the Penal Code.

If the question were free from authority, I should for my part be disposed to say that the report of a Police Officer in a non-cognizable case is a 'Police report' for the purposes of section 190 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code. In that case the Magistrate had clearly power to issue process against the petitioner as he has done. But if that view be not correct and the report in question was a complaint, then the only error which the Magistrate committed was in not examining the complainant, that is the Police Officer, on oath before issuing process. In the case I have referred to [Harihar Roy v. Emperor (1)], we held that such an omission was an irregularity only and that it did not go to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. That being so, there is no reason why merely on this ground we should interfere in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction and direct that the case be commenced de novo.

Then there is the proceeding which has been interpolated between the report of the Police Officer and the issue of process. The petitioner was called upon to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for making a false charge, and the proceeding was made over for hearing by Mr. Majid, the senior Deputy Magistrate, who had received the report, to a Junior Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Hollow. The petitioner took no exception at the time. He showed cause and produced witnesses. Mr. Hollow, after examining the witnesses, was of opinion that the case instituted was false and with this expression of opinion the case went back to Mr. Majid who issued process. Now it is quite true that the course so followed is not expressly sanctioned by the Code. But in Queen-Empress v. Sham Lall (2), which was decided by a Full Bench, Sir Comer Petheram laid it down that a prosecution for making a false charge should not be commenced "until it is clear that the original charge has been either dismissed or abandoned." He went on to say:—

"I should add that in order to show conclusively that such a charge (that is the original charge said to be false) has been abandoned, I think that before the order to prosecute for the false charge is made, the person who made the original charge should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it."

Norris, J., also says:—

"I am also of opinion that a Magistrate should not take cognizance of an alleged offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code, until the alleged offender has had an opportunity of substantiating the original charge, and such original charge has been disposed of in due course of law."

Wilson, J., concurred in the judgments of Petheram, C. J. and Norris, J., and Tottenham and Ghose, JJ., concurred generally in those judgments. Tottenham, J.'s reservation is not pertinent to the question now under discussion.

Since Sham Lall's case (2) and in deference to the opinion expressed in that case, the procedure adopted in the present case has been commonly followed and it is only recently that any exception has been taken to it. The position now is that if the person accused of having made a false charge is not afforded an opportunity of proving the charge, the Magistrate's proceedings are attacked on that ground on the authority of the Full Bench case. If having been given such an opportunity, he fails to prove the charge and is then prosecuted, he complains that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to call upon him to show cause.

Different views may perhaps be held as to the propriety of calling upon an accused person to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for an offence. But clearly it was the opinion of the Full Bench, or at any rate of the majority of the Judges who composed it, that in the special case of a charge made to the Police and reported by the Police to be false, the maker should have notice before being prosecuted under section 211. In giving such notice the Magistrate, though he may not be acting under any express provision of the Code, cannot be said to act without jurisdiction. The maker may show cause or may refuse to show cause, but whichever course he adopts, having made the charge, he can hardly be heard to complain. Similarly in proceedings under sections 195 and 476 of the Code, a person could make no grievance out of the fact that before an order was made against him under either of those sections, he was given notice or was called upon to show cause why such an order should not be made.

Moreover, as my learned brother has said, if the proceedings held in such cases upon an order to show cause are without jurisdiction, the result is merely that those proceedings are null and void. They do not affect the Magistrate's jurisdiction to issue process.

What happened in the present case was this. On the receipt of the Police report Mr. Majid stayed his hand. He gave the petitioner the opportunity required or suggested by the Full Bench case before issuing process. I agree with my learned brother that in no view of the case can it be said that in issuing process Mr. Majid acted without jurisdiction and that the Rule should be discharged.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Jalpaiguri to show cause why the order of Mr. Majid, dated the 15th of September 1918, summoning the petitioner to answer a charge under section 211, Indian Penal Code, should not be set aside.

It appears that the petitioner lodged an information to the Police of a dacoity said to have been committed in his house. The Police after investigation submitted a report to the aforesaid Mr. Majid, the Senior Deputy Magistrate of Jalpaiguri, stating that the case was false and recommending the prosecution of the petitioner. This report purports to be one under section 173 of the Criminal Procedure Code. On receipt of this report on the 22nd of July 1918, the petitioner was called upon by Mr. Majid to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for an offence under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, and subsequently on the 3rd of August 1918 he referred the matter to Mr. Hollow, another Deputy Magistrate, for disposal. Mr Hollow, after examining some witnesses produced by the petitioner, was of opinion that the charge of dacoity was false and recommended his prosecution. Mr. Majid accepted this recommendation and summoned the petitioner to appear before him to answer to a charge under section 211, Indian Penal Code. The Rule is directed against this order.

Mr. Pugh, who appeared in support of the Rule, contended that this order is illegal and should be set aside mainly on two grounds. In the first place, he contended that the report of the Police Officer who recommended the prosecution of the petitioner was not a Police report within the meaning of section 190 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code, as the Police report contemplated by that section is a Police report in a cognizable case, that an offence under section 211 being non-cognizable, the Magistrate was not competent to take cognizance of the case on such a report. This contention is based on the decision of a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court: King-Emperor v. Sada (3), in which it was held that where a Police Officer, of his own motion, makes a report to a Magistrate in a non-cognizable case, it is not a Police report as there is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which empowers a Police Officer to make such a report. As observed by Mr. Justice Chandavarkar, "the Legislature has studiously attached to the expression 'Police report' a peculiar meaning throughout the Code wherever the expression occurs, and pointed out the occasions when and the purposes for which such reports should be made. Where a Police report goes beyond those occasions and purposes, it must fall within the definition of 'complaint' in section 4, clause (h) of the Code." The same view was taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Chidambaram Pillai v. Emperor (4), where it was held that a report of a Police Officer must be some statement made in connection with or at least under colour of the duty of the maker as a Police Officer. A somewhat different view was, however, taken by two learned Judges of this Court in the case of Dilan Singh v. Emperor (5), in which it was said that a Police report such as the report in the present case is not a complaint as defined in the Code, inasmuch as that definition expressly excludes a report of a Police Officer. I may, however, observe that if such a report is not a Police report within the meaning of section 190 (1) (b), it is not excluded from the definition of a complaint under section 4 (h). We have also been referred to the decision of Chapman and Walmsley, JJ., in Gangadhar Pradhan v. Emperor (6). If it were necessary in the present case to decide the point, perhaps I should not have felt very much pressed by these decisions, as the point was not directly raised in either of these two cases. The same remark applies to the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Queen Empress v. Sham Lall (2). The question, however, does not appear to be of any practical value in the decision of this case, for conceding that the learned Counsel is right in his contention and that the report was not a Police report, as stated before, it would fall within the definition of a complaint and the Magistrate could take cognizance of the case under section 190 (1) (a), in which case he ought to have examined the complainant before issuing the summons (section 200, Criminal Procedure Code). But his omission to do so is a mere irregularity and does not go to the root of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

In this view of the case the action of the Magistrate was not in excess of his powers. In support of the Rule reliance has also been placed on the case of Tayabullah v. Emperor (7), but as the order complained of is neither an order under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, nor an order under section 476, that case seems to me not to have any bearing on the present question. I think, therefore, that the proceedings in this case have been properly initiated.

Next it is argued that Mr. Majid having made over the case for disposal to Mr. Hollow, it was Mr. Hollow alone who had seisin of the case and Mr. Majid had no jurisdiction to direct the issue of summons without an order of transfer passed in conformity with the provisions of section 528 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If the order were an order under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, on the authority of the ruling in Hari Charan Gorai v. Srish Chandra Sadhukhan (8) the contention would have been well founded. The order making over the case to Mr. Hollow for disposal is not very clear, but both Mr. Majid and Mr. Hollow understood it to refer not to the actual charge under section 211 against the petitioner but to the proceedings calling upon the petitioner to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under that section. In my opinion the order was neither in form nor in effect an order under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code. Assuming that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case upon a complaint, it does not appear that the Magistrate was not satisfied as to the truth of the charge against the petitioner. His object in calling upon the petitioner to show cause was, no doubt, to give an opportunity to prove the charge of dacoity contained in the information laid by him before the Police and was in conformity with the practice that was recommended in the Full Bench case of Queen Empress v. Sham Lall

(2). But as pointed out in the case of Sarba Mahton v. Emperor (9) and Tayabullah v. Emperor (7), the procedure, though obviously fair, is not one under any provision of the Code and its adoption, even if it led to an enquiry by another Magistrate, can in no way affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who took cognizance of the case to summon the accused and proceed with the trial. I think, therefore, this Rule should be discharged.

Rule discharged.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 488 OF 1919.

September 17, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ryves.

SANTI LAL AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Certificate, forged, submitted to Collector—Sanction to prosecute, whether necessary.

Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application to a matter coming before a Collector in his administrative capacity.

Where, therefore, an applicant for a Patwarship submitted a certificate as to his age, and criminal proceedings were taken against him on the ground that the certificate had been fabricated:

Held, that section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not apply to the case, and that the proceedings were not bad because the sanction required by that section had not been obtained.

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, Second Class, Sub Divisional Officer, Tahsil Karaoli, Agra District, dated the 29th of July 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision asking this Court to quash a commitment to the Court of Session under section 456 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears that the applicant applied to the Collector to be appointed patwari in place of a former patwari who had died. He attached to that application a certificate of the "upper primary class" which was dated the 16th of May 1917. In that his age appears 15 years and 9 months. A complaint was lodged in the Court of the Committing Magistrate by one of the Zamindars of the village charging the accused with fabricating this document or at any rate using it knowing it to be fabricated. The Court below has found that a prima facie case has been made out against the accused and has committed him to the Court of Session. Two grounds are taken in revision against this commitment. First of all, it is said that sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a condition necessarily precedent to the institution of the case. It seems to me section 195 has nothing whatever to do with the present case. The application was made to the Collector under Chapter III of the Land Revenue Act. I think it was made in his administrative capacity entirely and that he was not acting in any way as a Court.

The next ground taken is that the certificate was not used dishonestly and could not in any case mislead the Collector. The object of putting in the certificate, it is quite obvious, was to induce the Collector to believe the statement that the applicant was a major, that is, 18 years of age. The certificate, even as altered, does not show that the applicant had reached the age of 18. It only made him 17 years and some months of age. Further it has been said that the Collector has come to the conclusion that the applicant was in fact 18 years of age and, therefore, this document, even if altered, could not possibly deceive him. It seems to me that these are matters which may be considered at the trial, but I do not think that they would justify me at this stage in quashing the commitment. If the document was a forged document and if the forgery was intended to make out the applicant's age was approximately 18 years, then the intention of the applicant seems to be quite clear. I will not interfere.

Application dismissed.

BUGGA v. EMPEROR.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE MARTIAL LAW COMMISSIONERS AT LAHORE.

July 23, 1919.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Lord Buckmaster and Lord Atkinson.

BUGGA AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Privy Council—Criminal jurisdiction—Interference by Board, when permissible.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is not a Court of Criminal Appeal, but there is a class of cases which falls within the category of the ruling in Dillet, In re (1887) 12 App. Cas. 459; 56 L. T. 615; 36 W. R. 81; 16 Cox C. C. 24', in which the Sovereign is advised to interfere where there has been a miscarriage of justice referred for its meaning to the fundamental principles of justice, for instance, if there has been anything coram non judice. [p. 719, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the arguments.

Sri John Simon, K. C. (with him Mr. B. Dube), for the Appellants.—My Lords, this is a petition by twenty-one subjects of the King, natives of India who have been sentenced, as regards twenty of them, to death, and as regards the other one, to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, by a Special Commission, which is purporting to exercise the powers of a Summary General Court-Martial.

[Sir Erle Richards, for the Respondent.—The death sentence has been commuted in fifteen cases.]

I did not know that that was the case. I suppose it has been commuted to penal servitude for life.

[Sir Erle Richards.—I do not know.]

At any rate the remaining prisoners are still under sentence of death.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—How many are still under sentence of death?]

Five, at any rate, are still under sentence of death.

[Sir Erle Richards.—I have not been able to ascertain exactly how many. Certainly two are. There is a doubt about three others on the cables. Fifteen have certainly had their sentences commuted.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—However, it is a very serious matter?]

Yes, my Lord, in any view. The matter is not only very grave for these persons, but it is a matter, I think, of some constitutional importance, and though the materials on which this petition has been drawn, have, as I gather is also the case with my learned friend, been derived largely by cable, and, therefore, may be at little fragmentary, I think I shall be able with confidence to put the outline of the matter strictly before your Lordships. If your Lordships would be good enough to take the petition, I have had it drawn in a way which I think will most clearly indicate what the points are. In the first paragraph we set out that the petitioners, 21 in number, are native British subjects, living at Amritsar in the Punjab, who have been sentenced to death, "with the exception of your petitioner Ghulam Hussan (No. 16), who has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, under Martial Law by a Special Commission purporting to exercise the powers of a Summary Court Martial. Your petitioners, however, are not soldiers or subject to military law, and desire to obtain special leave to appeal from the sentences pronounced upon them in the circumstances following. On the 10th April 1919 there was a riot in the city of Amritsar."

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—A question may arise as to the powers of the General Summary Court-Martial.]

Yes.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—And a question may arise whether the Sovereign in Council would review the proceedings of a General Court-Martial. I have never heard of it being done.]

I think we shall have to go through the story. I quite agree that may be a question. That particular point may be avoided by saying that this Special Commission, though it really derives its authority, if it has any, from a Regulation which provides for the trial of persons by Courts-Martial, is nonetheless composed of not three soldiers but one soldier and two civilians.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—What arrested my attention was something rather in your favour; that it is only purporting to exercise the powers of a Summary General Court-Martial.]

Yes.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It may be still a Court with the powers of a Court-Martial?]

That, I think putting it roughly, will turn out to be the position, but nonetheless my clients are in the position of persons who have been dealt with under the conditions of Martial Law. "On 10th April 1919 a riot took place in the city of Amritsar. The riot was over by the evening of that day. None of your petitioners were taken in arms or taken in the actual commission of any overt act of rebellion, or otherwise taken in the act within the meaning of paragraph 1 of Regulation X of 1804"—It will be necessary to look at that Regulation—"which Regulation confers powers to provide for the immediate punishment of the offences therein specified by sentence of Court-Martial. By Act IV of 1872, passed by the Governor-General of India in Council, section 3, Regulation X of 1804, is declared to be in force"—this was in the Punjab—"but this Regulation only confers power to punish civilian inhabitants by sentence of Court-Martial within the limits above indicated, and your petitioners, therefore, did not fall within it." The point is this. Under Regulation X of 1804 which has just been given a continuing legislative operation, it has been pointed out by a learned commentator, and I think will be probably accepted as correct, that paragraph 2 of the Regulation is really strictly limited to cases in which the civilian is really taken in flagrante delicto.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—That is the Regulation of 1804?]

Yes. May I read the recital first? I will read the first paragraph which is really the recital: "Whereas, during wars in which the British Government has been engaged against certain of the native powers of India, certain persons, owing allegiance to the British Government, have borne arms in open hostility to the authority of the same, and have abetted and aided the enemy, and have committed acts of violence and outrage against the lives and properties of the subjects of the said Government; and whereas it may be expedient that, during the existence of any war in which the British Government...may be engaged with any power whatever, as well as during the existence of open rebellion against the authority of the Government"—we are coming to a document which was issued by the Governor-General, in which he recites that in his judgment open rebellion had occurred—"in any part of the British Territories subject to the Government of the Presidency of Fort William, the Governor-General.....should declare and establish Martial Law within any part of the territories aforesaid, for the safety of the British possessions, and for the security of the lives and property of the inhabitants thereof, by the immediate punishment of persons owing allegiance to the British Government who may be taken in arms, in open hostility to the said Government, or in the actual commission"—that means who are taken in the actual commission—"of any overt act of rebellion against the authority of the same, or in the act"—this is to say, who may be taken in the act—"of openly aiding and abetting the enemies of the British Government within any part of the territories above specified: the following Regulation has been enacted by the Governor General in Council, to be in force throughout the British Territories immediately subject to the Government of the Presidency of Fort William from the date of its promulgation." Then section 2: "The Governor-General in Council is hereby empowered to suspend or to direct any public authority or officer to order the suspension of, wholly or partially, the functions of the ordinary Criminal Courts of Judicature within any zilla, district, city or other place, within any part of the British Territories subject to the Government of the Presidency of Fort William and to establish Martial Law therein, for any period of time while the British Government in India shall be engaged in war with any native or other power"—of course that is not this case—"as well as during the existence"—I lay particular stress on 'during the existence':—"of open rebellion against the authority of the Government, in any part of the territories aforesaid, and also to direct the immediate trial by Courts-Martial of all persons owing allegiance to the British Government, either in consequence of their having been born or of their being residents, within its territories and under its protection"—these 21 persons are certainly British subjects, and owe allegiance—"who shall be taken in arms in open hostility to the British Government, or in the act of opposing by force of arms the authority of the same or in the actual commission of any overt act of rebellion against the State, or in the act of openly aiding and abetting the enemies of the British Government within any part of the said territories." On that I make these two comments: first that the persons who are contingently subject to such a mode of trial are all persons who are taken in flagrante delicto, and none of these 21 persons is in that position.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Or in the act of openly aiding or abetting the enemy.]

Yes, but "taken" governs all. These persons were not taken in the commission of any overt act at all. They were at their homes five or six days afterwards when they were arrested. The other point I make on section 2 is this. Your Lordship notices that it is introduced by the power of the Governor-General in the case of an open rebellion to suspend wholly or partially the functions of the ordinary Criminal Courts of Judicature, and to establish Martial Law therein. The two things are related, and the scheme of this power, therefore, is: first, it is limited to persons who are taken in flagrante delicto, and secondly, the extent to which you set up an exceptional tribunal is precisely the same, is co-extensive with the suspension, for the time being, of the ordinary Courts for dealing with such cases, and that, of course, is quite consistent with the well-understood theory in our constitution here at home that in time of actual necessity, when the immediate necessity is to deal with persons who are actually found in a state of rebellion, it may be that on the principle of some sort of law of necessity—

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Martial Law is not law. It is this; that the Commander-in-Chief supersedes all the Courts. He in the exercise of his power tries them by Court Martial.]

Yes, I am only anxious to show the limitation of that. Your Lordship will take it from me, perhaps without reading it, that there is a legislative provision.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—He may partially suspend. He may allow the Civil Courts to proceed in certain cases. A State can do anything. This is not quite consistent with the real theory of Martial Law. The Government can do things which are analogous to Martial Law.]

Yes.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—There was a case before this Board which I argued, and argued unsuccessfully, on appeal against the sentence of Court-Martial in South Africa, in which Lord Halsbury gave a famous definition.]

Yes. It is a matter which has been the subject of much discussion since.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—There it was held that Martial Law had survived the hostilities, I think.]

Not quite. At present I am not proposing to argue the matter, but only to put before your Lordships in order five or six matters.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It sets up a Special Tribunal, and imposes on that tribunal the obligation of passing one sentence, and one sentence only, on the people who are brought before it.]

May I go on with my argument—though we may have to return to the consideration of the constitutional aspect of this? I had the South African case in my mind. I am pointing out that in paragraph 2 we say: Here is Regulation X of 1804, and on the true construction of that Regulation it is limited to the case of persons who are taken in the act of doing a number of specified things. It is confirmed by the legislative provision of 1872.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—There is a remarkable provision in section 4, which says that the Governor General may direct people to be tried before the ordinary Court notwithstanding all this, which by hypothesis would supersede it.]

Yes, it is curious.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I do not suppose you are going to argue that the Governor-General could not get himself empowered to do all these things by the Indian Legislature?]

That is not the point I am going to make at all. Your Lordships will come to the point.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I only wanted to clear it out of the way.]

Your Lordships will understand that it will be important for the moment to see what is the extent to which the Regulation of 1804 can go. I make the point that the Special Tribunal exceeded its powers. Then paragraph 3:—"On the contrary, your petitioners were arrested while peaceably occupied at their homes, or otherwise, some days after the riot was over." It is perfectly plain that they were not taken in the act of anything. "No copy of the charges against them is available, but the accusation against your petitioners was that of committing an offence under section 121 and other sections of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)." Section 121 is as follows:—"Whoever wages war against the Queen, or attempts to wage such war, or abets the waging of such war, shall be punished with death or transportation for life, and shall forfeit all his property." Offences against the Indian Penal Code are to be tried by the Criminal Courts referred to in section 28 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), and no jurisdiction to try by Court-Martial is thereby conferred. Now we come to the special provision: "On April 14th, 1919"—that is four days after the riot was over—"the Governor General of India purporting to act under section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915"—the case I have to present to the Board largely turns on considering that section and the related sections—"made the Martial Law Ordinance No. I, which came into operation at midnight on the 15th April 1919."—Then we have set it out in extenso, and I will read it: "Whereas the Governor-General is satisfied that a state of open rebellion against the authority of the Government exists in certain parts of the province of the Punjab." The reasons, no doubt, why that is recited is because section 72 confers certain powers upon the Governor-General to make Ordinances in cases of emergency. Again your Lordships will remember that in Regulation X of 1804 there had been a reference to cases where it might be expedient during the existence of open rebellion to make certain provisions. So it recites:—"Whereas the Governor-General is satisfied that a state of open rebellion against the authority of the Government exists in certain parts of the Province of the Punjab; And whereas the Governor-General in Council has in exercise of the powers conferred by section 2 of the Bengal State Offences Regulation, 1804,"—that is the one your Lordships have just looked at—"suspended, in respect of offences described in the said Regulation with which any person of the classes therein referred to may be charged, the functions of the ordinary Courts of Judicature within the districts of Lahore and Amritsar in the aforesaid province and has established Martial Law in the said districts"—that is the first half of section 2, which I have just read to your Lordships—"and has directed the immediate trial by Courts-Martial of all such persons charged with such offences"—those offences must necessarily be offences that you are taken in the act of committing. "And whereas an emergency has arisen which makes it expedient to provide that such trials shall be held in the manner and by the tribunals hereinafter provided? Now, therefore, the Governor-General in Council in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915, is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance, Ordinance No. I of 1919. 1 (1) This Ordinance may be called the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919." If the same has anything to do with it there is no doubt what it is: "(2) It shall come into operation at midnight between the 15th and 16th April 1919. 2 (1) Every trial held under the Bengal State Offences Regulation, 1804," that is Regulation X of 1804 —"shall, instead of being held by a Court-Martial, be held by a Commission consisting of three persons appointed in this behalf by the Local Government." The President is a Military Officer, and the two others are civilians.

Sir Erle Richards.—May I say this? I do not think my friend knows the practice in the Punjab. It is true the President was in the army to start with, but your Lordships are probably aware that in the Punjab Civil Service they take into their employ a number of Military Officers It was an old practice that began in troubled times. This gentleman has for 25 years been a civil servant, and for a long time he has been acting as Sessions Judge.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Does he maintain his military rank?]

[Sir Erle Richards.—Yes, he is a Major or a Colonel. It is a question that has been much discussed, whether they ought not to abandon their military rank on going on to the Bench.]

Sir John Simson. —I am obliged to my friend for his explanation. I was not aware of it. "The Local Government may appoint" —that means the Government of the Punjab—"as many Commissions for this purpose as it may deem expedient. At least two members of every such Commission shall be persons who have served as Sessions Judges, or Additional Sessions Judges, for a period of not less than three years, or persons qualified under section 101 of the Government of India Act, 1915, for appointment as Judges of a High Court. The Local Government shall nominate one of the members of the Commission to be President thereof. A Commission shall be convened by the Local Government, or by such officer as the Local Government may authorize in this behalf. A Commission shall have all the powers of a General Court Martial under the Indian Army Act, 1911." I know Lord Haldane is specially familiar with this subject matter.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It is a very different thing from a District Court Martial.]

Yes There are four kinds of Courts-Martial in the Indian Army system, a General Court Martial, a Summary Court-Martial, a District Court-Martial and a Summary General Court-Martial.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Is there a Judge Advocate in India who reviews the decisions of Courts-Martial?]

There is an express provision here that they are not to be reviewed.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE — A Court-Martial decision goes up for review to the Judge Advocate. That is the safeguard in Courts Martial, and here one would expect to see that there was some one who advised the Governor-General separately.]

I think it is clear by inference, from paragraph 5 of the petition—"The finding and sentence of a Commission shall not be subject to confirmation by any authority."

[Sir Erle Richards.—The confirmation of a Court-Martial is necessary under the Army Act. That is to take these proceedings out of the provisions of the Army Act.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Under the Indian Army Act confirmation is required; is that confirmation by the Judge Advocate?]

Sir John Simon. I think not: The findings and sentences of General Courts-Martial may be—I think that really means must be—confirmed by the Commander-in Chief in India or by any officer empowered in this behalf by the warrant of the Commander-in-Chief in India. I do not think there is a Judge Advocate.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That means confirmation is necessary and those are the people who exercise the power?]

Yes.

[Sir Erle Richards.—There is a Judge Advocate.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—In time of war the power is handed over to the Commander-in-Chief, and it may be that in India they have taken the situation as more approximating to war than peace, and have handed it over to the Commander-in Chief, in which case it is natural that they should say that no confirmation is required.]

Sir John Simon.—It remains to be seen whether it cannot be reviewed by the Privy Council.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Does this Ordinance do more than create a Court under the provisions of the Regulation of 1804 to exercise the powers that are there conferred?]

I do not think it does, but I point out in the paragraph immediately following after I have set out in this document that this Ordinance would not have touched me at all, it is because it did not touch me that they made another Ordinance and tried to bring me in.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You would not be hurt by this Ordinance.]

No. Will your Lordships look at paragraph 7: "Save as provided by section 6 the provisions of this Ordinance shall apply to all persons referred to in the said Regulation." My first way of putting it is that I am not a person referred to in the Regulation.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Your alleged offence was on the 10th April.]

I am not on the question of date for the moment, though it is a second reason. I am not a person who has been taken in the act of open rebellion or anything whatever. I have been dealt with by this summary procedure although any case against me is an inferential case depending upon evidence, and not upon the fact that I was seen there with arms in my hands taking part in the actual violence.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Your first point is this tribunal does not suit your case.]

Yes.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Your second point, I suppose, is on the dates.]

Yes, in any case my offence was an offence on the 10th April, whereas this was to be limited to persons who are charged with any of the offences therein described committed on and after the 13th April.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I do not think any presumption should be made against the power of the Legislature to say that an offence really committed is to be tried, not by such and such a Court, but by such and such another.]

It is only one of the points I am going to develop in a moment.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The point applies to the second Ordinance as well.]

Yes. I have not read paragraph 4. Will your Lordships look at that? After providing that it is to have the power of General Court-Martial under the Indian Army Act, 1911, "and shall, subject to the provisions of this Ordinance, in all matters follow so far as may be the procedure regulating trials by such Courts-Martial prescribed by or under the said Act", it goes on: "Provided that where in the opinion of the convening authority a summary trial is necessary in the interests of public safety"—I have some difficulty is seeing how a summary trial could be necessary in my case; it appears now it was a little too summary—"such authority may direct that the Commission shall follow the procedure prescribed for a Summary General Court Martial by or under the said Act, and the Commission shall, so far as may be and subject to the provision of the Ordinance, follow such procedure accordingly." Then it says that sections 78, 80 and 82 of the Act are not to apply. I will tell your Lordships what they are. Section 78 of the Indian Army Act is the section which provides that every Court-Martial shall be attended by a Judge Advocate or somebody nominated by him, that is to say, a man who knows something about the way in which to present a case. This is explicitly removed from its application. Then section 80 is a provision which entitles the accused to be asked whether he objects to be tried by a member of the tribunal. All that right of objection by the accused is removed. Then section 82 is the provision that there is to be an oath of the President and Members before they try the prisoners.

So far I could not be hurt though, as I have pointed out in my paragraph 5, "It will be observed that this Ordinance No. I was given a retrospective effect, but it only applied to offences committed on or before the 13th April 1919. Inasmuch as the accusation against your petitioners was of offences committed on the 10th April 1919, Martial Law Ordinance No. I had no application to them. (6) As a matter of fact, perfect order had been restored in the city of Amritsar by the 15th April 1919. The civil, criminal and other Courts throughout continued to administer justice in the ordinary course without any interruption, and there was in fact no ground for having recourse to Martial Law or to exceptional tribunals on the ground that the ordinary Courts were not discharging their functions. Nevertheless your petitioners were not brought before the ordinary Courts of the country." Then in paragraph 7 we say: "On April 21st, 1919, the Governor-General of India purporting to act under section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915, made a further Ordinance, No. IV of 1919, which is in terms following: "Simla, the 21st April, 1919. An Ordinance further to extend the application of the Martial Law Ordinance 1919. Whereas an emergency has arisen which renders it necessary to provide that Commissions appointed under the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919,"—that is No. 1, which your Lordships have just had—"shall have power to try persons and offences other than those specified in the said Ordinance: Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915, the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—Ordinance No. IV of 1919, 1. This Ordinance may be called the Martial Law (Further Extension) Ordinance, 1919. 2. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, the Local Government may, by general or special order, direct that any Commission appointed under the said Ordinance shall try any person charged with any offence committed on or after the 30th March 1919'—that is moving the date back, and it says 'any offence'; a question will arise as to what is the true construction of that—"and thereupon the provisions of the said Ordinance shall apply to such trials accordingly and a Commission may pass in respect of any such offence any sentence authorized by law."

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—"Any offence" must be an offence as defined by the Regulation of 1804.]

I venture to think so.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That brings it back to the same position as the other.]

If I am right in that view, which I submit with some confidence, that is a conclusive objection to the regularity of this proceeding. It has been treated as though it has conferred upon this Special Commission the right to try a man for obtaining credit when he is a bankrupt or any other crime in the calendar, and I venture to think it does not do anything of the sort.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—If you once depart from the Regulation of 1804 there are no limits.]

That is what I mean. "It will be observed that this later made Ordinance does not purport to suspend the operation or sittings of the ordinary Courts." Section 2 is a thing which has two limbs. Its principal object appears to be to extend the retrospective operation of Ordinance No. 1 so as to cover offences of still earlier date. "Your petitioners were tried by a Commission presided over by a military officer,"—I quite accept what my learned friend, Sir Erle Richards, says; I call him a military officer, but I gather he will also be in the permanent civilian service.

[Sir Erle Richards.—He is a Sessions Judge, I think.]

Sir John Simon.—" With the powers of Summary General Court-Martial and sitting at Lahore on the 29th May 1919 and the following days."

Your Lordships will notice that this was more than a month after the second Ordinance: " Your petitioners were prevented by a summary order of the military authorities which prohibited all persons from entering the area in which Martial Law had been proclaimed from obtaining the assistance of Counsel. "

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—If you are tried by Court-Martial, you are not entitled to be defended by Counsel].

I put it in the form of a dilemma. I say either I am entitled to be tried as a person who is being tried under Martial Law, in which case I have some very serious objections to raise, or else I am being tried by something which is not Martial Law in which case I am entitled to Counsel—one or the other.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It may be, the true construction is this, that it is a civilian tribunal which has all the powers of a Court Martial, including the power to say the prisoners can have a prisoner's friend.]

[Sir Erle Richards.—I do not understand my friend to say that the prisoners were not defended by Counsel. The burden of their grievance is that they were not allowed to have certain Counsel up from Bengal. My instructions are that they were defended by Counsel. At any rate they could have got Counsel in Lahore. They wanted Counsel from Bengal and there were particular reasons why they wanted particular persons, but there was an order of the military authorities at the time that no persons from Bengal were to come into the Punjab.]

Sir John Simon.—I rather infer that they got some professional assistance but it was not the professional assistance they wanted.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—However, there is another answer, that the military authorities had made an order that nobody was to come from Bengal into the Punjab.]

Then paragraph 10: "On June 2nd, 1919, the said Commission purported to convict your petitioners of offences under section 121 of the Indian Penal Code and passed sentences of death and confiscation of your petitioners' property." I do not think your Lordships need look at the judgment for the moment. I wanted to put my points in order. Before I set them out, would your Lordships look at section 72 of the Government of India Act, 1915? There is nothing new in it but it will be convenient to look at it. The Governor-General purports to be making these Ordinances under section 72: "The Governor-General may, in cases of emergency, make and promulgate Ordinances for the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof, and any Ordinance so made shall, for the space of not more than six months from its promulgation, have the like force of law as an Act passed by the Governor-General in Legislative Council"—these are important words—"but the power of making Ordinances under this section is subject to the like restrictions as the power of the Governor-General in Legislative Council to make laws." Therefore one asks oneself, where shall one find the restrictions on the power of the Governor-General and the Legislative Council to make laws? You will find that in section 65, sub-section 2, which contains a provision which is not by any means new, which has more than once been commented on and expounded and which is really the protection for constitutional liberty in India. It is this: "Provided that the Governor-General in Legislative Council has not, unless expressly so authorised by Act of Parliament, power to make any law repealing or affecting (i) any Act of Parliament passed after the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty and extending to British India (including the Army Act and any Act amending the same); or (ii) any Act of Parliament enabling the Secretary of State in Council to raise money in the United Kingdom for the Government of India, and has not power to make any law affecting the authority of Parliament, or any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom, or affecting the sovereignty or dominion of the Crown over any part of British India."

I submit it has already been so construed in India that what that refers to is this: it is a principle which is as old as Calvin's case (1). Allegiance and protection are reciprocally due from the subject and the Crown and the constitutional laws that provide for the liberty of the subject are the quid pro quo for the duty of allegiance. This is precisely the constitutional proposition which in a very famous passage Chief Justice Cockburn expounded in his charge to the Jury in the Jamaica Riots Case, Queen v. Nelson. He there explains exactly the same proposition. He says that the reason why it is not constitutional to put civilians upon trial by Court-Martial is this. Your Lordships remember that Nelson and the other accused persons had sat upon the Court-Martial and sentenced somebody to death and he was shot, and they were subsequently tried for murder in this country. He points out the reason why a civilian cannot be put on trial by Court-Martial among other things is precisely because you get the allegiance of persons to the Crown in a reciprocal relation with the constitutional guarantee of a regular trial in the ordinary Courts of Law. It is rather interesting to notice that Chief Justice Cockburn anticipates or at any rate speaks in exactly the same terms as Regulation X of 1804. He says: "Nothing that I am saying applies to the case where a man is taken with arms in his hands in the midst of a violent disturbance." He points out in a case such as that it may well be that apart from any application of law the authorities, not because they are applying any law but because they are dealing with it from the necessities of the case, may have to shoot him out of hand. He is pointing out that there is this relation between allegiance on the one hand and constitutional protection on the other, and apparently that is exactly what is meant here when the Governor General is given certain extreme powers. You see how extreme they are, because Regulation X itself gives a very remarkable power, but it is not a power that can be exceeded. Those words are to be given a meaning.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Is the Queen v. Nelson reported in the Law Reports?]

I have here from the Inner Temple Library Chief Justice Cockburn's charge to the Jury, with some comments by Mr. Finlayson whose book is of great interest. I rather think that your Lordship referred to it when you applied for leave to appeal in the South African case. I want to read two or three short passages

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—I am always afraid that in fixing my attention too closely upon one point I may prevent my mind from grasping the real value of the others. Up to the moment it seems to me that the real point in this petition is this: that the Governor-General exercised powers conferred by the Statute of 1804 and that he was entitled to do so.]

Certainly.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The Order that he issued was an Order which purported in terms to relate and to relate only to those offences that were prescribed in the Regulation of 1804.]

(1) 7 Rep. 1.

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—The subsequent Ordinance that was issued did nothing except that it caused the previous Ordinance to have a retrospective effect.]

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You say the Regulation of 1804 has no application to you because according to its true construction the man must either be taken in arms or in an overt act of rebellion or an act of openly aiding and abetting the enemies of the British Government. You say none of these circumstances apply to your clients?]

That is so. I agree I have rather moved from one point to the other. Before I submit what is really a separate ground, the ground of section 72, may I just a little expound the point which Lord Buckmaster has referred to. I want to point out that one has in these matters to be candid, just as candid when one is opposed as when one is applying ex parte It is a possible contention that Ordinance No. 4, the amending Ordinance, not merely increases the retrospective effect, goes back to an earlier date, but that the reference to any offence brings in any offence in the calendar of criminal law. On that I make submission that it is not so, and I point out this special reason why it could not be so.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It is only the offences therein described.]

Yes, and there is this further reason. It is a direction that a Commission appointed under Ordinance No. 1 is to have certain powers. You see what the Commission under Ordinance No. 1 is. It is a Commission that is appointed to exercise the same functions as a Court-Martial would exercise under Regulation X, and, therefore, the two things will not fit. You get a Commission which is not rightly described if it is really to be regarded as authorised to run over the whole body of the Indian Penal Code.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It is not any offence; it is any of the offences described in the previous Regulation.

Yes.

[LORD ATKINSON.—It alters the date, but not the kind of offence.]

That is what I feel. Therefore I am in this opinion, that no single one of these 21 cases, whatever may be said against the men and whatever the evidence may have been, about which I know very little, was a case of a man being taken in the act there described. It would follow, if that construction was right, that there has been here a very grave misunderstanding of the Commission's powers.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Is there any reference in the second Ordinance that was issued except the reference in section 2 to any offence?]

I have the advantage of having an alternative case. I am confining myself, and it is much better to do so, to the first way of putting it, which is the way Lord Buckmaster is now putting it to me. In that connection may I give your Lordships one other reference, a reference which I venture to think is of very great interest? I owe this to the researches of my friend Mr. Dube. I have here a book which I have also got from the Inner Temple Library called Hough's Practice of Courts-Martial. Captain Hough was a Deputy Judge Advocate General. This book was published at Calcutta in 1834.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This is with regard to Indian Courts-Martial.]

Yes.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I have never heard of this book.]

It is a book of great interest. 1834 is after Regulation X of 1804. It is pointed out by my learned friend that on page 315 of that book there is extracted an extremely interesting document which is addressed to the Secretary to the Government, Judicial Department, by the Advocate-General of that time, a gentleman named Mr. Spankie, relative to the Native Detachment Courts-Martial at Cuttack from 14th September 1817 to 4th March 1818. He extracts the report there named. What the Advocate-General is saying is this: "It appears from the documents referred to that Martial Law was put in force in Cuttack under the order of Government by virtue of Regulation X of 1804. The preamble of the Regulation states that it may be expedient in certain cases therein mentioned that the Governor-General in Council should declare and establish Martial Law for the safety of the British possessions, etc., by the immediate punishment of persons owing allegiance to the British Government who may be taken in arms in open hostility to the said Government or in the actual commission of any overt act of rebellion against the authority of the same or in the act of openly aiding and abetting the enemies of the British Government within any part of the territories above specified. (3). This enacting part conformably to the object developed in the preamble enacts" then he sets it out. Then he makes this comment:

"Four overt acts are enumerated and it seems to me quite clear that the word 'taken' in the first must on necessary construction be carried forward and annexed to each member of the sentence containing the description of the overt act."

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Which section is he quoting there?]

Section 2. He says the word "taken" is mentioned in the first of the four overt acts He says: "It must on necessary construction be carried forward and annexed to each member of the sentence containing the description of the overt act". Then he says: "Here the circumstances in which the Courts Martial are to have authority to try are clearly marked and defined. The criminal must be taken in open acts of the treasonable and rebellious description mentioned. It seems to me also liable to some doubt whether the fourth overt act specified in the Regulation does not mean an aiding and abetting of such enemies of the British Government as are contemplated both in the preamble and in section 2 - enemies with which the British Government may be engaged in war—of the rebels with arms in their hands. If there could be any doubt of the extent of the authority and jurisdiction of the Courts-Martial under Regulation X of 1804, it would be removed by the instruction of 11th April, 1805, communicated for their guidance to the authorities in Cuttack during the late disturbances. These instructions, paragraph 4, say: "If any person or persons charged with any of the overt acts of rebellion specified in Regulation XII of 1804 shall be apprehended by any Military Officer when not in the actual commission of offences of that description they are to be delivered over by the military to the civil power," etc. The Courts Martial in Cuttack do not appear to have considered themselves as at all confined to the cases of prisoners taken in flagrante delicto or even to traitorous and rebellious acts of the specific quality stated in the Regulation. They seem to have acted as if they had possessed an unqualified jurisdiction over all treasonable and rebellious acts without limitation of time, place or circumstance. The charge (conforming as in all limited jurisdictions it ought to the cases in which the jurisdiction is given) does not state the circumstance of the criminal being taken in the act, or that it was in some open act of the treasonable, rebellious quality which alone the Court-Martial could lawfully try." Then he proceeds to discuss the cases. I am anxious to take the same points here.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—To sum that up, the word 'taken' governs. Your case is that he must be taken?]

Yes.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Do you say "taken in arms?"]

I think the construction is fairly clear.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—You say they must be taken in arms?]

There are four cases. The first is that they should be taken in arms; the second case is taken in the act of opposing by force af arms; the third is taken in the actual commission of any overt act of rebellion; and the fourth is taken in the act of openly aiding and abetting the enemy. That is not what happened here.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—In order to be quite clear about the effect of the second Ordinance, is not this worthy of note, that either it must be strictly limited to the offences under the Regulation of 1804, or it must have an indefinite application?]

Yes.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Under the Regulation of 1804, the powers conferred by which are the powers that the Commissioners are to exercise and nothing else, as far as I can see there is only one sentence, death.]

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—If, therefore, this was to refer to any offence it would mean that if you caught a boy doing something silly in the street you would have no alternative but to sentence him to death and to leave it in the power of the Viceroy to exercise the King's clemency to reprieve him from a sentence which obviously could not be executed. That seems to be a potent reason why the second Ordinance can only relate to the offences mentioned in the first.]

Sir John Simon.—I accept all that. It is right to point out, of course, that the second Ordinance does enact that the Commission may pass in respect of any such offence any sentence authorised by law, but the only sentence that is really authorised by law is death. That is one way I put it. Though I am not attempting to discuss the matter I want to point out that I have a second alternative, which I venture to submit is just as powerful, and it is this. I impeach the authority of the Governor-General in Council to pass such an Ordinance as No. 4, if it has any wider construction than that. Supposing against me on its true construction Ordinance No. 4 does cover an offence which is against section 121 of the Code. I think it will turn out that these men were arraigned simply on a charge of breaking section 121 of the Code, in which case they are entitled to say these whole proceedings are coram non judice. The three Judges are sitting there with limited jurisdiction, and they seem to have thought they could try these people for ordinary murder. That would be a conclusive answer. But it is said, on its true construction, the Governer General in Council in an emergency has power to pass an Ordinance which will empower a jurisdiction wider than Regulation X of 1804, then I say, granted that is so, there may be such cases, but it cannot take the form of a proceeding against a man for what is in effect a breach of allegiance, while at the same time refusing to give him the constitutional protection which the law provides.

The constitutional protection which the law provides is as old as the Petition of Rights. This is the very thing which our ancestors insisted upon. I have traced it back a long way and the meaning of it is that although in times of emergency the Governor-General has very important powers which no loyal British subject would in any way seek unduly to cut down, still those powers are by the express terms of the Statute limited by reference to section 65, sub-section 2, and section 65, sub section 2, is a section which says that the unwritten laws and constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon may depend the allegiance of any person cannot in any way be affected. This has been raised in India. Your Lordships will find an interesting discussion on that in the 6th volume of the Bengal Law Reports. It is a case of Ameer Khan, In re (2). Mr. Justice Norman says at page 452: "Now if it be true as laid down in Calvin's case (1) that protectio trahit subjectionem at subjectio protectionem, that allegiance and protection are reciprocally due from the subject and the sovereign, it is evident that the strict observance of the laws which provide for such liberty and security ensures the faithful and loving allegiance of subjects. The infraction of such laws may be carried to such an extent as to give rise to the right of self-defence on the part of the subject, a right which, says Sir Michael Foster, 'the law of nature giveth, and no law of society hath taken away.' No man can study the history of England or can read the great judgment passed by the High Court of Parliament by the Bill of Rights on King James II, without seeing that on the faithful observance by the sovereign of the unwritten laws and constitution of the United Kingdom, as contained in the great Charter and other Acts which I have mentioned, depend in no small degree the allegiance of the subject. It would be a startling thing to find that rights of so sacred a character could be taken away by an act of the subordinate legislature."

[Viscount Haldane.—My criticism upon that is that it is so general and vague that there is hardly a thing in our constitution that would not come against this. Does not that mean the power of the Crown with regard to naturalization and with regard to the denial to a man of his specific rights as a British subject?]

[Sir Erle Richards.—Your Lordships may remember that this argument was before the Board very recently in the case of Annie Besant v. Advocate-General of Madras (3).]

[Viscount Haldane.—Did Lord Phillimore in his judgment say anything about it?]

[Sir Erle Richards.—There is a passage in 46 Indian Appeals, Annie Besant v. Advocate-General of Madras (3).]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Lord Phillimore gave a very elaborate judgment.]

[Sir Erle Richards.—Yes. May I read one passage on this point? Mrs. Besant had raised the point in regard to the Press Act. Lord Phillimore in giving the reasons of the Board said: "It was contended in the High Court and before this Board that it was beyond the competency of the Indian Legislature to enact section 22 and possibly even to enact the Press Act. This argument, which was mainly founded upon the language of Mr. Justice Norman in the cases of Ameer Khan, In re (2) (6 Bengal Law Reports at page 451), received some encouragement from the Officiating Chief Justice. But their Lordships find themselves unable to appreciate it."

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The Press Act was an Act interfering with the liberty of the subject simply?]

[Sir Erle Richards.— Yes.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I want to see how allegiance comes in here. What this Act does is to set up a special tribunal.]

Sir John Simson.—I think it is rather more than that. I should submit that it would be strictly correct to say that it is part of the constitution and indeed part of the unwritten law of the Kingdom upon which allegiance depends, at any rate in some degree, that subjects should be tried in the ordinary course of law and that civilians should not be submitted to the tender mercies of what is in effect a Court-Martial.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—What connection has that with allegiance except that it may shake the allegiance?]

That is the connection.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—To that extent every change of law does.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—Supposing there is a Statute making a certain thing a crime that was not a crime before?]

That would be an example.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It is done daily in this country. Look at the Children's Act for instance. Parents were put under restrictions with regard to their children.]

May I read one or two passages from Chief Justice Cockburn's charge, which has been referred to already? They do bear very directly on the point I am making. I am merely selecting two or three passages because your Lordships do not want the whole matter argued out now. On page 29, Chief Justice Cockburn is addressing the Jury in these terms: "But on the other hand, I think it impossible to entertain a shadow of doubt that these proceedings were utterly illegal. If it be true that you can apply Martial Law for the purpose of suppressing rebellion, it is equally certain that you cannot bring men to trial for treason under Martial Law after a rebellion has been suppressed. It is well established according to the admission of everybody, even of those who go the farthest in upholding Martial Law, that the only justification of it is founded on the assumption of an absolute necessity—a necessity paramount to all law and which, lest the commonwealth should perish, authorises this arbitrary and despotic mode of proceeding; but it never has been said or thought, except perhaps by King Henry VII, that Martial Law could be resorted to when all the evils of rebellion had passed away and order and tranquillity had been restored, for the mere purpose of trying to punish persons whom there was no longer any sufficient cause for withdrawing from the ordinary tribunals and the ordinary law."

The other passage which I have noted is on page 47, where the Chief Justice says: "I have now gone through the history of this country so far as relates to Martial Law. I believe I have mentioned every instance in which Martial Law has ever been proclaimed or been referred to. But I own that on this point I speak with considerable diffidence; for I cannot claim to have made history my special study, and my researches on this particular matter have necessarily been confined to the intervals of constant and severe judicial labour and historians may, therefore, very likely be aware of facts which have escaped me; but so far as I have been able to discover, no such thing as Martial Law has ever been put in force in this country against civilians for the purpose of putting down rebellion." There are other passages which I need not trouble about now. My other point is a good one, but I do certainly desire to have the opportunity of developing, as I think it might be developed, the argument that supposing it could be said—

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It is a much more serious thing than the other.]

It is, supposing it might be said that the second of those Ordinances, so far as its true construction goes, confers upon this wholly exceptional tribunal a power to sentence people to death because at some previous date it is said that there is evidence to show that they took part in a disturbance, then I do most respectfully submit that a subordinate Legislature which is given certain limited powers by the Government of India Act has no power to do any such thing.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I do not know what Sir Erle Richards is going to contend. Subject to that my impression is that the second of those Ordinances merely dealt with the offences cognizable under the Commission set up by the first Ordinance and that it did not set up a new set of offences. Is it your case that it did, Sir Erle?]

[Sir Erle Richards.—The view that I shall present is that the first of those Ordinances did not enlarge the nature of the offences, but the second one did.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Your case is that 'any offence' there means any offence of the sort or kind.]

Sir John Simon.—Then your Lordship appreciate I am relying upon my second string. I can see if that argument was ever likely to prevail, I should be in a strong position for saying there is plainly a limit put by the constitution of India upon the powers of the Governor-General in case of emergency to promulgate Ordinances. This is the limit. It is not competent to the Governor-General, because there is an emergency, to provide three Judges nominated by a district Government to try a small boy for stealing an apple and sentence him to death.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I think you have a strong argument for saying that the construction of the second one is one which excludes it. If it was intended to give any such power as that, the second Ordinance is far from clear: "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, the Local Government may; by general or special order, direct that any Commission appointed under the said Ordinance shall try any person charged with any offence, committed on or after the 30th March, 1919." Are not those offences ejusdem generis with the offences cognizable under the other one?]

I think so. This greatly strengthens the argument that the amending Ordinance is dealing with a Commission already constituted.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It may be the view of the Government of India is that they wish this question raised and argued, but if they wish to raise anything so big that a boy may be tried and sentenced to death for stealing an apple, one would have thought they would have put it in explicit terms.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—If it is not confined to the earlier offences it extends to any offence.]

Yes: I submit that at any rate it is in the circumstances not right that these very severe penalties, in the case of some of these men who, in spite of the remission in the case of others, are still under sentence of death, should be imposed and carried out. We were under the severest restriction of time. We were told if we did not get leave to appeal to-day the sentence would be carried out.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Let us separate the points. The first is that the offences are limited to the offences cognizable under the first of the two Ordinances.]

Yes, and in that connection I put it when arrested these men were peaceably at their homes. They were not taken in flagrante delicto in any sense. Secondly, I may point out that if upon any proper construction, the Ordinance under which this alleged jurisdiction had been conferred on this tribunal is so wide as to deal with other offences, it must deal with any and every offences which by general or special order the Local Government chooses to direct the Commission to deal with. That is exactly the thing which the Petition of Rights says cannot be done. It is almost in these words. The Petition of Rights says that the Authorities, the Crown, the Executive have directed Commissions to try persons for various offences and it proceeds to set out that that was unconstitutional and contrary to law, and that if the thing which as long ago as 1628 was declared to be a breach on the part of the Executive of the duty of protection which is correlative with allegiance, I submit on its true construction the second Ordinance merely carried the time further back. May I call attention to the other points I make? I also make this point. I submit that an exceptional tribunal cannot be substituted for the ordinary law here so that it can deal with retrospective matters, among other things, for this reason that a proclamation of Martial Law itself cannot have any retrospective effect, as Chief Justice Cockburn points out in his charge to the Jury to which I have referred. A proclamation of Martial Law may by way of warning have an operative effect from the time of the proclamation, but it cannot in itself confer jurisdiction which did not exist before to deal with matters which have already passed.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Let us suppose the construction were this, that the powers are the existing powers which are simply handed to the Commission to apply; the offences are not new offences, but only the mode of trial is new and exceptional. The Viceroy sets up this Tribunal, and he says it is to try people for all offences committed since a certain date in March.]

It is a separate point, and not a point necessary for me at this stage, but it is a point I want to save, because when one reads Regulation X of 1804, a question will arise as to what is the meaning of conferring jurisdiction upon a special tribunal to deal with persons who shall be taken in arms. It may be that the meaning of it is that you are to suspend the ordinary law. There might be a proclamation warning everybody that a very exceptional situation had arisen, and then saying that anybody who is taken with arms in his hands or is in open rebellion is going to be dealt with by drum-head Court Martial. It is a very different proposition to say that a proclamation could be made saying that something that a man did three days ago was going to be dealt with by an exceptional tribunal. I have raised, I think, sufficient grounds for the purposes of to-day.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—I suppose there will be this answer on your first point. They are going to say that the second Ordinance was issued under the Statute of 1915, and that they did not attempt to rely upon the power given by the 1804 Regulation as they did on the first, and secondly, they must have intended to cover something which the first Ordinance did not cover.]

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—What do you say to that?]

I say first of all the amending Ordinance No. 4, the Martial Law Amending Ordinance, is in terms dealing with a Commission appointed under Martial Law Ordinance No. 1.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—And it is to extend its application.]

Yes. You must, therefore, say: What Commission is this about which you are speaking? You find it is a Commission which is given a jurisdiction subject to a limit of date within the ambit of Regulation X of 1804.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That is not quite what is in my mind. I think what can be said against you is this: If the object of this second Ordinance was merely to make the first Ordinance retrospective, it would not be necessary to invoke the powers conferred by section 72 of the Act.]

It has been done in both cases. The same thing has been done. It gets rid of that difficulty. There is no question that it is done under section 72.

Sir Erle Richards.—The Governor-General can only make Ordinances under that section.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—The first Ordinance comes into operation on the 15th and 16th April, and it takes cognizance of all offences committed after the 13th April.]

Sir John Simon.—Yes. The only other thing I wanted to mention is this: Sometimes when petitioners are able to get leave to appeal from your Lordships, they are limited to the grounds which they have indicated in their patition. I hope that your Lordships, if you are minded after hearing the argument to give leave, will not limit me in that way, because really the matter has come to our knowledge very recently, we are dealing with fragmentary materials and we should go into the matter more fully if your Lordships give leave, and put forward any further grounds which occurred to us.

BUGGA v. EMPEROR.

(Counsel and parties were ordered to withdraw and after a short time were called in again).

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Sir Erle, as at present advised, there is one point on which their Lordships want you to satisfy them, that there has been no miscarriage of justice, that is, that the second Ordinance enlarges the powers under the first, because if the powers under the first are not enlarged, they do not extend the time unless a person is taken in the act. Will you confine yourself to that point? Really it is a very formidable point. If we give leave to appeal here, we should not be able to confine or think it right to confine the appellants with regard to the other points which come in incidentally, although it may be that we should not have given leave on those points.

Sir Erle Richards, for the Secretary of State.—I am very well aware of the very great importance of this point, because these are not the only men who have been sentenced by this sort of tribunal. There was a very general rising in the Punjab and a number of Europeans were murdered. I want your Lordships to remember that it is a matter of great importance.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—We realise that.]

Everybody who has been convicted would then have a right of appeal to this Board.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—No, only the people who have been convicted when they have been seized otherwise than in flagrante delicto.]

That is a large number.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—All we can do is to look at the Ordinances.]

It is really such an extremely short point that I do not want to press it if your Lordships think there is a case to argue, but the argument I shall advance if this case is to be argued in detail are these.

[LORD ATKINSON.—In its terms Ordinance No. 4 extends to everything. It can never have been intended to extend to everything. You must look for some restriction and the only place you find it, as it seems to me, is in the Regulation of 1804.]

May I put it in this way?

[LORD ATKINSON.—Where do you find the restriction? It cannot be intended to extend to every crime.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—What you want the Board is to avoid expressing any definite opinion if we thought it was a proper case for argument on appeal.]

Sir Erle Richards.—I do want to put the sort of arguments that I shall advance before your Lordships. I think the whole thing turns upon this Ordinance. We are not dealing with Martial Law but a statutory enactment.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—In a most significant way the Governor-General in Council has referred to the Bengal State Regulation of 1804. It would have been perfectly open to him to have said:—Under my powers of 1915 I make a new Ordinance, instead of which he says "I refer to the Bengal Regulation."]

May I read this last Ordinance because I think it turns largely upon that? It is very short. It begins in this way: "Whereas an emergency has arisen which renders it necessary to provide that Commissions appointed under the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, shall have power to try persons and offences other than those specified in the said Ordinance."

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The purpose is established by the fact that the persons charged with offences were to be persons charged with offences committed after April 12.]

I submit the ordinary way to construe it would be that 'every person' means persons other than those taken in the act, and so forth.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—If the Governor-General made such a revolutionary change in the law, and said that everybody was to be tried for stealing a pair of boots or getting drunk in the streets before this Commission by Martial Law, would not he have said so?

I do not think the Ordinance gives that power at all. If your Lordships would look at paragraph 2, what it says is this: "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Martial Law Ordinance, 1919, the Local Government may by general or special order direct that any Commission appointed under the said Ordinance shall try any person charged with any offence committed on or after the 30th March 1919." That is the thing which is to be found all through the Indian legislation. You give the Local Government the power of sending offences for trial to this Commission.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The criminal law is the same all over India: there is a general code for the criminal law which is applicable to India generally. Is it not very extraordinary, if there is to be a change in the nature of the Courts, that it should go over to the Local Government?]

No, I think not, I could find cases where there are exceptional things to be dealt with and the Local Government is given the power of deciding whether those cases should be exceptionally dealt with.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This is much wider; this is saying that the Local Government shall have the power to direct that a man charged with the offence of embezzlement is to be tried by Court-Martial. I should have thought they would have said so if that was intended. It is a matter of very high policy to give that power to the Local Government. I am only referring to one of the possibilities of the system.]

It is from the point of view of the Indian statute, because the possibilities of the construction are that the change to the Local Government was meant to prevent these offences being submitted to this Special Tribunal. All through the Indian statute books you find this sort of discretion vested in the Local Government. The Local Government may authorise the trial of any person before this Commission. You may say it is a wide power, but it is not an unreasonable power, because the Lieutenant-Governor will settle whether the case is a proper one to be tried or not. That, I submit, is not an unreasonable construction.

[LORD ATKINSON. It is an authorised provision.

If it is a statute, it is authorised.—I will deal with that point in a moment. The Indian legislative body has ample power to make these provisions. I think I can satisfy your Lordships on that point.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—It is worded in such a way as to be susceptible of either of two constructions, and to my mind the limited construction is just as natural for the words as the wider one. That being so, the change purported to be made points to the limited construction.]

At this stage I do not want to prolong the argument.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I am very anxious that this Board should not express any definite view on it, but leave it perfectly open. Do you not think under the circumstances that as there is great doubt about the matter, it had better be brought here?]

If your Lordships think there is great doubt, I shall not say anything further about it.

May I say one word upon the other aspect of the case, and only one word? That argument on the construction of the section has been advanced in many cases, but it has never received any support in India except in Mr. Justice Norman's judgment and that was upset by the Court of Appeal, although they decided the case on another point.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—I can understand the objection to giving leave to appeal to raise that question, and if it stood alone it would be possible that we should not have given leave on it, but if this case comes here, of course consistently with the proper administration of justice we should allow them to raise it; but we are not encouraging it.]

I am obliged to your Lordships. This is a question which does not affect only these Courts during the war. From 1915 there have been a large number of these bodies. This body is one of many such bodies which have been sitting continuously under an Act called the Defence of India Act. It would attack a great deal that has been done in India for many years past.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—We should not give leave upon that point.]

I am obliged to your Lordships. I derive encouragement from that expression of opinion. May I add one word? It is open to my friend to raise questions upon the facts in this sense, that he may point out that there was some mistake of law. That, of course, will be open to him. I would only ask on behalf of the Secretary of State that we have reasonable notice of the points that my friend intends to raise, because it may be necessary for us to give evidence.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—You will give that undertaking, Sir John?]

[Sir John Simon.—Certainly. I am sorry I cannot indicate more precisely now what my points will be, but my friend knows that we are acting under a severe restriction as to time.]

Sir Erle Richards.—I am not complaining, because I have not the record, and I know nothing about what happened below.

MAQBUL AHMAD v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—We think under the circumstances it is right that there should be leave to appeal. This Board, as we have often said, is not a Court of Criminal Appeal, but there is a class of cases which is generally defined as the class of cases which falls within the category of what the Board laid down in Dillet, In re (4), in which they do advise the Sovereign to interfere where there has been a miscarriage of justice referred for its meaning to the fundamental principles of justice, for instance, if there has been anything coram non judice', that is a case in point. If the argument that has been addressed to us here is right, the case has been coram non judice. There is one point, at any rate, on which we think that there is a serious point to argue, without expressing any opinion upon it, and that is that the second Ordinance has not extended the scope of the first Ordinance, and that the first Ordinance is limited to cases where the defendant is taken in flagrante delicto. There are other points besides that; there is the question of whether this could have retrospective action; that is quite another point. Then there is the question as to allegiance, to which reference has been made. I do not say whether we should have given leave to appeal on these points as regards the allegiance; I think we should have been reluctant to do so; but it must be open to the appellants when they come here to argue these points. We do not express any opinion except that we think that within the principles of Dillet's case (4) we are bound to advise the Sovereign that there should be a scrutiny of what has happened with a view to ascertaining whether there has been a miscarriage of fundamental principles of justice.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—I hope nothing I have said will be taken as expressing any considered opinion.

Sir John Simon.—We quite understand that.

Sir Erle Richards.—That will be taken as applying to anything that may have been said on the other point I have taken.

Leave granted.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 407 OF 1919.

July 21, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shadi Lal.

MAQBUL AHMAD—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR THROUGH RAM LABHAYA—COMPLAINANT—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 476—Complainant not allowed to produce his evidence—Order for prosecution based on preliminary investigation—Failure of Magistrate to record his reasons—Order, whether justified—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211.

It is doubtful whether an investigation under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be regarded as a judicial proceeding and may be used for supporting an order under section 476 of the Code. [p. 720, col. 1.]

Where a Magistrate did not himself give any reasons for holding that a complaint was false and did not record any evidence except the statement of the complainant, and proceeding entirely upon the result of the investigation, under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, ordered the prosecution of the complainant under section 211 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the order could not be sustained. [p. 720, col. 1.]

Where a complainant is not allowed to adduce the whole of his evidence in support of his complaint, exceptionally strong reasons are required to justify an order against him under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 720, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Karnal, dated the 21st February 1919, sending the case against the petitioner under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, to the Court of Nawab Umar Daraz Ali Khan for trial.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The District Magistrate's order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the prosecution of the petitioner Maqbul Ahmad is open to several objections. In the first place, the Magistrate does not himself give any reason for holding that the complaint of the petitioner is false. Further, it appears that he did not record any evidence except the statement of the complainant, and proceeded entirely upon the result of the investigation made unde section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, by Chaudhri Niamat Khan, a Magistrate of the 1st Class. It is doubtful whether an investigation under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, can be regarded as a judicial proceeding and may be used for supporting an order under section 476, vide Kachi Madar Labhai, In re (1) and Bapu v. Bapu (2).

Mr. Ghulam Rasul also invites my attention to the fact that the complainant was not allowed to adduce the whole of his evidence in support of his complaint, and it is clear that in a case of that kind exceptionally strong reasons are required to justify an order under section 476, vide Kachi Madar Labhai, In re (1). It is also contended on the strength of the observations contained, in Ali Muhammad v. Emperor (3), that the District Magistrate, who was himself a Magistrate of the 1st Class, was not competent to direct another Magistrate of the 1st Class to make an investigation under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, because the latter Magistrate was not subordinate to the former, and that the result of the investigation so made cannot be utilized for the purpose of ordering the prosecution of the petitioner. I need not pronounce any final opinion on the subject, because I am clear that the order complained of cannot be sustained.

I accordingly accept the application for revision and quash the order under section 476.

Application accepted.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 71 OF 1917.

June 13, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Batten, A. J. C.

TUKARAM KUNBI—APPLICANT

versus

PANJABRAO, STYLING HIMSELF AS GANPATRAO—NON-APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 439—Service of process, method of—Proceedings under s. 145—One party not served with notice—Proceedings, legality of—Jurisdiction, want of—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The law for service of a summons in criminal cases is on the same lines as the rules for the service of a summons in a civil case.

In an inquiry under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, both sides must be heard: consequently, if one of the parties to the enquiry is not served and the Magistrate proceeds with the case, there is a defect of jurisdiction, and his order is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court.

Madho Prasad v. Jaggansi, 53 Ind. Cas. 615; 20 Cr L J. 775, followed.

Criminal revision of the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Katol, under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, dated the 5th February 1917.

Messrs. Gangadhar Sitaram and D. W. Kathale, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. R. Naidu, for the Non Applicant.

ORDER.—In this case one of the parties to an enquiry under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was not served. The summons was attached to his house in his absence in Nagpur. No "due diligence" was used to effect personal service within the meaning of section 71, Criminal Procedure Code. The law for the service of a summons in criminal cases is on the same lines as the rules for the service of a summons in a civil case, and the remarks in Dwarkabax v. Macleod (1) are applicable here. The elementary rule of law that both sides must be heard has been disregarded, and there has been a defect of jurisdiction similar to that in Madho Prasad v Jaggansi (2). As to this Court's jurisdiction to interfere in revision, I entirely agree with the remarks of Prideaux, A. J. C., in the case last cited. It is also to be observed that the remarks as to the jurisdiction of this Court in revision when the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction, contained in Murat Singh v. Paika Bai (3), are obiter dicta. As agreed to by the District Magistrate, I set aside the Magistrate's order, and direct that proceedings be taken up de novo and proceeded with according to law.

Order set aside.

ABDUL SAMAD AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Succession—Alienation by one heir to discharge debts of deceased, whether binding on co heirs—Co-heirs, whether bound to pay share of debt.

A voluntary alienation by some of the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan in possession of the estate, for the purpose of paying the debts of the deceased, is not binding upon the co-heirs who do not join in making the alienation, but in view of the provision of the Muhammadan Law that the payment of debts takes precedence over the inheritance, such an alienation can only be set aside on condition of the claimants paying their share of the debt due by the person through whom they claim title which has been discharged by the sale. [p. 721 col. 2; p. 722, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 7th January 1919, modifying the decree of the Munsif, North Unao, dated the 25th May 1918.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Syed Zahur Ahmad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Hidayatullah owned a grove and certain other property which devolved on his death on his widow, Musammat Likhi, and on his nephews, the plaintiffs. According to the Muhammadan Law, the share to which Musammat Likhi was entitled was one fourth and that to which the plaintiffs were entitled was three-fourths. Hidayatullah died on the 9th December 1908 From the time of his death Musammat Likhi remained in possession of the entire estate left by her husband and sold different portions of it from time to time to pay the debts due by her husband.

The grove in dispute was sold by her to Ahmad on the 23rd March 1909 in lieu of Rs. 200, out of which Rs. 125 were left with the vendee for payment to Sheo Prasad in satisfaction of a debt due by her husband and Rs. 75 were left with him for payment to Imdad Ali on account of a debt taken by Musammat Likhi herself. The plaintiffs seek to avoid that sale-deed so far as it affects their share.

The Court of first instance allowed them a decree subject to the payment of their three-fourths share of the debt, due to Sheo Prasad, which Musammat Likhi had liquidated by the sale of the grove. The lower Appellate Court, however, allowed the plaintiffs to recover their share of the said grove without the payment of their share of the liability for the debt discharged by Musammat Likhi.

The Courts below are unanimous in finding that Rs. 125 were due to Sheo Prasad on account of a debt due by Hidayatullah. They further find that the money borrowed by Musammat Likhi from Imdad Ali was not taken in connection with the funeral expenses of Hidayatullah. The ground upon which the lower Appellate Court refused to charge the plaintiffs with a proportionate liability for the money paid to Sheo Prasad was that the lady had Rs. 171 in her hands as the surplus realized by the sale of some other property to the defendant on the very day on which the grove in dispute was sold and that she could have paid the debt due to Sheo Prasad out of that money. The two transactions cannot, however, be mixed up in the manner suggested. The defendant was undoubtedly a party to both the transactions, but it was not his business to see that the money, he was paying, should be applied by the lady in a particular manner. He could not go behind the contract entered into by virtue of the sale-deed. Having paid the consideration in good faith to the vendor, he cannot be ousted from the property purchased at the instance of the co heirs of the vendor, unless the latter pay their share of the debt which was discharged by the sale in question. In Mahadeo Prasad v. Chand Bibi (1) a voluntary alienation by the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan in possession of the estate for the purpose of paying the debts of the deceased was held to be not binding upon the heirs, who did not join in making the alienation; but in view of the provision of the Muhammadan Law that the payment of debts took precedence over inheritance, the alienation was set aside on condition of the claimants paying their share of the debts due by the person through whom they claimed their title which had been discharged by the sale. The plaintiffs are not, therefore, entitled to have the sale set aside except on payment of their share of the debt due to Sheo Prasad by Hidayatullah, which was discharged by the sale of the grove in question. If Musammat Likhi did not discharge that debt out of other money which she might have had in her hands, the vendee cannot be made to suffer for it.

(1) 2 Ind. Cas. 922; 12 O. C. 146.

In regard to the debt due by Musammat Likhi to Imdad Ali, the finding of the Court below is conclusive.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed for possession of the three fourth share of the grove in dispute subject to the payment of Rs. 93-12-0 to the defendant within six months from this date, the parties bearing their own costs throughout. In case of non payment, the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 19 OF 1916.
December 19, 1918.
Present:—Mr. Fawcett, J. C., and Mr. Kincaid, A. J. C.

NARAINDAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
BUTO AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Partition, suit for—Prayer for demarcation and possession of share, whether includes ejectment—Ejectment, whether can be granted.

A suit in which the plaintiff asks that certain survey numbers be partitioned and possession given to him of his particular share as demarcated, includes a claim to relief by ejecting any defendant who raises the contention that the plaintiff is not entitled to partition of one of those survey numbers and that that survey number is in such defendant's possession and ownership. The mere fact of the plaintiff not specifically asking for relief by ejectment of defendants from any part of his demarcated share, of which they had possession, would not debar the Court from granting such relief if the Court thinks it just to do so. [p. 724, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Joint Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fatechand Assudomal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, J. C.—The plaintiff-appellant has sued for partition and separate possession of his share in Survey Nos. 149, 592 and 591, alleging that he was entitled to $\frac{2}{3}$rds share under a Court sale certificate of 1913 in his favour and that he was in joint possession of the said share. The defendants' main contention was that out of these three numbers, No. 591 belonged to them and had been in their exclusive and adverse possession to the knowledge of plaintiffs' predecessors in title, and, that accordingly the plaintiff was not entitled to any partition of this number. They also pleaded that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it had been brought and that it was time barred. On these pleadings the following issues were raised:—

1. Whether the land in suit is the undivided property of plaintiff and the defendants in proportions of $\frac{2}{3}$rds and $\frac{1}{3}$rd as stated in the plaint?
2. Whether plaintiff is in joint possession with the defendants of the property in suit? If not, what is the consequence?
3. Whether Survey No. 591 is the divided and exclusive property of defendants as pleaded in paragraph 6 of the written statement?
4. Whether the suit is not maintainable in the form in which it has been brought?
5. Whether the suit is within time or not?
6. What should the decree be?

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit held that the land in suit had been privately divided in about the proportions $\frac{2}{3}$rds to $\frac{1}{3}$rd, but the survey numbers as they stood did not represent the real shares and required to be partitioned. He also held that, on the documents produced in the case, the portion of the three numbers that had been conveyed to the defendants, comprised not the whole Survey No. 591 but Survey No. 149 and a small portion of No. 591 adjoining Survey No. 149. He further held that although at one time there might have been certain boundary marks to show the respective pieces of the defendants and the plaintiff's predecessors in-title, these marks do not now exist, so that there was nothing demarcating actually the separated pieces of the parties. He also held that the defendants had not proved their exclusive possession of Survey No. 591 and that, in any case, such possession did not begin until 9 or 11 years prior to the suit. He further was of opinion that the objection to the frame of the suit was unduly technical and that the suit was maintainable. Accordingly, he directed partition to be effected by the Revenue Authorities of the three survey numbers in the manner already mentioned.

The defendants appealed to the District Court against this decision. In the memorandum of appeal objection is taken to all the findings of the lower Court but the only one which has been considered by the learned Joint Judge is the one taken in paragraph 9 of that memorandum, namely, that when a partition has once in any manner been made of a property, no second partition of that property can be made. He raised the following two issues:—

1. Whether the land in suit is undivided property?

2. Whether in the event of a finding in the negative, the plaintiff-respondent can be granted any relief in this suit?

He found both these questions in the negative. He says in his judgment that it is a fundamental principle that a suit for partition will lie only in respect of undivided land. Once a division has been made, no re-distribution through a Court is possible. In this case the original owners were a family of Muhammadans and each family had been in physical possession of a separate portion. That acquired by the appellant was either Survey No. 591 or a different portion. It followed that either they were in possession of Survey No. 591 as lawful owners, or as trespassers. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge involved this corollary that at one time or the other, the appellants or their predecessors had trespassed on Survey No. 591, but this finding went beyond the pleadings since the respondent had not pleaded trespass, and had he done so, he would have had to prove that he or his predecessors-in-title had been in possession and enjoyment of Survey No. 591 within 12 years. No such plea had been raised, nor had evidence been proved on that point. The effect of the decision of the lower Court was to give him an ejectment decree for which he did not and could not ask. He, accordingly, reversed the decree of the lower Court with costs throughout. In this second appeal the main question is whether this view is justified. Mr. Rupchand for the appellants argues that though the plaintiff may not have substantiated his allegations that the land was undivided in the sense of there never having been any demarcation or separation, and that the plaintiff was in joint possession of the share, yet the pleadings and the issues raised in the case covered sufficiently the main points of contention between the parties as to the alleged right of the plaintiff to any part of the Survey No. 591 and that, if a formal amendment were necessary, the Court should have allowed such amendment and not rejected the plaintiff's entire claim on the ground on which this had been done. On this point the fundamental rule, as laid down by the Privy Council in Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (1), is that the case tried must be such as is either raised in the pleadings or is consistent with the case as originally laid, and that the state of facts and equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff should not be departed from. On the other hand there are various rulings that though a plaintiff may fail to prove the whole case set up by him, a decree may issue on the case proved, and the mere fact of the absence of a formal issue is immaterial when the defendant has not been taken by surprise, cf. Balmakund v. Dalu (2), Sayad Muhammad v. Fateh Muhammad (3), Hassanbhai v. Umaji (4) and Ahmad Wali Khan v. Shamsh-ul-Jahan Begam (5).

I think the present case is not, however, one in which the relief sought and granted by the Subordinate Judge can be said to be outside the pleadings or to depend on a plea which has, in any way, taken the defendants by surprise. The plaintiff has a document of title in his favour which prima facie gives him a right to some part of each of these three survey numbers. He comes to the Court and asks that those survey numbers should be partitioned and separate possession given to him of his particular share as demarcated. Such a claim, in my opinion, clearly includes a claim to relief by ejecting any defendant, who raises the contention that the plaintiff is not entitled to a partition of one of these survey numbers and that that number is in such defendant's exclusive possession and ownership. Therefore, it seems to me that the Joint Judge is not correct in saying that the effect of the decision of the lower Court was to give the plaintiff an ejectment decree for which he did not and could not ask. In any case the mere fact of his not specifically asking for relief by ejectment of the defendants from any part of his demarcated share, of which they had possession, would not debar the Court from granting such relief, if the Court thinks it just to do so, see Order VII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code. It is also to be noted that there is no finding by the Subordinate Judge that there are particular demarcated portions in these three survey numbers which represent the prior partition of which he speaks. On the contrary, he finds that there are no boundary marks now in existence, showing how the survey numbers were partitioned. The only demarcation that does now exist is the splitting of the old Survey No. 132 into three separate survey numbers, on which the defendants rely in support of their case that Survey No. 591 exclusively belongs to them. But this is a demarcation by the Revenue Authorities which is not binding on the Courts, and which can be corrected if the plaintiff is able to show that he has a title to any part of these three survey numbers which is in the defendant's possession. The extracts from the Record of Rights which have been put in did not raise any presumption against the plaintiff's case, for the first extract which supports the defendants' claim to Survey No. 591 is neutralised by the later extract, which shows the plaintiff as a co-sharer in these survey numbers. It is quite clear from the issues raised and the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment that the parties were well aware of the real question in dispute, namely, the defendants' alleged exclusive right to this Survey No. 591, and that the defendants have not been taken by surprise or prejudiced by the mere fact that the plaintiff in his plaint made an unsubstantiated allegation as to there having been no prior partition and his being in joint possession of the three survey numbers.

It would, in my opinion, be very unfortunate if, after the case had been fully fought out in the lower Court, the litigation was to end in the conclusion which has been arrived at by the lower Court. Of course if an effectual and certain partition had been proved, then I quite agree with the learned Joint Judge that, whatever the documents might show to the contrary, yet the Court would not interfere with the partition already arrived at. But the Subordinate Judge has certainly not found that any such partition had been arrived at, nor has the Joint Judge discussed the evidence on this point and arrived at a conclusion to the contrary.

Accordingly, I think this is a case in which the Joint Judge has erred in law in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on the preliminary point discussed in his judgment. I would, therefore, reverse the decree and remand the appeal for re-admission on the District Judge's file and fresh hearing and decision on the other points raised in the appeal by the defendants to his Court.

Costs to abide the result.

KINCAID, A. J. C.—The facts of the case are shortly as follows: —

There was a Muhammadan family who owned a survey number, which at one time was designated as Survey No. 132. It is important to remember that the original owners were a family of Muhammadans because of the frequency with which the words "undivided" and "partition" have been used in the judgment of the lower Court. They had a separate interest in the property, but the property had never been divided by metes and bounds. From the hands of this Muhammadan family the defendants acquired ⅓rd share and the plaintiff obtained at a Court sale a title to the remaining ⅔rds share. On the strength of his sale certificate the plaintiff went to the first Court and asked that he should be given the ⅔rds of the property to which the sale certificate entitled him. The defendants did not seriously dispute his right to the ⅔rds, but they said that a portion of Survey No. 132, since re-numbered as No. 591, had by process of time and possession become their exclusive property. The lower Court found that the plaintiff was entitled to the ⅔rds share and found also that the defendants had been in enjoyment of a certain part of the property which had belonged at one time to the Musalman family, but was unable to decide which part it was. The lower Court could find no evidence that defendants had been in exclusive possession of Survey No. 591. But looking to the papers which had been filed in the suit, the lower Court found that the defendants ought to have been in possession of Survey No. 149 and part of Survey No. 591 and it awarded to them this part of the estate; the remainder of the property the lower Court awarded to the plaintiff. Against this decision, the defendants appealed to the Court of the first appeal. The learned Judge found that the land in suit was divided property and that the plaintiff was prevented by limitation from obtaining any relief.

A second appeal has been made to this Court. It appears to me that the learned Judge of the lower Court was in error when he said that the defendants were in possession of Survey No. 591 either as lawful owners or as trespassers. The first Court never found that the defendants were in possession of Survey No. 591 at all. All the lower Court found was that the documents in the case showed that the defendants ought to be in possession of Survey No. 149 and part of No. 591.

The learned Pleader for the defendants has urged that the plaintiff on coming to the Court to eject the defendants should have proved his possession of over 12 years. But that is not, in my opinion, a correct statement of the case. The plaintiff came to the Court under the title based on the sale certificate. He claimed to have a ⅔rds share in the property, and this claim so far is not seriously denied by the defendants. When, therefore, the defendants contended in reply that they had been in exclusive and adverse possession of a particular part of this property, the burden of proof lay upon them and that burden was rightly placed on them by the learned Judge of the first Court.

As the learned Judge of the Appellate Court made an error which vitiated his entire judgment, I agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner in ordering that the case be sent back for re-admission on the file and re-hearing.

Costs to follow the result.

KESRI KUMAR v. RAM RANI.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 16th September 1916.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by Musammat Ram Rani for possession of the property of her deceased father Thakur Prasad. The original defendants were two paternal uncles of Thakur Prasad, Achuta Nand and Tek Dhar. Achuta Nand subsequently died and his son Kesri Kumar and his nephew Budh Sagar were substituted in his place. Thakur Prasad died in 1910 leaving no sons but one daughter, the plaintiff. He had admittedly separated from his collateral relatives and was succeeded by his widow Musammat Mahesh Dei who died on 20th June 1913. On her death the defendants as the nearest collaterals obtained possession of the property. The present suit was instituted on 8th February 1914. Thakur Prasad belonged to the clan of Sankaldipi Brahmans, who migrated to Oudh from Bhojpur in Behar and who are reputed to have originally come to India from Ceylon (Sankaldip). They are mentioned on page 30 of Mr. Carnegy's Notes on the Races, Tribes and Castes of Oudh, prepared in the year 1868, in the following terms:—

"But besides all these, there are numerous other families of Brahmans, with none of whom, however, have any of the above 16 descriptions any communion of food, marriage, &c. These are:—

"(1). Sankaldipis who are said to come from Sankaldip or Ceylon, and to which tribe the great Shahjang family with its knighted chief belongs. The former influential head of the local family, in the days of his power, tried to get the restrictions regarding intermarriage, &c, removed, but without success: nor are the Sankaldipis permitted to take part in great sacrifices with other Brahmans."

The Sankaldipis of South Behar are mentioned in Bhattacharji's Hindu Castes and Sects as a distinct class of Brahmans having special customs of their own in respect of marriage.

The substantial defence to the suit was that in the family to which Thakur Prasad belonged, and indeed among the whole clan of Sankaldipi Brahmans, daughters are by custom excluded from inheritance. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected this defence and decreed the suit, hence this appeal.

A large amount of evidence, both oral and documentary, has been adduced in support of the custom and no less than twenty-three instances of exclusion in the family of the parties are mentioned by the witnesses for the appellants. We have to see whether the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for rejecting this large mass of evidence are adequate and whether the evidence itself is sufficient to establish the custom set up. We will consider, first, the documentary evidence, which consists mainly of Wajib-ul-arzes of the villages in which the property of the family is situated and other villages inhabited by Sankaldipi Brahmans, and of judgments in which the custom has been held to prevail among families belonging to this clan. The ancestral home of the family is in the village of Kursaha in the Bahraich district, and the Wajib ul-arz of this village and also of Jagtapur, where the next most valuable portion of the property of the family is situated, have been produced. It appears that no Wajib-ul-arz was prepared for the three remaining villages in which the property in suit is situated as none has been produced on either side. The defendant swears that none was prepared and he has not been contradicted. The relevant portion of the Wajib ul-arz of Kursaha, Exhibit A 189, under the head of rights of transfer and inheritance, is as follows:—

"If a co-sharer dies 'lawalad' while in a state of union his share devolves on his real brother or nephew, and his daughter or her issue (aulad) will receive no share, and the person in possession of the share will be responsible for the maintenance of the widow of the deceased co-sharer and for effecting the marriage of his daughters: and if he dies 'lawalad', in a state of separation, then his wife will continue in possession of his share for her life without power of transfer and after her death the own brother or nephew of the deceased co-sharer will be owner of the share."

The word "la walad" means etymologically "without issue", but is frequently used in the sense of "without male issue." In the same way the word "aulad," which strictly speaking means "issue," is frequently used in Wajib-ul arzes and other documents in these provinces in the sense of "male issue." It has to be determined from the context in each case when it is so used. The first rule in interpreting a document of this kind is that unless there are strong reasons to the contrary, the same word should be construed in the same sense wherever it occurs in the document. Here it is perfectly clear that the word "la walad" in the first portion of the custom means "without male issue," since in the very same sentence there is a provision for the marriage of the daughters of the co-sharer so dying and a definite assertion that the daughter and her issue are not entitled to any share in the inheritance. The natural rendering of the clause requires the word to be read in the same sense in the second portion of the extract which deals with a co sharer who dies in a state of separation. Any other rendering would be a forced and unnatural construction for which there is no warrant. The use of the word "aulad" (issue or male issue), which is the Arabic plural of "walad", in the same document is entirely in accordance with the natural construction. The reference to daughters and their issue must be to male issue, since a daughter's daughter is not an heir under the Hindu Law whereas, apart from custom, a daughter's son is. The very next sentence after the portion quoted deals with the case of a separated co sharer who dies leaving two wives one of whom has a larger and another a smaller number of sons (aulad). It is provided that the sons of both wives shall take equal shares, i. e., the distribution shall be per capita. Then again in describing the custom by which the eldest son receives a larger portion than his brothers the word used for son is again "aulad." The inference is irresistible that the words "aulad" and "la walad" are used throughout with reference solely to male issue. The Wajib-ul-arz was verified by all the six sons of Thakur Prasad's grandfather Chandra Chur. Chandra Chur had two brothers Lachhman Prasad and Shambhu Nath, the latter of whom had one son Chet Narain. The latter, through his agent Murli Dhar, also verified it. The Wajib-ul-arz is, therefore, a very strong piece of evidence in the defendants' favour. The learned Subordinate Judge lays stress on the fact that in the portion of the custom dealing with the case of a separated co-sharer there is no express provision for the exclusion of daughters and their issue, and he argued from this that exclusion of a daughter cannot have been intended; and an argument is also based on the fact that the provision for the marriage of daughters which is contained in the first portion of the clause is not repeated in the second. The answer to this contention is that documents of this nature, prepared on information dictated by ignorant Zemindars and written down by Munsarims or other officials of the Settlement Department, were seldom drawn up with that precision which one may expect to find in a legal document. They are constantly found to be loosely and even ungrammatically worded. It is quite possible that whoever described the custom, having once mentioned definitely the exclusion of daughters, did not trouble to repeat the same thing over again as he should have done when dealing with the case of a separated member. The succession of daughters in an undivided joint family is absolutely unheard of and it would never have occurred to any one to think of mentioning it as a custom to be recorded in the Wajib ul-arz, unless the exclusion had extended to the case of a separated proprietor as well. The whole document is on the face of it very loosely and carelessly worded and what we have to do is to take it as a whole and see what on a natural construction it clearly meant to lay down. We find an instance of the loose way in which it is worded even in the earlier portion of the clause, where provision is made for the maintenance of the wife and the marriage of the daughters, but none for the maintenance of the daughters until their marriage, though such maintenance was clearly incumbent on the person in possession of the estate. The use of the words "brother and nephew" and the absence of mention of other equally near collaterals such as the uncle is another instance of the same thing. We have no doubt that these words were intended to include collaterals generally. There may have been a special reason for specifying the real brother: the word "real" taken in connection with the mention just afterwards of a man having two wives and issue by both may have been intended to indicate that relations of the whole blood would take in preference to the relations by half blood. If the words "brother and nephew" are to be taken as exhaustive instead of illustrative, no provision whatever is made for what is to happen in case there is neither issue of either sex nor a brother or brother's son. Other instances of the use of "bhai bhatije" (brother and nephew) as meaning collaterals generally are to be found in Privy Council Appeal No. 17 of 1905, Parbati Kunwar v. Chandrapal Kunwar (1) vide page 1246 of the Privy Council Record—and in the Wajib ul arz of Rammanpur Morar (Exhibit A 46 on the present record). It is contended that the use of the word "real" (haqiqi) before brother excludes the construction, but it had to be admitted that grammatically the word "real" qualifies brother only and not nephew (biradar-zada). As we have said, there may have been a special reason for the use of the phrase "real brother" in this case

We are unable to follow the learned Subordinate Judge when he says that the Wajib-ul-arz can only be held to imply the exclusion of daughters if the word "la walad" is interpreted as meaning "leaving a daughter but no sons." It clearly means simply "leaving no male issue" without reference to the question whether there are any daughters or not.

The learned Subordinate Judge further discounts the value of the Wajib ul arz on the ground that it was not verified by representatives of all branches of the family and that it was not verified by Thakur Prasad's grandfather Chandra Chur. As regards the latter point we think that if Chandra Chur, who must have been an old man at the time, sent all his six sons to verify the Wajib ul-arz on his behalf, their united verification carries a weight in no way inferior to that which their father's signature would have carried. As regards the former point, the learned Subordinate Judge has fallen into at least two errors of fact. He says that it cannot be said for certain that Lachhman Prasad, the elder brother of Chandra Chur, and Murli Dhar agent of Chet Narain, the son of his younger brother, really verified it. We can find no justification for this alleged uncertainty in view of the order of the Sadar Munsarim on the Wajib ul-arz itself, which states explicitly that Lachhman Prasad and Murli Dhar general agent of Chet Narain verified all the conditions of the Wajib-ul-arz except their habits to pay lambardari dues and village expenses, and that it was solely on account of this objection regarding dues and expenses that they refused to sign it. This endorsement is signed by the Sadar Munsarim and is an official record made by a public officer in the performance of his duties, and in the absence of any evidence to throw doubts on it, it certainly should be presumed to be correct. The learned Subordinate Judge is also in error in stating that Gur Prasad, the grandfather of the plaintiff, did not sign the Wajib-ul arz. We have examined the document and find his signature upon it, and there is also a formal record of the fact that he verified it. One of the defendants Achuta Nand has been examined in support of the custom and has verified his signatures, and the learned Subordinate Judge's criticism that his younger brother Tek Dhar has not been examined as well and that every member of the family who is still alive has not been called to verify his signature, seems to us somewhat puerile. The Wajib ul-arz, it may be noted, was that of the first regular settlement of the year 1872. It was conceded by the respondent in this Court that the Subordinate Judge's criticism regarding the verification of the Wajib-ul-arz cannot be supported.

The learned Subordinate Judge repeats several times an observation drawn from an unreported judgment of this Court to the effect that the provisions of the Wajib ul-arz should be construed in a manner compatible as far as may be with the rules of Hindu Law. If the learned Subordinate Judge understands by this that it is permissible to put a strained construction on the custom recorded so as to make it tally with the general law of inheritance, this is not what this Court meant to convey, nor is it a true canon of construction. It is quite true that customs differing in no way from the general law are frequently found recorded, but the primary object of the Wajib ul-arz was to record the custom, whatever it might be, and there was nothing to be gained by recording the custom in detail unless some differences from the general law were to be

"The object of the administration papers was to record customs varying the Hindu Law, not to record the Hindu Law."

Oudh Settlement Circular No. 20 of 1863 directs Settlement Officers to record "the customs and usages of the village as affecting the rights of the proprietor" under a number of specified headings. The Circular warns the Settlement Officer against recording the custom as he thinks it should be rather than as it is, and under this very head of rights of transfer and succession lays down with special reference to pre emption cases that "it is unnecessary to record rights granted by law.....The general custom of the village in regard to succession will, of course, be noted"

The Wajib ul-arz of Jagtapur records the custom of exclusion of daughters not merely by implication but in express terms.

"On the death of a co-sharer, all his sons will inherit the estate in equal shares. A daughter gets no share by inheritance..... .....A widow has also the power of adopting a child, but the child must be the nearest relation belonging to her husband's family. She cannot adopt a stranger."

It is possible to read this, as the learned Subordinate Judge does, as limited to the exclusion of a daughter in presence of sons, but this is not the literal meaning of the text and such a declaration would be entirely superfluous. The subsequent clause debarring a widow from adopting any one except the nearest relation in her husband's family is a strong indication that total exclusion was intended. The whole object and reason of a custom excluding daughters is to keep the property from passing away to another clan, and this notion was so strongly present to the minds of those who stated the custom here recorded that according to them even in the case of an adoption by the widow no person outside the family is to be allowed to take. A similar provision was found in the Wajib-ul-arz in the well known Select Case No. 41 [Surjan Singh v. Gur Parshad] where the learned Judicial Commissioner observed :—

"It does not provide in express terms for the case of a sharer leaving daughters only, but such a case much often arise;... .....and the only reasonable interpretation of this silence that commends itself to my mind, is that the general term 'daughters do not receive a share' was intended and understood at the time to record the exclusion of daughters from inheriting a share under all circumstances."

The criticisms made by the Subordinate Judge regarding the verification of the Wajib-ul-arz have not been pressed before us. The custom is no doubt differently expressed from the manner in which it is stated in the Wajib ul-arz of Kursaha, but this is easily accounted for by the fact that it was verified by a different set of persons living in a different district and recorded by a different officer. Mauza Kursaha is in the Bahraich district, whereas Mauza Jagtapur is in Gonda. The account of the rights of inheritance being incomplete in both cases, no strong argument can be based on the fact that some incidents mentioned in the one are omitted in the other. When the respondent was pressed to point out any contradiction between the two, the only contradiction she could allege was in respect of the widow of a separated co-sharer. In Kursaha it is said that she will hold possession for life without power of transfer, but in Jagtapur that she will, of course, have the power of sale and mortgage. But these apparently contradictory provisions almost certainly mean the same thing, namely, that she will have an ordinary widow's estate with power of transfer for legal necessity but not otherwise.

Besides the Wajib-ul-arzes of the two villages Kursaha and Jagtapur in which the property in dispute is situated, the appellants have produced the Wajib-ul-arzes of twenty villages and the Riwaj i am of five Parganas inhabited by Sankaldipi Brahmans, all of which record a custom of exclusion of daughters. Of the twenty villages fifteen are situated in the Gonda district, two in the Bara Banki district and three in the Sultanpur district. In the Fyzabad district a single Riwaj i am appears to have been prepared for each Pargana. All these Wajib-ul-arzes and Riwaj-i-ams record a custom of exclusion of daughters. In some instances the custom is recorded in almost identical terms with that of Mauza Jagtapur, but in most cases the record is so clear that it is not possible even for the plaintiff to dispute the nature of the custom recorded. Indeed the learned Subordinate Judge does not doubt the fact that a custom such as the defendants plead is recorded in all these instances. Six of the twenty Wajib ul-arzes expressly state that the parties governed by it are Sankaldipi Brahmans. In these cases the Subordinate Judge puts aside the document on the ground that it is not proved to relate to the family of the parties or that it relates to Sankaldipi Misras or Sankaldipi Pandes whereas the parties are Sankaldipi Pathak Brahmans. This criticism entirely ignores the fact that the custom pleaded is one extending to the whole Sankaldipi clan, whether the particular family affected is classed as Misras, Pandes or Pathaks. It is common ground between the parties that Sankaldipi was originally a local appellation and this is indicated by the extract from Carnegy's Notes on the Castes of Oudh quoted in an earlier portion of this judgment. The same observation applies to the remark with which the lower Court puts aside the five Riwaj-i-ams of the Fyzabad district. He says that it is not shown that they relate to Sankaldipi Brahmans connected with the defendants' family and that no members of that family reside in Fyzabad. The defendants never alleged that these Riwaj-i-ams related to their own family. What they aimed at proving and have very thoroughly proved is that the custom exists among the Sankaldipi Brahmans wherever they are found. The other fourteen Wajib-ul-arzes are put aside as irrelevant by the lower Court, on the ground that there is nothing on the face of the documents to show that they related to Sankaldipi Brahmans and that there is either no evidence or insufficient evidence to show that they do so relate. With one exception, not a single definite criticism is made of any one of the defendants' numerous witnesses under this head. The learned Subordinate Judge dismisses the whole of this large mass of, upon the face of it, respectable evidence with such phrases as "nor has sufficient corroborative evidence been produced to show that these documents refer to Sankaldipi Brahmans," or "no satisfactory evidence worth the name has been produced to show this." In the case of the Wajib-ul-arz of Jainapur, Exhibit A34, the witness called to prove that it relates to Sankaldipi Brahmans is dismissed with the remark that he does not state an instance of the custom—a remark which has no bearing on the value of his evidence as to the class of persons whose customs the Wajib-ul-arz purports to record. The value of this large consensus of documentary evidence is enhanced by the fact that not a single Wajib-ul-arz has been produced in rebuttal. We have been taken through the evidence of the witnesses under this head and it is sufficient to say that there is evidence in every instance that Sankaldipi Brahmans have proprietary or under-proprietary right, as the case may be, in the village. In a large number of instances the witnesses called are direct descendants of one or other of the persons by whom the Wajib-ul-arz purports to have been verified. Thus Bhabhuti, D. W. No. 27, is able to give the names of all the persons who verified the Wajib-ul-arz, among whom was his own father Phargul Prasad.

The plaintiff's evidence did not commence till that of the defendants was completed. If, therefore, the defendants had falsely put forward as applicable to Sankaldipi Brahmans a Wajib-ul arz which really recorded the custom of some other tribe, it would have been the easiest thing possible to contradict them. No attempt was made to do this and except in one or two instances, it has not been seriously contended before us that these Wajib-ul-arzes are not concerned with Sankaldipis.

The Wajib-ul-arz of Lohsa, Exhibit A133, deserves special mention. While recording the general custom of exclusion of daughters, it mentions one special instance in which a daughter was allowed by the consent of all the co-sharers concerned to take a life-interest. An exception like this for which a special reason is given in the Wajib-ul-arz itself really goes to confirm the general rule and the Subordinate Judge's comment, that because of this single instance the custom cannot be said to have obtained uninterrupted, uniform and constant, is nothing short of extraordinary. The Wajib-ul-arz of Parsi Gonda, Exhibit A125, also contains one feature of special interest in that in common with the Wajib ul arz of the principal village in suit, Kursaha, it mentions the fact that the original ancestor of the family originally came from Bhojpur in Behar.

In the case of three of the five Riwaj-i-ams of Fyzabad judgments have been produced in which the custom has been held to apply to Sankaldipis. In answer to these the respondent produced three judgments relating to Pargana Mangalsi in which the custom was not recognised. In none of these cases were the parties Sankaldipis and an examination of the judgments shows that they are of no value as evidence. In Exhibit 16 no issue of custom was raised at all. There had been arbitration and the daughter's right was admitted by the opposite party. In Exhibit 19 it was admitted by the plaintiff who pleaded the custom that the family did not belong to the Zemindari body of any village in Pargana Mangalsi and that the Riwaj-i-am did not relate to their family. In the third case, Exhibit 20, no evidence whatever was tendered on the issue of custom.

A point was attempted to be made of the fact that except in the two villages in suit no Wajib-ul-arz has been produced of any other village owned by members of the family to which Thakur Prasad belonged. It had to be admitted, however, that there is nothing to show that members of the family own Zemindari property in any of the other villages. The plaintiff, as we have shown, has not attempted to produce any Wajib-ul-arz in rebuttal of the custom.

The following witnesses among others testify to the prevalence of the custom among Sankaldipi Brahmans generally :—

Chunni C. W. No. 2, Din Bandh C. W. No. 9, Dewanand C. W. No. 10, Jagdeo C. W. No. 11, Sri Dat C. W. No. 14, Ram Padarath C. W. No. 17, Suraj Lal C. W No. 20, Sheo Ratan C. W. No. 23, Sheoambar C. W. No. 25, Bhabhuti C. W. No. 27, Lal Behari C. W. No. 28, Shiam Sundar C. W. No. 30, Ram Ratan C. W. No. 32, Ram Autar C. W. No. 35, Lalta Prasad C. W. No. 38, Bhagwat Prasad C. W. No. 39,* Sheo Nidh C. W. No. 43, Matadin C. W. No. 44, Bishambhar C. W. No. 45, Seva Datt C. W. No. 46, Kali Prasad C. W. No. 47, Jadu Nath C. W. No. 48.

All these witnesses are Sankaldipi Brahmans and many of them belong to the family of the parties. We can find nothing in the cross-examination of these witnesses, and certainly no reasons are given in the judgment of the lower Court, which would justify us in rejecting the whole of this large mass of first-hand testimony. It is remarkable that though the plaintiff called evidence, not a single one of her witnesses ventured directly to deny the existence of the custom. It is also not a little remarkable that Gaya Prasad, who has purchased a portion of the plaintiff's interest and been joined with her as a respondent in the appeal, has himself at an earlier stage in a petition, dated 4th September 1913, in the mutation Court put in a claim based on the exclusion of daughters.

We now turn to the evidence of particular instances. A feature which distinguishes this case from the unreported decisions (among which we include the case cited by the Subordinate Judge from the so-called "Indian Cases") relied on by the respondent in the lower Court, is the large number of instances of observance of the custom which the appellants have proved. No less than twenty instances have been established. The defendants attempted to prove twenty three instances but in one of these, that of Babu Ram, it turned out that there was a Will executed by him in favor of his wife and after her death of his brother Satrohan. This, therefore, is not a genuine instance and in two other instances, those of Bhagwan and Ram Nath, Nos. 21 and 22, the appellants have not printed, and apparently were not prepared to rely on, the evidence of the witnesses on whose testimony the instance rests, whom the lower Court considered unreliable. In the case of Ram Nath it was apparently discovered, while the case was proceeding, that this man had executed a registered deed of gift in favour of his daughter's husband under which the latter succeeded. They asked permission to put in a copy of this document at the time of the cross examination of one of the plaintiff's witnesses who was deposing as to her succession. This was a very reasonable request to which the learned Subordinate Judge might well have acceded. He did not, however, see fit to do so. The appellants have asked leave to file it in this Court. The document in question is now over thirty years old and we are entitled to presume its genuineness under section 90 of the Evidence Act. That the Ram Nath who executed the document was the same who was referred to by the witnesses is sufficiently established by the identity of his parentage and residence with those proved in the appellants' evidence. This case really supports the appellants. It is proved that Ram Nath was a separated Hindu and if his daughter could have succeeded as heir, there would have been no need to execute the deed of gift in favour of her husband Omitting these three cases, however, there remain twenty instances in the family to which the appellants belong which have been established by good evidence.

The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected on one ground or another all the instances which the appellants have proved. Whatever the reason may be—possibly because of the view which he took of the documentary evidence—the learned Subordinate Judge seems to have approached the oral evidence with a predisposition to find no merit in it whatever. Many of the criticisms which he makes are utterly unreasonable. When he can find no other fault with a witness, he remarks that the witness did not know the pedigree of his own family. This would be a perfectly good criticism if the witness professed to recite the pedigree of some other family, but when a witness merely deposes to instances of exclusion of daughters which occurred within his own knowledge, his accurate acquaintance with the family tree of the family to which he belongs is entirely irrelevant to the value of his evidence.

While dealing with the oral evidence, it may be well to mention that the defendants put in an old pedigree alleged to have been prepared by their father. The defendant Achuta Nand has sworn that it was so prepared and there is nothing in his cross-examination or in the pedigree itself to lead us to doubt its genuineness.

Part of it is corroborated by documentary evidence, and in respect of the remainder there is a large amount of respectable oral evidence some of which the learned Subordinate Judge has criticised severely and, as it seems to us, most unfairly. This pedigree, having been prepared a long while ago, naturally does not bring down the various branches of the family to the date of the suit. It is, therefore, most unfair to cast doubt on the accuracy of recent instances of exclusion of daughters stated by witnesses on the ground that the persons concerned were not shown in this pedigree. Where the persons concerned are not shown, the names of their fathers and other relatives appear. If the names of all the persons concerned had been shown, it would have been conclusive proof that the document was not genuine. The parties are Brahmans, among whom pedigrees often are preserved with considerable care and for long periods.

Besides Exhibit A7 the defendants prepared for the assistance of the Court a complete pedigree, Exhibit A8, containing the result of all the information they had, or could collect. It was avowedly prepared to assist the Court in understanding the evidence and it is, therefore, a misuse of language for the learned Subordinate Judge to attack this document, as he does in one passage of his judgment (o. p. 449), as having been "deliberately manufactured to meet the requirements of the case."

An important part of the pedigree, namely the line of Kuliman Pandit, is corroborated by a pedigree filed in the year 1881 by another member of the family in a case against the defendants and others and admitted by all parties to that suit to be correct. This is a corroboration of very high value. The pedigree in question is over thirty years old and it cannot possibly be suggested that there was anything collusive about its preparation. The pedigree is also supported by a number of witnesses, three of whom speak to Kuliman's line (vide Exhibit 8), two to Hariman's line, one to Rudra's line and one to Pitambar's line. The witnesses mostly testify to the branch to which they themselves belong. Where the witnesses only know part of the pedigree, as in the case of Ram Het and Sheo Kumar, the Subordinate Judge dismisses their evidence as too meagre and vague to be useful. Where a witness gives a full pedigree as in the case of Ram Shankar, he says that he has learnt it by heart. It may be that Ram Shankar's evidence is not entirely satisfactory and that possibly he may have learnt up some details for the purpose of the case, but even if his evidence is discarded, there is ample oral and documentary evidence to establish the genuineness of the pedigree. The learned Subordinate Judge remarks regarding the evidence of the defendant himself that it only needs to be read once to be disbelieved. We have read it more than once and we do not think that the small contradictions pointed out in it are at all sufficient to destroy its general credibility. The defendant, having sworn to the old pedigree prepared by his father, stated that he was not acquainted with the details himself, though a good many details which he knew he had already given. The learned Subordinate Judge would apparently have had him swear to matters of which he was ignorant in order that the plaintiff might be able to cross examine him upon them.

The defendants' second instance is that of Bhagwan Dat, who left a widow and daughter and whose property was inherited by his nephews on the death of the widow. The evidence in support of this instance is strong, but there is against it a judgment of the Subordinate Judge (not, of course inter partes) in which he held that Bhagwan Dat had not separated from his brother Chitai. There are two facts which prevent this judgment being decisive. The first is that it did not become final. It was appealed against and in appeal the parties arrived at a compromise by which they divided the property between them in the proportion of one fourth and threefourths. The second point is that there is in the judgment itself a patent error of law which may have vitiated the conclusion. There were three brothers Bhagwan Dat, Sarju and Chitai. Bhagwan Dat and Sarju had admittedly separated. Notwithstanding this the Subordinate Judge who tried the case considered that he could presume that Bhagwan Dat and Chitai remained joint. There was other evidence but in forming his conclusion he called in aid this supposed presumption of Hindu Law. In criticising the defendants' evidence on this point the Subordinate Judge lays stress on a supposed unguarded admission of Ram Het, D. W. No. 8. The supposed contradiction in the witness's evidence turns out to be no contradiction at all. Bhagwan Dat, Sarju and Chitai were originally joint, as they naturally would be, but they had separated before the witness attained years of discretion. This is a covenient place to notice two comments which are made by the Subordinate Judge regarding this instance and are repeated in several other places in his judgment. He says, first, that the defendants did not call Bhagwan Dat's daughters or daughters' sons and, secondly, that the instance occurred only 13 years ago and, therefore, can be of no value. As regards the first point, so long as the defendants produced good and satisfactory evidence on a matter regarding which a number of witnesses might be available, it is not a fair ground of attack that they should not have called a particular witness. As regards the daughters in particular, Indians tend naturally to avoid calling a woman as a witness unless it is absolutely necessary. As a matter of fact one of the defendants' witnesses Sheo Kumar is a son of the very man who took the property. No more direct evidence than this need be desired. As regards the second point the Subordinate Judge is very hard to please. Where the instances range from ten to thirty years old, he says that they are too recent to be of value; when the defendants produced an instance fifty years old, as in that of Nidhan, he says that the witnesses are not old enough for their evidence to be of any value, and this although the witnesses who depose to the instance expressly state that they heard of it from their progenitors.

Of the witnesses who prove the instance and who prove that Bhagwan Dat had separated from his brothers, Sheo Kumar and the defendant have already been mentioned. Putting aside Ram Shankar whose evidence the lower Court for other reasons regards as unreliable, there remain Sheo Narain, Ram Het, Ramai and Ram Dat, all of whom are members of the family and have personal knowledge of the parties concerned. There was very little cross-examination on this point and there is nothing in it to suggest that their evidence is untrue.

The third instance is that of Gokul, who left a widow and daughters but whose property was inherited by his nephews on the death of the widow. Here again the defendants have produced the most direct evidence possible, as one of their witnesses is the son and another grandson of one of the very persons who inherited the property. It is difficult to see what better evidence could have been called. The learned Subordinate Judge makes much of the fact that there is a discrepancy between their evidence and that of another witness, Dhanpat, as the latter was under the impression that Gokul's brothers were alive and took the property. This witness very much more remotely connected with Gokul than are the other two, and the fact that he makes mistakes is not a sufficient reason for rejecting the evidence of the persons immediately concerned in the transaction.

The fourth instance is that of Sheo Ratan who left a widow and daughter. After the death of the widow the estate was taken by collaterals to the exclusion of the daughter. This is a particularly strong instance. Apart from the defendants' witnesses it is supported by the plaintiff's first witness, the Patwari. It was not suggested in the Court below that this witness was in any way hostile to the plaintiff. It is also supported by the Khewats of the village, which show that on Sheo Ratan's death his widow succeeded and on the death of the latter the collaterals. It is not disputed that Sheo Ratan had a daughter and the evidence clearly proves that he was a separated Hindu. This instance is further supported by certain proceedings which took place in the Civil Court. After the death of the widow the reversioners sued to recover the property from a creditor to whom the widow had mortgaged it. They admitted in their plaint the existence of a daughter and daughter's son, but pleaded that these persons were excluded from inheritance by family and local custom. At the instance of the defendants the daughter and daughter's son were made parties. They filed a written statement which is on record, admitting that by family custom they had no right to the property and asking to be discharged from the suit. They were accordingly discharged. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been hard put to it to find a reason for rejecting this instance. He suggests without a shadow of evidence that the written statement may have been filed with some ulterior object. The written statement was put in more than a year before the filing of the present suit between parties who, though descended from the same common ancestor, are very remotely connected with the parties to this case.

It would take too long to review the other instances with the same particularity, though we have for our own satisfaction examined the evidence on which they rest. A few remarks may be made to show how unsatisfactory is the manner in which these instances have been dealt with by the lower Court. Much is made of the discrepancies which will naturally occur, especially in the older instances, as to the length of time that has elapsed since the party concerned died or as to when the witness first heard of the instance. A great point is also made against the defendant as to his not having mentioned certain instances in giving evidence in the mutation proceedings. Mutation cases are decided on the basis of possession, and any one who has the smallest acquaintance with the manner in which such cases are decided must know that witnesses are not examined on points of custom with the same minuteness with which they are examined in the Civil Court, even where such questions are entered into at all. In other cases a point is made of the fact that the names of the parties do not appear in the old pedigree, Exhibit A 7. As has already been pointed out, it was impossible, having regard to the date when that pedigree was prepared, that all the names should have been shown in it. In commenting on the fact that instances 19 and 20, Chhedi and Sheo Charan, rest on the evidence of a single witness Beni, the Subordinate Judge appears to attach no importance to the fact that one of the persons concerned, namely, Sheo Charan, was Beni's own uncle and that it was Beni himself who inherited the property. The learned Subordinate Judge remarks that Beni is contradicted by Sita Ram, P. W. No. 33, the son-in-law of Chhedi, who says that his son Sudama inherited Chhedi's property. The learned Subordinate Judge does not say whether he himself believes this witness, and we ourselves should not be at all prepared to do so. If the learned Subordinate Judge had been disposed to apply to him the same standard of criticism as he applies to the appellants' evidence the witness would have been a very good mark, for he contradicts himself repeatedly and very badly as to the age of his son and the date when his wife died. That portion of Beni's evidence in which he deposes that he himself inherited the property of his uncle Sheo Charan is absolutely uncontradicted. The defendants examined altogether nineteen witnesses belonging to the family; the plaintiff examined only one Mohan Lal, P. W. No. 4, and his evidence has not been relied on by the lower Court. Apart from special instances these witnesses almost without exception depose to the custom of exclusion of daughters which prevails in the family.

The argument on which the respondent has placed most reliance in explanation of these instances is that in most (though not in all) cases the property involved was small and, therefore, it is suggested that the daughters or daughters' sons may not have wished to claim it. This might explain one or two of the instances, but it is hopelessly inadequate to cover the large number of cases which the appellants have proved. The plaintiff attempted to prove four instances of daughters' succession in the family. These instances were apparently not believed by the learned Subordinate Judge, as he does not refer to them in his judgment. The first is the case of Chhedi, already referred to as the appellants' 19th instance. The learned Subordinate Judge deals with it as one of the defendants' instances and merely says that the defendants' witness is contradicted by Sita Ram. The second case is that of Ram Nath, which was also one of the defendants' instances and has already been discussed. It now appears that Ram Nath had executed a registered deed of gift in favour of his daughter's husband. The third is that of Kedar, who is said to have been succeeded by his daughter Jasoda. The witnesses to this are Mohan Lal P. W. No. 4, and Sita Ram P. W. No. 33. As the latter witness admits that Kedar left no Zemindari or tenancy land, this instance cannot be considered to be of any value. Mohan Lal asserted at first that Kedar left moveable and immoveable property of the value of Rs. 2,000. When further pressed, he had to admit that the immoveable property consisted of twenty bighas of tenancy land which he had relinquished at the time of his death. Mohan Lal was a witness originally summoned by the appellants. He seems to have gone over to the side of the plaintiff and was tendered as a witness by the latter. He is now put forward by her as her most valuable witness, deposing to no less than two cases of succession by daughters. The fourth instance, that of Ram Dhan, said to have been succeeded first by his widow and then by his daughter Kishan Dei, is deposed to by the same unreliable witness Mohan Lal and by no one else. We are unable to place any reliance on these alleged instances.

In addition to these twenty instances inside the family, the appellants adduce evidence of forty-nine witnesses outside the family but within the Sankaldipi clan. We have not been taken in detail through them all, but we have been through a selection of them including all those which are supported by documentary evidence apart from the Wajib-ul-arz. The only one of these forty-nine instances which is noticed in the lower Court's judgment is that of Acchhebar (o. p. 400), which the learned Subordinate Judge dismisses with the remark that it is very recent and cannot be of much use. The only comment he makes on the remaining forty-eight instances is that they are not connected by blood-relationship with the defendants and that most of the instances are supported only by a single witness. The latter remark is not altogether correct, but even if it were, the record is bulky enough as it is. We tremble to think of the bulk it would have attained if half a dozen witnesses had been called in support of each instance cited. Most of the instances are in corroboration of Wajib-ul-arzes which have been produced recording the custom, and several of them are supported by extracts from the Khewat showing that the alleged collateral succession did take place. Instances of this are too numerous to specify. In some cases such as Uttri, C. W. No. 22, the witness examined is the person who himself succeeded to the property. In this case the widow of the deceased Har Narain made a gift in favour of her daughter and the witness had to go into Court to get it set aside. The question of exclusion of daughters was the principal issue in the case (Exhibit A136) and was decided in favour of the plaintiff, and this judgment was upheld by the District Judge in appeal (Exhibit A137). Similarly in the instance of Sheo Dat of Mauza Gahraula, the witness called Jagdeo is the man who succeeded to the property. In three of the Fyzabad instances the matter was brought to the test of a suit. In one of these cases Sheo Balak, the collateral who succeeded in preference to the daughter's son, was five generations removed from the deceased. He had to file a suit against the daughter's son and the Munsif in an elaborate judgment found the custom proved. It does not appear that there was any appeal. This suit was brought after the death of the widow. Apparently there had been an earlier declaratory suit in the life of the latter brought by Sheo Balak's father and uncles, for we have on the record a judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Exhibit A18, dated the 7th January 1901, in which they sued as reversioners of Har Gobind to set aside an alienation made by his widow. The Munsif's finding is recorded in these terms:—

"I find that a daughter and her son do not inherit in face of a collateral among Sankaldipi Brahmans in this part of the Province."

This judgment was upheld by the District Judge in appeal (Exhibit A 20).

In answer to these intances the learned Advocate for the plaintiff has given a list of forty-five instances among Sankaldipis outside the family to which his witnesses depose. Six of these instances are said to be deposed to by two witnesses; the remainder rest on the uncorroborated evidence of a single witness. We have not been taken through this evidence which is not touched on in the judgment of the lower Court, but the plaintiff's Advocate has selected two instances which he considered as the strongest to lay before us. These two instances were selected on the ground that they were corroborated by the defendants' evidence. The supposed corroboration by the defendants' witness Sheo Narain consists merely of a statement that some of the tenancy land which belonged to the deceased Uma Dat is now cultivated by Uma Dat's daughter's son. This, of course, proves nothing. There is nothing to prevent a landlord letting land to the grandson of a former tenant. The witness on the plaintiff's side who proves this instance, Bhai Lal, P. W. No. 15, is a man who was once on the side of the defendants but has turned round and is now in close association with the respondent Gaya Prasad, on whose behalf he deposed in the mutation case. The second supposed instance, that of Ganesh's daughter Musammat Sundra, is one which required some boldness on the part of the plaintiff to rely on. It is quite true, as appears from the evidence of Bhagwat Prasad one of the witnesses examined by the defendants on Commission, that Musammat Sundra is at the present time in possession of her father's property. It appears, however, that Tirbeni, the nephew of the deceased Ganesh, brought a suit to recover it from her but unfortunately for himself allowed the suit to be dismissed by default. He appealed from this decision unsuccessfully and proceedings in revision are now pending. If these are the strongest instances which the respondent's Advocate can produce, he has certainly acted wisely in not attempting to press the remainder.

We have examined the evidence at perhaps unnecessary length, because we are differing from the lower Court on what is largely a question of fact. But for this a much briefer judgment would have sufficed. The evidence in support of the appellant's case is simply overwhelming. If this evidence is not sufficient to prove the custom, it is difficult to understand what evidence could ever be accepted as adequate.

We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts. Costs in this Court will be against all the respondents, including those who have been added in appeal.

Appeal allowed.

E. F. SANDYS—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss 95, 98, 100—Rules framed by Calcutta High Court under s. 100, r. 4—Suit by common manager against ex-manager for account and recovery of balance due, whether maintainable—Sanction of District Judge, whether necessary—Failure to obtain sanction, effect of.

A suit by the common manager of an estate against an ex-manager for account and for recovery of such sums of money as may upon account being taken be found due by the latter, is for the purposes of management of the estate as contemplated by clause 3 of section 98 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and is maintainable. [p. 739, col. 2.]

Per Ghose, J.—But such a suit is not maintainable without the sanction of the District Judge as required by rule 4 of the rules framed by the High Court under section 100 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 738, col. 2.]

Where the District Judge is cognizant of the steps being taken by a common manager for the purpose of recovering what he considers to be due to the estate, and passes orders practically allowing the common manager to go on with a suit he has instituted, this is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 98 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and of the rules of the High Court under section 100. [p. 739, col. 1.]

Geidt, J.—Rule 4 of the rules framed by the High Court under section 100 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not lay down that a suit which requires the sanction of the District Judge must be dismissed if instituted without such sanction [p. 740, col. 2.]

This rule is a check on expenditure and the only necessary consequence of the infringement of the rule is to make the manager liable for all expenses improperly incurred. The check contemplated by the rule is fully met by imposing this penalty on the manager and the penalty is applicable to all breaches of it. [p. 740, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tipperah, dated the 27th February 1899.

JUDGMENT.

GHOSE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for account and for the delivery of account papers, instituted by a common manager, Mahammad Faiz Chowdhury, appointed as such by the District Judge of Tipperah under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, against Mr. E. F. Sandys, an ex-common manager. The defendant was discharged from the office of common manager and Mahammad Faiz, the plaintiff, was appointed in his place as the common manager.

The suit has been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the right to sue for accounts was in the owners of the estate and not in the common manager, and that, at any rate, the common manager could not maintain a suit such as was brought without the express sanction of the District Judge, and that such sanction had not been obtained. The suit, we may here mention, was a suit not only for account, but also for recovery of such sums of money which, upon the account being taken, might be found due by the defendant to the estate; and the plaintiff valued the claim at Rs. 5,452-15-0 odd.

Section 98 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides in clause (3): "He" that is to say, the manager, "shall, subject to the control of the District Judge, have, for the purpose of management, the same powers as the co-owners jointly might but for his appointment have exercised, and the co-owners shall not exercise any such power."

And the question which in the first place demands our consideration is whether a suit for account and for recovery of such sums of money as may upon account being taken be found due by an ex manager, is for the purposes of management of the estate as contemplated by clause (3) of section 98 of the Act. The matter is not altogether free from doubt, but after the best consideration that we have been able to give to it, it seems to us that it is for the purposes of management. Under section 98 a common manager is entitled for the purposes of management to exercise, though under the control of the District Judge, all the powers which the co-owners jointly might exercise. He could for the purposes of such management realise rents from tenants: he could, if necessary, take such proceedings in Court for the purpose of realising rents: he could, so far as we can see, recover or take proceedings to recover moneys due to the estate from debtors—all this, no doubt, subject to the control of the District Judge, but still as regards the recovery of such dues, whether they be rents or other moneys, it would, we think, be for the purposes of the management of the estate in the hands of the common manager. As bearing upon the question whether the common manager is entitled to bring such a suit, or whether the right is in the owners of the estate, the Subordinate Judge in his judgment has relied upon clauses (5) and (7) of section 98 and section 103 of the Act. Clause (5) simply declares that the common manager shall keep regular accounts and that the co-owners or any one of them is entitled to inspect or take copies of the accounts kept by the manager. A proprietor is certainly entitled to inspect the accounts in order to keep himself informed as to what is going on; but it does not follow from this, as the Subordinate Judge thinks, that the right to bring a suit for account against an ex-manager is in the proprietors, and not in the common manager. Clause (7) of the section simply says that the manager may make any application which the proprietors could make under section 103. That section, as it stood in the Act of 1885, declared that "on the application of proprietors or tenure-holders, and on depositing or giving security for the required amount for expenses, a Revenue Officer may, subject to and in accordance with the rules made in this behalf by the Local Government, ascertain and record the particulars specified in section 102 with respect to the estate or tenure or any part thereof." Section 188 of the Act, however, provides: "Where two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is under this Act required or authorised to do must be done either by both or all those persons acting together, or by an agent authorised to act on behalf of both or all of them." Reading these two sections together, it would seem that one of the co-owners of an estate could not apply for the Record of Rights, and in view of this disability of one of the co-owners of an estate section 98 of the Act provided in clause (7) that a common manager might make any application which the proprietors could make under section 103, so as to empower him as the agent of the whole body of owners to make an application for the purpose of the Record of Rights. Section 103 has, however, been modified by the Amending Act so as to empower one or more of the proprietors to apply for a Record of Rights. But, however that may be, it seems to us that the Subordinate Judge is in error in thinking that the existence of clause (7) in section 98 is a strong ground in support of the view that it was not the intention of the Legislature to confer upon a common manager the right to bring a suit of this kind, or any suit whatever.

The next question that demands our consideration is whether the common manager could institute the suit without the sanction of the District Judge. As bearing upon this question we have to refer to section 100 of the Act, and the rules which the High Court has framed in accordance with that section. It provides: "The High Court may, from time to time, make rules defining the powers and duties of managers under the foregoing section." Rule 3 of the rules framed by the High Court lays down that "No manager shall have power to sell or mortgage any property, nor shall he grant or renew a lease for any period exceeding three years, without the express sanction of the District Judge," and so forth. Then comes rule 4—"The manager shall apply for the sanction of the District Judge to any act which may involve extraordinary expense." Rule 5 provides that "No manager shall have power to compromise any suit or relinquish any claim without the express sanction of the District Judge."

These rules have the force of law and it seems to us, having regard to rule 4, that the manager was bound to have applied to the District Judge for sanction before bringing a suit for account and recovery of moneys that may be found due from the defendant, because the bringing of such a suit would certainly involve extraordinary expense, and so the manager did apply to the Judge for such sanction. We find that on the 7th January 1898 an application was made by Mr. Sandys, the ex-manager, for return of the security that he had deposited. Upon that, the then District Judge ordered as follows:

"I will put this matter off till 2nd February. If no suit is instituted by that date I will order the security to be returned." On the 31st January 1898 the following application was made by the plaintiff, the common manager, to the District Judge:—"That as it is necessary to bring a suit against Mr. E. F. Sandys, late manager of Durgacharan Taluk, on behalf of the proprietors of the said Taluk, for accounts and money and as the plaint has already been drawn up, the proprietors wish your petitioner to bring the suit and defray the cost of the said suit from the estate fund, but he is unable to do so unless ordered by your Honour. Therefore, respectfully the petitioner solicits your permission to bring the suit and to defray the costs of the same from the estate fund. The valuation of the suit is at present put down as Rs. 5,982-15-0. Your petitioner as in duty bound shall ever pray." Upon this petition the following order was recorded by the then District Judge: "It does not appear that my sanction is necessary; the manager can act on his own initiative." The manager then instituted this suit.

Later on we find that the District Judge recorded the following order:—"I am informed to-day that a suit has been instituted against Mr. Sandys for recovery of moneys received by him as manager; till the suit is decided, it would not be proper to return the security (that is, the security deposited by the ex-manager). Let this application be struck off the file." So that the District Judge was fully cognizant of the steps that were being taken by the common manager for the purpose of recovering what he considered to be due to the estate. The learned Judge did not say to him: "You must not bring, or go on with the suit and I do not authorise you to incur the expenses for bringing such a suit." On the contrary he passed orders practically allowing the plaintiff to go on with the suit, though under a mistaken notion. If that is the correct view to take, it would seem that the requirements of section 98 and the rules framed by the High Court under section 100 were substantially complied with. The section 98, as already mentioned, provides that a common manager, subject only to the control of the District Judge, may, for the purpose of management, do all acts which the co-owners jointly might perform. It was quite open to the Judge to disallow the application that was made by the plaintiff on the 31st January 1898, or to prohibit him from continuing that suit when the matter was distinctly brought to his notice; but, as I have already said, he practically acquiesced in the suit being brought, and in allowing it to go on. It may, no doubt, be said that the Judge did not exercise, or rather declined to exercise, any control in the matter which was brought to his notice. Yet it seems to me that it does not really affect the question in the present case, because the law allows the common manager to do every act in connection with the management, only subject to the control of the District Judge, if he chooses to exercise such control—and the common manager, so far as he was concerned, complied with what Rule 4 directs. I am of opinion, as already indicated, that the requirements of the law and rules framed by the High Court were substantially complied with in this case and that the suit was maintainable.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the decree of the Court below dismissing the suit should be set aside, and the case sent back to the Subordinate Judge for trial upon the merits.

Costs will abide the result.

GEIDT, J.—I concur with my learned brother in the order to be passed in this case, and generally in the reasons stated by him for passing that order. I only wish to add that though I agree with him in thinking that section 98 of the Bengal Tenancy Act confers on a common manager the power to bring against an ex-manager a suit for papers and accounts, I am doubtful whether the effect of rule 4 framed by the High Court under section 100 of the Act is to withdraw that power unless the common manager first obtains the sanction of the District Judge.

The rule runs as follows: "The manager shall apply for the sanction of the District Judge to any act which may involve extraordinary expense." It is not framed in the negative like the rule which immediately precedes and the rule which immediately follows it. Rule 3 lays down that: "No manager shall have power to sell or mortgage any property nor shall he grant or renew a lease for any period exceeding three years without the express sanction of the District Judge, etc." Rule 5 lays down that "No manager shall have power to compromise any suit or relinquish any claim without the express sanction of the District Judge." The effect of these two rules is clear and unmistakable; the acts forbidden by these rules are null and void ab initio, and the parties to such transactions are in the same position as though the transaction had never taken place. Can we attribute the same effect to rule 4?

It is obvious, I think, that a similar result does not necessarily follow on all infringements of rule 4. If a manager spends extraordinary sums without the sanction of the District Judge, I take it that those sums could not be recovered from the person to whom they have been paid on the ground that this sanction had not been obtained. Rule 4 is a check on expenditure and the only necessary consequence of the infringement of the rule could, in my opinion, be to make the manager liable for all expenses improperly incurred. Take for instance a concrete case, where a manager without the District Judge's sanction brings up at great expense from Calcutta Counsel to conduct a suit. Counsel would be entitled to his fees from the manager, but the manager, if the District Judge disapproved of his act, would be personally liable for those fees. In the same way a manager, who, without the sanction of the District Judge, institutes a suit which requires that sanction on the ground of its involving extraordinary expense, would be liable personally for all sums thus improperly spent The check contemplated by the rule is fully met by imposing this penalty on the manager, and the penalty is applicable to all breaches of it. But if you go further and say that a suit instituted by a manager without the sanction of the District Judge is not maintainable and must be dismissed, you add a second consequence which can only be imposed on a few breaches of the rule, you do not subject the manager to any penalty but you may subject to a severe penalty the proprietors who may be no way concerned with the breach.

For the reasons above given I am inclined to hold that rule 4 does not even by implication lay down that a suit which requires the sanction of the District Judge, must be dismissed if instituted without such sanction. When powers conferred by law are defined by rules, the rules, in my opinion, should not be interpreted as imposing any restriction on those powers, except such as is in terms expressed or can be clearly inferred from the wording used.

SARABJIT—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Custom opposed to personal law, proof of—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, value of—Instances, absence of, effect of.

The record of a custom in a wajib-ul-arz that a childless widow has a full estate in the property of her husband is of no value in the absence of any proof of instances showing that effect was given to such custom. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 13th January 1919, upholding the decree of the Munsif, Ram Sanehighat, dated the 7th June 1918.

Messrs. Haidar Husain and S. P. Kain, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to certain property which belonged to Debidin, who died leaving two widows, Musammat Radha and Musammat Bilasa. Musammat Radha died first. Musammat Bilasa then got into possession of the entire estate left by her husband. On the 13th June 1891 she mortgaged a half of what was left by her husband in Mauza Gange with Gangadin, Mannu and Matadin, the predecessors-in-title of the defendants. Musammat Bilasa subsequently died. The plaintiff claims to be the nearest reversionary heir of her husband and sues for possession of the property which is held by the mortgagees. His contention is that the mortgage in question was made without legal necessity. The Courts below have accepted that contention.

The only point for determination in this appeal is whether by virtue of a family custom Musammat Bilasa had an absolute interest in the property which she inherited from her husband. The Court of first instance found that no such custom was established. The lower Appellate Court similarly held that Musammat Bilasa had only a life-estate.

The wajib-ul-arz of the village in which Debidin resided and held a share has been produced. It states that the custom relating to the division of inheritance is that if a co sharer had more wives than one with sons by each, the property left by him would be divided according to the number of his wives; and that if any of the wives was childless, that wife would remain in possession of her share according to the number of wives left by her husband for her lifetime without any power of alienation; but if there was only one wife and she was childless, she would have full power of alienation in case her husband was separate but only a life-interest without any power of alienation, in case her husband was joint. It is difficult to say whether this wajib ul-arz records a local or a tribal custom.

The village was originally populated by a man of the Kurmi caste and the wajib-ul arz was dictated probably by the persons who were his descendants. Its terms do not accord with the ordinary rules of Hindu Law and in some respects leave the existence of the alleged custom in a state of considerable uncertainty. It purports to give a childless widow a life-estate if there are more widows than one, but a full estate, if there is no other widow, provided her husband lived separately. But where he lived jointly, it purports to give her a life estate and allows the reversion to go after her to the collateral relations of her husband without any restriction as to their jointness or otherwise. It restricts the power of a childless widow to adopt.

The evidence adduced to prove the custom was disbelieved and in view of the extraordinary nature of some of the conditions entered in the wajib ul-arz, it is difficult to attach much value to that portion of it which gives a childless widow a full estate in the absence of any proof of instances showing that effect was given to it. There is no reason, therefore, for interfering with the decision arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CHAIRMAN OF THE DACCA MUNICIPALITY AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), ss. 15, 69, rules framed under—R. 17, infringement of, effect of—Election, whether void—Burden of proof—Costs, by whom to be borne.

Rule 17 of the rules framed by the Local Government under the Bengal Municipal Act to regulate Municipal elections is not a mandatory rule, and an election is not necessarily void because of an infringement of that rule. But the burden rests upon those who maintain the validity of an election, notwithstanding an infraction of the rule, to show that the result was not affected by the infringement. [p. 745, col. 2.]

Where owing to a transgression of the rule more than one-half of the constituency did not vote at an election and it was not shown that the result of the election had not in fact been affected, the election was set aside as contrary to law [p 745, col. 2; p. 746, col. 1.]

SHYAM CHAND v. CHAIRMAN OF THE DACCA MUNICIPALITY.

The ordinary rule is that costs are borne by the unsuccessful party, but when an election suit is caused by the conduct of the returning officer, each party may, in the discretion of the Court, be ordered to pay his own costs. [p. 746, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 8th June 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Dacca, dated the 31st March, 1919.

Mr. L. Pugh, Babus Sasadhar Ray (Sr.) and Pramatha Nath Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Das and Babu Upendra Lal Ray, for Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of the invalidity of a Municipal election and for a permanent injunction to restrain the successful candidates from acting as Municipal Commissioners.

The plaintiff Shyam Chand Basak, the second defendant Bhagabat Prasanna Saha and the third defendant Nabendra Nath Basak were candidates for election as Commissioners for a period of three years for Ward No. 3 at the Dacca Municipal Election, held on the 31st July 1918. The first defendant is the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Dacca. The election was held on the day prescribed and Mr. Dwijendra Nath Sen of the Provincial Executive Service acted as presiding officer. The total number of registered voters was 1287, each of whom had two votes. 686 persons recorded 1372 votes. The result of the election was announced as follows:—

Bhagabat Prasanna Saha	...	627 votes.
Nabendra Nath Basak	...	509 "
Shyam Chand Basak	...	236 "

The two defendants were thereupon declared duly elected as Municipal Commissioners for the Ward. On the 7th September 1918 the plaintiff, who had been unsuccessful at the election, instituted the present suit and attacked the legality of the election on a number of grounds. The defendants filed separate written statements, denying all the material allegations. Seventeen issues were thereupon raised, and the Court, after a protracted trial, came to the conclusion that the election had been held in contravention of the rules and was consequently illegal and void. The suit was decreed and a perpetual injunction granted against the candidate defendants restraining them from sitting on the Municipal Board and exercising the functions of a Municipal Commissioner. The two defendants lodged separate appeals against the decree. The District Judge has allowed the appeals and dismissed the suit. In the view we take of the matter, it is necessary for us to deal with only one of the objections urged against the legality of the election.

Sections 15 and 69 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, authorise the Local Government to frame rules for Municipal elections. The rules in force at the time of the disputed election contained the following provisions relating to the manner of holding elections:

"17. The poll shall be held at such time and place as the Commissioners in meeting or the Chairman may determine, and the place at which and the hours between which votes will be recorded shall be notified, by beat of drum and by the publication of notices, at the same time as the list of candidates is published under rule 14.

"17A. After the second hour mentioned in the notice referred to in the last preceding rule, no elector shall be admitted within the building or inclosure within which the election proceedings are being held, but the votes of all duly registered voters who are already within the building or inclosure shall be recorded."

In accordance with rule 17, the Chairman determined the hours between which votes would be recorded as follows:

7-30 A. M.	...	11-30 A. M.
3 30 P. M.	...	6-30 P. M.

It has been found that the presiding officer did not arrive at the place of election till 7-45 A. M. and that the hours between which votes were recorded were as follows:

8-30 A. M.	...	12-40 P. M.
3 P. M.	...	6 30 P. M.

The gates were shut at 6-30 P. M., but all voters who had entered the premises before 6-30 P. M. were allowed to record their votes under rule 17A; this in fact went on till late at night. There is no controversy now that the hours between which the votes were actually recorded were not exactly identical with the hours as determined under rule 17: the recording commenced later, went on later during the first half of the day, and commenced earlier during the second half of the day. The question thus arises, whether the validity of the election has been affected by this circumstance. The Courts below have arrived at divergent conclusions upon the matter. The primary Court held that the election was vitiated, as the rule had been substantially infringed. The lower Appellate Court has held that the election cannot be successfully impeached on the ground mentioned, as the plaintiff had not satisfied the Court that the election has been affected by the infringement of the rule. We are of opinion that neither of these views can be supported.

The principles applicable to questions of the invalidity of elections by reason of the infringement of election rules were lucidly stated by Kennedy and Darling, JJ., in the Islington case (1):—

"An election ought not to be held void by reason of transgressions of the law, committed without any corrupt motive by the returning officer or his subordinates in the conduct of the election, where the Court is satisfied that the election was, notwithstanding those transgressions, an election really and in substance conducted under the existing election law, and that the result of the election, that is, the success of the one candidate over the other, was not, and could not have been, affected by those transgressions. If, on the other hand, the transgressions of the law by the officials being admitted, the Court sees that the effect of the transgressions was such that the election was not really conducted under the existing election laws, or it is open to reasonable doubt whether those transgressions may not have affected the result, and it is uncertain whether the candidate who has been returned has really been elected by the majority of persons voting in accordance with the laws in force relating to elections, the Court is then bound to declare the election void." It appears to us that this is the view which has generally been recognised and acted upon by the tribunals which have dealt with election matters. We may refer, in regard to cases heard by Parliamentary Committees, to the Warwick case (2) and the Roxburgh case (3), and, in regard to the more important authority of Courts of law and the Election Judges, to the considered judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in Woodward v. Sarsons (4), which cites a number of authorities and contains an express approval of the answer of Baron Martin before a Committee of the House of Commons. We may also refer to the much more recent judgment of O'Brien and Johnson, JJ., in the East Clare case (5). And it is to be borne in mind by the tribunal which has to consider the validity of elections that it ought to act with great caution. "I adhere," said Baron Martin in the Warrington case (6) "to what Mr. Justice Willes said at Lichfield (7), that a Judge, to upset an election, ought to be satisfied beyond all doubt, that the election was altogether void, and that the return of a member is a serious matter and not to be lightly set aside."

The Court, after this general exposition of the law, expressed its approval of the decision in Gribbin v. Kirker (8), where Monahan, C. J., set aside an election at which polling was allowed to go on for an hour after the doors were closed by people inside the room and there were no means of finding out how many voted after the time. The Court then proceeded to consider whether the respondent had discharged the burden of proving that the result of the election, that is, the success of the one candidate over the other, was not and could not be affected. It was found that ballot papers had been given out after 8 P. M. in contravention of the rule that the doors at each polling station were to be shut at 8 P. M. and only voters who had had ballot papers, delivered to them before that hour, should be allowed to mark them and deposit them in the ballot box. But it was also proved that only 14 ballot papers were given out after 8 P. M.; if all of these were assumed to have been given for the respondent and were excluded, he would still have a majority of five. It was consequently ruled that the election could not be impeached on the ground alleged, as the respondent had proved that the result of the election had not been affected by the irregularity. Rogers in his work on Elections (1918, Volume 2, pages 109, 257, states on the authority of this case that the onus rests on the respondent to prove that the result of the election, that is, the success of the one candidate over the other, was not and could not be affected by the infringement of the rule. This view receives support from other decisions. Thus, in the Drogheda case (9), where the validity of the election was questioned on the ground that the polling stations were not opened till 8 45 A. M., instead of 8 A. M., the objection failed, because the irregularity was shown to have had no effect on the election at which nearly the whole constituency voted. Again, in the East Clare case (10), where two of the presiding officers closed the poll while they adjourned for lunch, the election was not avoided, as the respondent had such a large majority that it could not have been affected by the irregularity. To the same effect are the decisions in the East Kerry case (10), where the booths were not quite ready at 8 A. M., and the Worcester case (11), where the polling was suspended by the presiding officer for a few minutes owing to his having the room cleared in consequence of a rush of voters. On the other hand, in Wilson v. Ingham (12) the Court invalidated the election, as there was only a difference of three votes between the last two candidates declared elected and the petitioner. It is not quite clear that the earlier decisions in the Limerick case (13) and the Harwich case (14) lay down a different rule on the question of burden of proof.

We have seen that Kennedy and Darling, JJ., in the Islington case (1) refer to the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in Woodward v. Sarsons (4). In that case, a question was raised as to the effect of section 13 of the Ballot Act, 1872: —

"13. No election shall be declared invalid by reason of a non compliance with the rules contained in the First Schedule to this Act, or any mistake in the use of the forms in the Second Schedule to this Act, if it appears to the tribunal having cognizance of the question that the election was conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in the body of this Act, and that such non-compliance or mistake did not affect the result of the election."

Lord Coleridge, C. J., held that the section was inserted ex abundanti cautelâ and that the same rule would have applied by virtue of the Common Law even if the section had not existed. It was pointed out that, at Common Law, an election ought not to be held void by reason of transgressions of the law, committed without any corrupt motive, by the returning officer or his subordinates in the conduct of an election, where the Court is satisfied that the election was in substance conducted under the existing law and that the result was not and could not have been affected by those transgressions. This, according to the Lord Chief Justice, is the result of comparing the judgments of Grove, J., at Hackney (15) and Dudley (16) with the judgment of Martin, B. at Salford (17), and of Mellor, J., at Bolton (18), all of which judgments are in accordance with, but express more accurately the grounds of, the decisions in Parliament in the older cases of Norfolk (19), Morpeth (20), Pontefract (21), Coventry (22), New Ross (23) and Drogheda (24). The substance of the matter, consequently, is that the infringement of the rule does not necessarily invalidate the election, as it would have done if the rule had been deemed mandatory in character. The party who maintains the validity of the election, notwithstanding the infringement of the rule, may satisfy the Court that the result of the election has not been affected by the error or irregularity. The Court has to be satisfied upon this point. The election would be avoided, even if the tribunal should be satisfied that, in the words of Lord Coleridge, there was reasonable ground to believe that a majority of the electors may have been prevented from electing the candidate they preferred.

The principles deducible from the cases mentioned above have been adopted in leading decisions in the United States. They recognise the distinction between mandatory and directory provisions. A provision as to the time of opening and closing the polls is considered directory, on the general principle that a statutory provision is to be regarded as directory, if the directions given to accomplish a particular end may be violated and yet the given end be in fact accomplished and the merits of the case unaffected: People v. Cook (25), Patton v. Watkins (26), Oleland v. Porter (27), Lane v. Fern (28). On this principle it has been ruled that where the law fixes the opening and closing of the polls at sunrise and sunset, the election should not be invalidated, merely because the polls were closed a few minutes before or were kept open a few minutes after sundown, not thereby affecting the result in any manner. But this rule is applied only to what are called unsubstantial departures from the law. Where polls were opened from 1 P. M. until 6 P. M., instead of from one hour after sunrise to sunset, as required by law, the election was held invalid: Tebbe v. Smith (29), Gores v. Cahill (30). But an election will not be declared invalid, where it is apparent that the votes cast while the polls were not properly opened are not sufficient to change the result of the election: Lane v. Fern (28), Oleland v. Porter (27).

We do not refer to the decisions in England or in the United States as in any way binding upon us. But, as was pointed out by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Ramanujulu Naidu v. Parthasarathy Aiyangar (31), though the Common Law of England relating to Parliamentary Elections cannot control our decisions, "wherever the rules of that law are in conformity with justice, equity and good conscience, they may be referred to for the mental satisfaction of the Judge in India who finds that his decision, based on justice, equity and good conscience happens to be also in accordance with those Parliamentary Common Law Rules."

On the grounds explained above, we have arrived at the conclusion that rule 17 of the Election Rules is not mandatory, as the trial Court held; an election is not necessarily void because that rule has been infringed. The Court will uphold the election, if it is satisfied that the result has been affected by the infringement which actually took place. The burden rests upon the defendants to establish this, as they maintain the validity of the election notwithstanding the infraction of the rule. We do not agree with the District Judge that the burden lay upon the plaintiff to establish that the result has been affected by the transgression of the rule. If that view were maintained, the consequence would in effect be to encourage a violation of the rule. It is, we think, important to emphasise the aspect that rules are made to be obeyed and that violation of the rules may imperil the election, throwing a heavy burden upon those who, notwithstanding the breach of the rules, wish to support the election and to satisfy the Court that the purpose of the election has been in fact achieved.

When we test the present case from this point of view, it becomes clear that the decree of the District Judge cannot be supported. On the facts stated, it is impossible to affirm that the result has not been in fact affected by the irregularity. Nearly one half of the constituency did not vote, namely, 601 voters out of 1257. If less than a quarter of these voters had voted for the plaintiff alone, he would have been successful. The truth is that the suit has been tried on a wrong basis; as soon as the irregularity was established, the burden should have been thrown upon the defendants to establish that the result of the election had not in fact been affected; if this had been done, they might have found it extremely difficult successfully to discharge the onus. In these circumstances, we have anxiously considered what direction should now be given. We are of opinion that we should not remit the case to the Court of first instance and direct a fresh trial; but a fresh election would be in the best interest of the Municipality and of the candidates. We can only express the hope that at such election, some endeavour will be made to conform to the rules and the directions issued thereunder.

We find from the proceedings in the Court below that the suggestion was made that the plaintiff may have been estopped by reason of his knowledge of and acquiescence in the irregularity at the time. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention. A protest by the plaintiff could have been of no avail. Besides, an estoppel cannot be pleaded where statutory requirements are disobeyed with full knowledge by the officers entrusted with the discharge of public duties. The question was raised in the East Clare case (5), but was not decided. The Seaford case (32), on the other hand, shows that the estoppel of the petitioner would in effect estop the constituency from raising the question whether the result of the election had been affected by the irregularity, and their rights should not be taken away by his acts.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the District Judge reversed. The suit is decreed; the election is declared contrary to law and is set aside; the second and third defendants are restrained by a perpetual injunction from sitting on the Municipal Board and exercising the functions of a Municipal Commissioner by virtue of the election hereby cancelled. Each party will pay his own costs in all the Courts. No doubt, the ordinary rule is that the costs are borne by the unsuccessful party, but where the suit has been caused by the conduct of the returning officer, each party may, in the discretion of the Court, be ordered to pay his own costs; Monahar, C J., observed in the Athlone case (33) that as the election was set aside for what was no misconduct on the part of either party, each party must abide his own costs, although it was a misfortune: Hackney case (34).

Landlord and tenant—Declaration that defendants are not under-proprietors, suit for—Possessory title, whether sufficient.

A mere possessory title is not sufficient for the maintenance of a suit against tenants, for a declaration that they are not under-proprietors, nor is the possibility of some danger arising in the future to the exercise of possessory rights sufficient for this purpose. [p. 747, cols. 1 & 2.]

An application by tenants to the Revenue Court to be recorded as under-proprietors does not amount to an invasion of, or interference with, the rights of a person whose only right is merely to remain in possession. [p. 747, col. 1]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 5th June 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 30th October 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Niamatullah and Ram Prasad, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration that the defendants were not under proprietors of certain plots of land. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that she was proprietor of the land in suit and that the Revenue Court had wrongly declared the defendants to be under-proprietors.

The defendants pleaded that they were under-proprietors and that the plaintiff was not entitled to bring the suit as she had no proprietary interest in the village.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that by a private arrangement between the plaintiff and her husband the latter had given the village together with other villages to the plaintiff and had executed a dastbardarinama (Exhibit 1) in her favour. He held that the plaintiff was the owner of the village in which the lands in suit are situate and as such she was entitled to maintain the suit. He found that the defendants were not under-proprietors and he gave the plaintiff the declaratory decree which she sought.

In appeal the learned District Judge has held that the plaintiff is not the proprietor of the village in suit, that the dastbardarinama cannot be treated as a conveyance and that it did not create any title in the plaintiff. For this reason he allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has come to this Court in second appeal. The learned Advocate who has argued the appeal on her behalf has admitted that he cannot establish his client's claim to full proprietary title, but has argued that as his client is lawfully in possession of the village she is entitled to maintain the suit for the declaration which she seeks. It is to be noted that in both the lower Courts the plaintiff claimed that she was full owner of the village and that the defendants were her tenants, and the question whether on a mere possessory title she could maintain the suit was not considered. It may be conceded that the plaintiff is in possession of the village, as her name has been entered in the revenue record, and though the dastbardarinama does not convey any title, it is in evidence that her husband has allowed her to take possession of the village. I do not think, however, that on a mere possessory title she can maintain the present suit for a declaration that the defendants are not under-proprietors. The application made by them in the Revenue Court to be recorded as under-proprietors did not in any way invade or interfere with her present rights; nor did the defendants by their application in any way deny the existing right of the plaintiff, which merely is to remain in possession. It is urged that the plaintiff, if still in possession, might be entitled to eject the defendants after the statutory period if they were mere tenants; but even if this were so, the possibility of some danger arising in the future to the exercise of her possessory rights is not sufficient to entitle her to a declaratory decree.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for settlement of accounts. They allege that on the 23rd December 1901 the 1st defendant was appointed by the District Judge of Tipperah to be common manager of their taluk under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that he continued to act in that capacity till the 28th February 1914. The plaintiffs further allege that on the 14th December 1912 the District Judge released one third share of the taluk from the management of the defendant. The plaintiffs accordingly pray (a) for a direction upon the 1st defendant to submit regular accounts for the entire period of his management; (b) for an examination of the accounts that are submitted; (c) for recovery of the amount that may, upon an examination of the accounts, be found due in respect of their shares; (d) for recovery of Rs. 500 as costs of preparation of the papers, should the defendant fail to submit regular accounts within the time allowed by the Court; and (e) for recovery of the decretal amount by sale of the immoveable properties of the 1st and 2nd defendants mentioned in the security bond executed by them. The 2nd defendant is the surety and the remaining defendants are persons interested in the taluk who have not joined as plaintiffs in the suit. The first two defendants in their written statement denied all the material allegations in the plaint. Fourteen issues were thereupon framed, but only four of them were taken up for disposal as of a preliminary character: (2) Is the suit maintainable without the consent of the District Judge; (3) Is the suit maintainable without notice under section 80, Civil Procedure Code; (4) Is the suit barred by res judicata; (10) Is the 1st defendant liable to render any accounts other than the quarterly accounts he submitted to the District Judge. The Subordinate Judge has answered the issues (2), (3) and (10) against the plaintiffs and issue (4) in their favour; in this view he has dismissed the suit. Upon the present appeal, the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon issues (2), (3) and (10) has been assailed as erroneous. The answer to the questions raised depends upon the view we take of the position of a common manager appointed under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The provisions for the appointment of common managers are contained in sections 93—100 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 93 invests the District Judge with authority to call upon co-owners to show cause why they should not appoint a common manager, when the District Judge is moved by the Collector or a person having an interest in the estate or tenure. Section 94 empowers the District Judge to make an order directing the co-owners of the estate or the tenure to appoint a common manager. Section 95 deals with cases where the order is not obeyed; the District Judge may, in such an event, direct that the estate or tenure be managed by the Court of Wards, if the Court of Wards consents to undertake the management, or to appoint a manager. Section 96 restricts the choice of the District Judge in the selection of a common manager in a local area where the Local Government has nominated a person to act as common manager. Section 97 makes the provisions of the Court of Wards Act for the management of immoveable property applicable to cases where the Court of Wards undertakes the management of an estate or tenure. Section 98 embodies the provisions applicable to common managers which are set out in the following terms:—

"(1) A manager appointed under section 95 may, if the District Judge thinks fit, be remunerated by a fixed salary or percentage of the money collected by him as manager, or partly in one way, and partly in the other, as the District Judge from time to time directs.

(2) He shall give such security for the proper discharge of his duties as the District Judge directs.

(3) He shall, subject to the control of the District Judge, have, for the purposes of management, the same powers as the co-owners jointly might, but for his appointment, have exercised and the co-owners shall not exercise any such power.

(4) He shall deal with and distribute the profits in accordance with the orders of the District Judge.

(5) He shall keep regular accounts and allow the co owners or any of them to inspect and take copies of those accounts.

(6) He shall pass his accounts at such period, and in such form, as the District Judge may direct.

(7) He may make any application which the proprietors could make under section 103.

(8) He shall be removable by the order of the District Judge, and not otherwise."

Section 99 empowers the District Judge to restore the management of the estate or tenure to the co-owners at any time, when he may be satisfied that the management will be conducted by them without inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights. Section 100 authorises the High Court to make rules defining the powers and duties of managers under the foregoing sections.

The first question which requires consideration is that raised in the second issue, namely, is a suit for accounts against a common manager appointed under section 95, Bengal Tenancy Act, maintainable without the sanction of the District Judge. The defendants have contended that this question should be answered in the negative. A parallel has been drawn between a common manager appointed under section 95, and a Receiver who is an officer of the Court, acting under its direction and in all cases subject to its authority. In the case of a Receiver, it is contrary to the established doctrines of Courts of Equity to permit him to be made a party defendant to a litigation, unless by sanction of the Court appointing him; it is regarded in all cases as essential that a person desiring to bring a suit against him in his official capacity should first obtain leave of the Court by which he was appointed, since the Courts will not permit the possession of their Receivers to be disturbed by a suit or otherwise without their consent and permission. The rule is established for the protection of Receivers against unnecessary and expensive litigation; besides, in most instances, a party aggrieved may have ample relief by application to the Court which appointed the Receiver. Indeed, the rule is so stringent that when an action has been instituted against a Receiver in his official capacity without leave of the Court, the plaintiff is deemed guilty of contempt of Court and liable to be punished. The rule that a Receiver appointed by judicial authority cannot be subjected to suit without the leave of the Court whose officer he is, finds recognition in cases of high authority. In Angel v. Smith (1) Lord Eldon, L. C., affirmed the rule on the ground that the possession of the Receiver is the possession of the Court and observed that though there might be inconvenience from the application of the rule, the inconvenience the other way if the rule did not exist would be enormous. He then added the very important statement that if it is necessary to ask leave, "the Court must have credit for never refusing it, where it ought to be granted; and, if so, very great purposes of convenience may be answered by putting the party to ask it." See also Johnes v. Olaughton (2), Hawkins v. Gathercole (3), Randfield v. Randfield (4), Searle v. Choat (5). The same principle has been recognised and applied in our Courts: Miller v. Ram Ranjan (6), Dunne v. Kumar Chandra Kisore (7), Fink v. Calcutta Municipal Corporation (8). Accordingly, we have been invited to apply this principle to the case of a common manager. In our opinion, there is in many respects a close analogy between the position of a common manager and that of a Receiver. A Receiver is appointed, amongst other purposes, for the realisation, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the subject matter of litigation, the collection of rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits and the execution of documents such as the owner himself is competent to execute. A common manager is appointed where inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights is likely to ensue from a dispute between co-owners of an estate or tenure. When the manager is appointed, he is invested, for the purposes of management and subject to the control of the District Judge, with the same powers as the co-owners might, but for his appointment, have exercised, and so long as the common manager continues in office, such powers cannot be exercised by the co-owners themselves. A common manager is consequently appointed by the District Judge, performs his duties under the control of the District Judge and is removable by the order of the District Judge, but not otherwise. His salary or remuneration is fixed by the District Judge. He gives such security for the proper discharge of his duties as the District Judge directs. He deals with and distributes the profits in accordance with the orders of the District Judge. He keeps regular accounts and is required to pass his accounts at such period and in such form as the District Judge may direct. A common manager may consequently be regarded as an officer of the Court. If the rule which has been established for the protection of Receivers be extended to the case of a common manager, no inconvenience is likely to result. Indeed, a rule that permission of the Court is necessary to warrant many classes of actions against a common manager in his official capacity, is essential for the protection of common managers from needless and oppressive litigation. The fund or property in the hands of the common manager is in a sense in the custody of the Court. The Court may administer justice to claimants against the common manager in many instances without the expense and delay inseparable from a regular suit, and relief in that mode is commended by considerations of economy. It has been argued, however, that there are instances where a person holding an office analogous to that of a Receiver is allowed to be sued without the leave of the Court, and amongst such cases have been mentioned those of a Receiver appointed under section 18 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and an administrator pendente lite appointed under section 34 of the Probate Act. There is, however, no real analogy between a common manager and persons in the position named. An examination of the provisions of section 98 of the Bengal Tenancy Act makes it manifest that there is such an intimate relation between the common manager and the Court that he must be regarded as an officer of the Court who should not be permitted to be attacked without the leave of the Court. The adoption of the contrary view might lead to great confusion. To take one illustration: a common manager who is bound to pass his account at such period and in such form as the District Judge may direct may, even while his accounts are under examination by the District Judge, be simultaneously harassed by one or more of the co-owners by the institution of suits for accounts against him. The common manager, though an officer of one Court, may, in this manner, be made subject, in the matter of his official duties, to the orders of another tribunal. The inconvenience likely to follow, if the contention of the plaintiffs were to prevail, is well illustrated by what has happened in the case before us. The plaintiffs applied to the District Judge for leave to institute the present suit. He appointed an auditor, examined the accounts, and came to the conclusion that it would be undesirable to sanction the institution of a suit for account against the common manager without a more thorough enquiry. The District Judge is entitled to examine the accounts further under section 98, clause (b). The plaintiffs meanwhile insist upon an enquiry into the accounts in the present litigation. If we hold that the suit has been rightly instituted without the sanction of the District Judge, there is no escape from the position that there may be two independent enquiries into the accounts and possibly two conflicting conclusions—one by the District Judge, another by the Subordinate Judge. We are not prepared to take a view which may lead to consequences of this character. We hold accordingly that assuming a suit for account is maintainable against a common manager appointed under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, such suit cannot be maintained without leave obtained from the Court which appointed the common manager. This conclusion is in conformity with the opinion expressed in Nabi Kishore Mandal v Atul Chandra Chatterjee (9).

(9) 16 Ind. Cas. 193; 40 C. 150; 17 C. W. N. 846.

But it has been argued that this principle has no application to the present litigation, because the suit is for recovery of specific sums alleged to have been misappropriated or improperly retained by the common manager, so that the suit cannot be deemed to have been brought against the common manager as an officer of the Court. There is no foundation for this contention. To afford relief to the plaintiffs, the accounts must first be examined, and such accounts are and can be demanded from the common manager, only because of the obligations inseparably associated with his official position. It has further been argued that even if this be conceded, the defendant had ceased to be common manager at the date of the institution of the suit and was consequently no longer entitled to the protection he would have enjoyed if he had still continued in office. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well founded. A common manager, like a Receiver, is bound to account to the Court which placed him in a position of trust and responsibility. He must account to the Court, whether required to do so by the Court of its own motion or at the instance of parties interested in the estate. The fact that he has ceased to be common manager, has not terminated his liability to render accounts. No doubt his liability is official, but though his official character has ceased in so far as management of the property is concerned, his official liability to render accounts, has not ended with his official existence. Indeed, the accounts can be claimed from him only in his capacity as common manager; he is consequently, for this purpose, entitled to the same protection as if he had still been a common manager: Nabi Kishore Mandal v. Atul Chandra Chatterjee (9). The true position is that, in the matter of accounts he has not been finally discharged; he is still subject to the orders of the Court, and it is only just and fair that his privilege should be commensurate with his liability. We must hold that the sanction of the District Judge was necessary, and as such sanction has been refused, this suit cannot be maintained.

The second question which requires examination is that covered by the third issue, namely, whether a suit for accounts against a common manager appointed under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is maintainable without service of the notice contemplated by section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section provides that no suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after the prescribed notice in writing has been served in the manner indicated. We have already held that a common manager appointed under section 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is an officer of the Court. He is plainly a public officer within the meaning of the very comprehensive definition contained in section 2 (17) (d); he may rightly be regarded as an officer of a Court of Justice whose duty it is, as such officer, to take charge of property; he is, in any event, a person specially authorised by a Court of Justice to perform such duty. The only question is, whether the present suit for account is a suit in respect of any act purporting to be done by the common manager in his official capacity. The answer must be in the affirmative. The receipts and disbursements by the common manager purported unquestionably to be acts done in his official capacity; he is now called upon by the plaintiffs to account for the monies which passed through his hands, and after his accounts have been adjusted, to pay the effects in his hands into Court for the benefit of the parties entitled to them. To a suit of this description section 80 is applicable. We hold accordingly that the suit cannot be maintained in contravention of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code: Samanthala Koti Reddi v. Pothuri Subbiah (10).

The third question, covered by the tenth issue, refers to the liability of the common manager to render any accounts other than the quarterly accounts he submitted to the District Judge. The materials requisite for the decision of this question are not on the record. We have not adequate information as to what accounts were from time to time submitted by the common manager to the District Judge, what steps were taken to notify them to the persons interested, what directions were given to audit them and what orders were passed thereon on each occasion by the District Judge. In the absence of such information we cannot give a decision upon the question raised. But we may observe that if the same rule is applied to common managers as has been held applicable to Receivers, the District Judge would seem to possess the requisite authority (even though he may not have the necessary machinery at his disposal) to investigate the accounts and to enforce payment of any sums which may be found due from the common manager: Mohini Mohan Patra v. Baroda Kanta (11), Baroda Kanta v. Rashmani Dasi (12), Rashmani Dasi v. Baroda Kant (13). Thurl w v. Thurlow (14), R. v. Bayly (15). An account may, even though previously passed, be reviewed by him at a later date for sufficient reasons: Mohini Mohan Patra v. Baroda Kanta (11), Wildridge v. M'Kane (16), McOan v. O'Ferrall (17), and the penalties for non payment of balance due may be enforced even after the manager has been discharged: Harrison v. Boydell (18). In the present case, as appears from the order of the District Judge refusing leave, he intends to enquire further into the accounts. We need not consequently consider the question raised in Nobi Kishore Mandal v. Atul Chandra Chatterjee (9), namely, whether an enquiry into accounts by the District Judge is, under all circumstances, the only remedy available to the co owners, or whether there is an alternative remedy by way of a regular suit instituted with the sanction of the District Judge and after notice given to the common manager under section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It has finally been argued that under the Bengal Tenancy Act, a common manager can be appointed only in respect of an entire estate, that the order of release of one-third share on the 28th February 1914 to take effect retrospectively from the 2nd February 1914 was illegal, and that consequently from that date the possession of the manager in respect of the remaining two-thirds share became wrongful, rendering him liable to be sued as a wrongdoer. We are of opinion that there is no substance in this contention. It may be conceded that the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplates a common manager for an entire estate and that the order for release should not have been made in respect of an one-third share: Mohini Lal Pakrasi v. Nogenda Nath Pakrasi (19), Indu Bhusan v. Annapurna (20), Kanai Lal Ghose v. Basir Pramanik (21). But the fact remains that in this case the 1st defendant continued in possession of the two-thirds share in his character as common manager. He was de facto common manager and is bound to render an account as such; the co-owners are bound by the order of partial release made in their presence and they cannot be permitted any more than the 1st defendant himself to deny that he is under an obligation to account. The principle applicable to cases of this character was fully explained in the case of Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (22), where it was pointed out that there is weighty authority for the proposition that acts of officers de facto, performed by them within the scope of their assumed official authority, in the interests of the public or third persons and not for their own benefit, are generally as valid and binding as if they were the acts of officers de jure and cannot be collaterally impeached. The plaint in the present suit, indeed, proceeds on this assumption; the claim is for recovery of such sum as may be found due on adjustment of accounts to be rendered by the 1st defendant as common manager, and not for recovery of damages from him as a wrongdoer.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 23rd November 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Utraula (Gonda), dated the 31st July 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 5.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought on the basis of a mortgage-deed dated the 15th of April 1911, by which a share in Mauza Mahtanian was mortgaged with possession to the plaintiff by the 1st defendant for a sum of Rs. 400. Out of this sum Rs. 100 was left with the mortgagee to pay off a prior usufructuary mortgage held by one Lotawan over a portion of the mortgaged property. On the 15th of June 1908 a simple mortgage of the same property along with other property had been executed by the 1st defendant in favour of the plaintiff.

In 1914 the plaintiff brought a suit on the basis of the mortgage of 1908 and in that suit he made no mention of his own subsequent mortgage of 1911 but impleaded Lotawan as a subsequent mortgagee. It was found that Lotawan's mortgage was prior to the plaintiff's mortgage of 1908, and on the 23rd of May 1914 the plaintiff obtained a preliminary decree for sale of the property mortgaged to him in 1908 subject to the prior charge of Lotawan. In the present suit based on the mortgage of 1911 the plaintiff, alleging that he had not been given possession of the mortgaged property, brought his suit to recover Rs. 300 with interest by sale of the mortgaged property or, in the alternative, to be given possession of the mortgaged property.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for sale but granted him a decree for possession.

An appeal was preferred to the District Judge on the ground that as the plaintiff in his suit for sale on the prior mortgage of 1908 had made no mention of the existence of the later mortgage of 1911 in his own favour, he was not entitled to institute the present suit based on the later mortgage. The learned District Judge has held that in view of the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 1, and of section 11, Explanation IV, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff was debarred from instituting the present suit. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal against the finding of the learned District Judge.

The question involved in this case is one with regard to which there is considerable conflict of authority; but so far as I am aware, there is no reported case of this Court in which the question has been discussed. It is to be noted that no sale has yet taken place under the decree obtained by the plaintiff on the basis of his simple mortgage of 1908 and that the suit which he has now brought is one for possession on the basis of his mortgage of 1911. Rule 1 of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that subject to the provisions of the Code all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. This provision must be read with rule 9 of Order I, which provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of non-joinder of parties and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights of the parties actually before it. It is now settled law that if a puisne mortgagee is not impleaded in a suit brought by a prior mortgagee for sale he is not bound by any order for sale, that may be obtained in such a suit [Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (1)]. It would follow, therefore, that had the mortgage of 1911 been in favour of any one other than the plaintiff, that person would have been in no way debarred, by reason of the suit on the former mortgage of 1908, from instituting the present suit; and the question, therefore, is whether the plaintiff can be debarred merely because he is the same person in whose favour the prior mortgage was executed and who instituted the suit and obtained a decree on that mortgage.

In the case of Sundar Singh v. Bholu (2) it was held that there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Transfer of Property Act to prevent the holder of two independent mortgages over the same property, who is not restrained by any covenant in either of them, from obtaining a decree for sale on each of them in a separate suit. In that case the learned Judge remarked that it was difficult to see what benefit the plaintiff could obtain by their two decrees, except that they might attach any surplus arising from the sale under one decree in execution of the other decree. That was a case in which both the mortgages held by the plaintiff were simple mortgages. In the present case the second mortgage executed in 1911 was a usufructuary mortgage and the present suit brought by the plaintiff is for possession of the property under that mortgage. If he be granted a decree in the present suit, he will certainly be entitled to obtain and remain in possession of the mortgaged property until it is put to sale in execution of the former decree passed on the mortgage of 1908 (the judgment-debtor not having redeemed the mortgage of 1908 within the period allowed by the decree) or until his mortgage of 1911 be redeemed.

The decision in Sundar Singh v. Bholu (2) was dissented from in the case Dorasami v. Venkataseshayyar (3). In the case the learned Judges remarked: "The principle of the Transfer of Property Act is that any person instituting a suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption of the mortgaged property should include in that suit the interest of all persons in such property of which he has notice, whether such interest be prior or subsequent to his own, and if he obtains an order for sale, the sale will not be made subject to subsequent incumbrances, and the sale-proceeds, after deducting therefrom the expenses incident to the sale, will be distributed between himself and the subsequent incumbrancers according to their priorities. In the hands of the purchaser, however, the property will be subject to prior mortgages, unless the sale has been made free from the same with the consent of the prior mortgagees, in which case they acquire the right of priority over the sale-proceeds.

"If, however, a person having an interest in the mortgaged property is not made a party to the suit, by reason of the party suing having no notice of such interest, the rights of such person will remain unaffected by the decree and the proceedings in execution thereof, and complicated questions frequently arise when such persons sue subsequently upon such mortgage. But a party suing upon one of his mortgages can have no excuse for his not including in the suit his rights under his other mortgages, for he must necessarily have notice of the same."

The learned Judges relied on the substantive provisions enacted in sections 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act.

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 798; 16 A. L. J. 607; 5 P. L. W. 88; 35 M. L. J. 1; 24 M. L. T. 92; 28 C. L. J. 188; (1918) M. W. N. 518; 20 Bom. L. R. 798; 22 C. W. N. 1033; 40 A. 407; 9 L. W. 550; 12 Bur. L. T. 73; 45 I. A. 130 (P. C.).

(2) 20 A. 322 (F. B.); A. W. N. (1898) 58; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 566.

(3) 25 M. 108; 11 M. L. J 373.

Sections 86 and 88 have been repealed and have been re-enacted in rules 2 and 4 of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure. They also relied on the form of a decree for sale, No. 128, Schedule IV, of the old Code of Civil Procedure, for which form No. 4 in Appendix D of Schedule I of the present Code of Civil Procedure has been substituted. The rules and the form referred to require that the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant or to such person as he appoints all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property and shall, if so required, re-transfer the property to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him. The argument is that these provisions of law requiring the plaintiff in certain circumstances to deliver up all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property clearly indicate that the mortgagee is not entitled to reserve any rights to himself over the property in respect of which he has obtained a decree for sale. This ruling was referred to in Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (4), where it was held that a party holding two mortgages on the same property and suing on the first mortgage alone is, in respect of the second mortgage, a party to the suit under section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and if he omits to mention his second mortgage and the property is ordered to be sold free of such mortgage, he cannot afterwards sue to enforce his second mortgage against such property. It was held that the neglect to mention his second mortgage in his suit on the first mortgage and to have all his claims against the mortgaged property adjudicated upon amounted to a waiver of his rights under the second mortgage. The learned Advocate for the appellant argues that as in the present case the second mortgage is usufructuary, he could not get a decree for sale on it and he was not bound to mention it in the former suit and that had he mentioned it in the former suit, nothing would have resulted from his doing so. But this argument does not appear to be correct. Had he mentioned his subsequent mortgage, his rights under that mortgage would have been determined and if the property was put to sale, any balance of the proceeds after paying off the amount due on Lotawan's mortgage and under the decree would have been applied towards the payment of the plaintiff's second mortgage.

In Keshavram Dulavram v. Ranchhod Fakira (5) it was held that where a mortgagee holds two mortgages on the same property executed by the same person, he cannot maintain a suit to recover the sum due on the latter mortgage only by sale of the property subject to the prior mortgage. In that case the learned Judges remarked that it was difficult to see any answer to the argument derived from the form of a decree for sale in No. 128, Schedule IV to the Code of Civil Procedure. That ruling was, however, dissented from by Mr. Justice Chamier in the case Jagernath Singh v. Mohra Kuvar (6). In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Chamier remarks:—

"It is now clear that a puisne mortgagee is entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale subject to the prior mortgage of another person, and I see no reason why he should not bring it to sale subject to a prior mortgage held by himself, at all events where he is unable to sue upon the prior mortgage, as is the case here. It has been held that a person holding two mortgages on the same property is not bound to put both mortgages in suit together. In practice he usually sues upon both mortgages, for he cannot bring the property to sale subject to a later mortgage than the one in suit, whether the later mortgage is held by himself or by any one else; and there is not generally much to be gained by bringing the property to sale subject to a prior mortgage held by the decree-holder himself."

The last case to which reference was made is Murlidhar v. Sher Singh (7). In that case the property in dispute was mortgaged first to Mahtab Singh, then to Mahtab Singh and Sher Singh and thirdly to one Murli Dhar. Mahtab Singh brought a suit for sale upon the first mortgage, obtained a decree, had the property sold and purchased it himself. Mahtab Singh and Sher Singh then brought a suit upon the second mortgage and made Murli Dhar a party to that suit, and obtained a decree. They then applied for an order absolute for sale of the property mortgaged. On objection made by Murli Dhar it was held by Knox, J., that Mahtab Singh and Sher Singh could again sell the property which was sold in execution of the decree on the first mortgage, inasmuch as Mahtab Singh by his purchase did not become full owner, as the property was subject to the second and third mortgages. It is to be noted that Sher Singh and Mahtab Singh, the mortgagees under the second mortgage, were members of a joint Hindu family living jointly and that, therefore, practically the first and second mortgages were in favour of the same person. The question as to whether Mahtab Singh and Sher Singh were entitled to bring a suit on the second mortgage, no mention of that mortgage having been made in the first suit brought by Mahtab Singh, was not discussed in that case and the ruling does not, therefore, appear to be in point.

It seems to me quite clear that the plaintiff's suit on his second mortgage cannot be maintained. If the second mortgage had been held by a person other than the plaintiff and that person, having been made a party, had failed to claim the right to redeem the prior mortgage or to make any defence, he would clearly have been debarred from bringing any subsequent suit to enforce his mortgage debt. It cannot possibly be argued that the plaintiff was not a party to the suit on the prior mortgage, and he was certainly in a position to assert any rights which he might have under his subsequent mortgage. Having made no mention of those rights, he is in the same position in respect of the second mortgage as a puisne mortgagee would be, if having been duly impleaded he did not attempt to assert those rights. Vide Dhondo Ramchandra Kulkarni v. Bhikoji Gopal (8). Had he in the suit on his prior mortgage mentioned and proved his subsequent mortgage, any balance of the sale proceeds left over after satisfying Lotawan's mortgage and his own prior mortgage would have gone first towards the satisfaction of his subsequent mortgage and anything left over would have been paid to the mortgagor. Order XXXIV, rule 1, with the object of avoiding multiplicity of suits, provides that all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. Under this provision the plaintiff, if he did not wish to abandon his subsequent mortgage, ought to have disclosed it in his suit on the prior mortgage and had he done so, his claim on his subsequent mortgage would have been adjudicated upon and he could not have brought another suit on that mortgage. He cannot now, by taking advantage of his own wrong doing in not disclosing the subsequent mortgage, be allowed to bring a suit on that mortgage.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION No. 1791 OF 1918.

August 27, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

SRINIVASARAGHAVAN MINOR, BY HIS MOTHER AND NEXT FRIEND PONNAMMAL, AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS - RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIA, r. 2 (2)—Madras High Court (Appellate Side) Rules, r. 42—Party not served with notice of appeal, right of, to apply to set aside ex parte order.

Rule 42 of the Appellate Side Rules of the Madras High Court does not prevent a party who has not been served with notice of appeal, from applying to set aside any order passed ex parte in the appeal on the ground that he has not entered appearance. He cannot be penalised for not entering appearance by losing his right to receive notice of interlocutory applications, when such applications are made within the time limited for his entering appearance.

Petition, praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to set aside the order, dated the 12th July 1918, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1307 of 1918, granting leave to file a memorandum of additional grounds and to amend the memorandum of valuation in Appeal Suit No. 317 of 1917, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 71 of 1917.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, P. R. Ramakrishna Aiyar and K. Bhashyam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside the order passed by me on the 12th July 1918, allowing the appellants to file an additional ground of appeal and to amend the valuation of the appeal. Notice of the application to amend was not given to the 6th respondent and the order was passed without hearing him. Order XLIA, rule 2, clause 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, unless otherwise ordered, the period for respondent to enter appearance shall be 25 days from the service of notice upon him, and that, if he wants to appear and defend the appeal, he should enter appearance within that period. Rule 42 of the Appellate Side Rules provides that notice of an application to amend a memorandum of appeal should be given to all parties who have entered appearance. I do not think that rule 42 prevents a party, who has not been served with the notice on the ground that he has not entered appearance, from applying to set aside the order passed ex parte. If any penalty is attached for his not entering appearance within the time limited, that penalty can only arise when the period fixed for entering appearance has expired. It will be against all principles of equity to hold that a person should be punished for not entering appearance by losing his rights to receive notice of all interlocutory applications, when such applications are made within the time limited for his entering appearance. In the present case the applicant was declared a major on the 27th March 1913 and he got notice of appeal in the usual course entitling him to enter appearance on the 8th July. The petition to amend the memorandum of appeal was filed on the 25th April and no notice was sent to him, the appellant relying on rule 42 referred to above.

I am of opinion that the 6th respondent ought to have had notice of the application and that he is entitled to have the ex parte order set aside so far as he is concerned and to be heard on the merits. I accordingly set aside the order of the 12th July.

As the pleadings and grounds of appeal have been printed, I think the best thing to do will be to direct that the application for leave to file additional grounds and amend the valuation be posted before the Bench hearing the appeal. The additional ground need no additional printing, as the ground raises a pure question of law, and, as the appeal is filed in forma pauperis, no delay need be caused by the amendment of the valuation.

There will be thus no necessity for any adjournment of the appeal by reason of the petition being posted for hearing with it. Leave is granted to all the parties to file such additional affidavits as they may consider necessary in one month.

I make no order as to costs.

Thakur DARBARI SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by father—

JAGATPAL SINGH v. CHANDRAPAL SINGH.

Interest, high rate of, when justified—Court, interference by.

Where in the case of a mortgage by a Hindu father the security offered is inadequate, the contractual rate of interest, although high, ought not to be interfered with. Each case, however, should be considered on its own merits. [p. 759, col. 2; p. 760, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 30th March 1917.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Hyder Husain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale executed by the 1st defendant Thakur Darbari Singh in favour of the 4th defendant Nandan Prasad on the 22nd of December 1913 for a sum of Rs. 32,638-4 1. Nandan Prasad has sold his rights and interests as mortgagee to the plaintiff Thakur Chandrapal Singh. The two sons of Thakur Darbari Singh were impleaded as defendants and one Musammat Bismillah Begam, a prior mortgagee, was also impleaded. The plaintiff has been given a decree by the learned Subordinate Judge and the two sons of Thakur Darbari Singh, the executant of the mortgage, have appealed to this Court.

The consideration for the mortgage-deed in suit consists of the following items:—

(1) Rs. 21,500; advanced by Nandan Prasad to Thakur Darbari Singh for the purpose of paying off a decree for foreclosure obtained by the present plaintiff Thakur Chandrapal Singh against Darbari Singh and his son Surajpal Singh.

(2) Rs. 8,519-9 9; to pay off a simple money decree obtained by Nandan Prasad against Thakur Darbari Singh and his brother Lal Singh.

(3) Rs. 2,369-10 7; to pay off bahi-khata debts.

(4) Rs. 250; the costs of stamp and execution of the document.

At the time of the execution of the document the following debts were due by the two brothers Darbari Singh and Lal Singh to Nandan Prasad:—

(1) Rs. 29,313; due on a mortgage deed dated the 18th December 1911 which had been executed by the two brothers jointly in favour of Nandan Prasad.

(2) Bahi-khata debts amounting to Rs. 4,739-5-3,

(3) Rs. 8,519-9-6 due on a decree obtained by Nandan Prasad on the basis of certain hundis against the two brothers jointly.

At the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit the brothers Darbari Singh and Lal Singh agreed with the consent of Nandan Prasad to divide the responsibility for the payment of these debts. Lal Singh undertook to pay the whole of the first debt and half of the second, while Darbari Singh agreed to pay the other half of the second debt and the whole of the third debt, and on the same date as the deed in suit was executed Lal Singh also executed a mortgage deed in favour of Nandan Prasad to secure the payment of his share in these debts.

Grounds Nos. 4, 5 and 6 of the petition of appeal relate to the mutal arrangement between Darbari Singh and Lal Singh, but these grounds have not been pressed by the learned Counsel for the appellants as he admits that he is unable to show that the agreement entered into between Darbari Singh and Lal Singh by which the debts were divided was not in the interest of his clients. The only grounds taken on behalf of the appellants are that it has not been shown that the item of Rs. 21,500 was borrowed for legal necessity or antecedent debts, and that the interest charged in the mortgage-deed and allowed by the learned Subordinate Judge is excessive.

Out of the item of Rs. 21,500, Rs. 21,189 were actually paid into Court in satisfaction of the decree for foreclosure obtained by Thakur Chandrapal Singh against Thakur Darbari Singh and his son Surajpal Singh. It is to be noted that at the time this decree was obtained Jagatpal Singh, the other son of Thakur Darbari Singh, had not been born. The balance of the first item consisting of Rs. 250 and Rs. 61 was paid in cash by Nandan Prasad to Thakur Darbari Singh (see receipt Exhibit 7 on the file). The history of the debt of Rs. 21,189 is as follows. On the 12th of June 1902 Darbari Singh executed a mortgage deed in which he hypothecated joint family property in favour of one Shambhu Ratan for the sum of Rs. 9,139 8-0. Out of this sum Rs 6,312-8-0 were for paying off an earlier mortgage dated the 3rd of June 1898 and Rs. 2,827 were for payment of bahi khata debts. There is nothing to show how the debt to secure which the mortgage of 1898 was given had originally been incurred. On the basis of his mortgage of 1902 Shambhu Ratan obtained a decree in 1906 against Darbari Singh and Surajpal, the only son of Darbari Singh who was then alive and who was impleaded under the guardianship of his uncle Lal Singh. The decree was for the sum of Rs. 13,592. On the 30th of December 1909 Darbari Singh executed another mortgage-deed in favour of Thakur Chandrapal Singh for the sum of Rs. 16,000, out of which the decree held by Shambhu Ratan was fully paid and the balance was appropriated towards payment of bahi khata debts. It was on the basis of this mortgage deed of the 30th of December 1909 that Thakur Chandrapal Singh on the 27th of June 1912 obtained the decree for foreclosure, the mortgage-debt having then amounted up to Rs. 21,189. That decree was obtained not only against Darbari Singh but against his son Surajpal under the guardianship of Lal Singh. The other appellant Jagatpal Singh was born after that decree had been obtained. The learned Counsel for the appellants would argue that though the decrees both of 1906 and 1912 were obtained not only against Thakur Darbari Singh but also against the only son of Thakur Darbari Singh who was then alive, the sons can in the present case challenge the validity of these decrees, but he can give no authority for this proposition. Even if we were to concede that in the present proceedings the validity of these decrees can be challenged, we are of opinion that the burden would be on the appellants to give at least prima facie evidence that the decrees were not binding upon them, and not a particle of such evidence has been produced. We are of opinion, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the appellants cannot repudiate this debt.

The only question that remains is that of interest In the mortgage deed interest at the rate of 1·8 per mensem with yearly rests has been fixed and the learned Subordinate Judge has allowed interest at this rate. It is urged that there was no necessity to borrow it at such an excessive rate of interest and reliance is placed on the rulings in Hurro Nath Pal Chowdhuri v. Randhir Singh (1) and Sarabjit Singh v. Gur Bakhsh Singh (2). In our opinion there is no force in this argument. It is specially to be noted that the defendants appellants did not take this plea in their written statement and Darbari Singh pleaded that it had been agreed that though the rate of 1·8 per mensem should be entered in the deed, yet interest at the rate of 8 annas would be charged. We have no hesitation whatsoever in rejecting this plea of Darbari Singh as altogether false. It is in evidence that Darbari Singh had all along been borrowing money from Nandan Prasad at the rate of 1·8 per mensem and it is absurd to suppose that Nandan Prasad a money-lender, would be willing, when the debt had mounted up to such a large amount, to reduce his rate of interest to 8 annas. It is specially to be noted that no fraud or undue influence has even been alleged. The last date fixed for payment of the foreclosure decree was the 23rd December 1913. Darbari Singh himself admits that he vainly attempted to obtain a loan from many other persons and at the last moment applied to Nandan Prasad. Looking at the income of the property, even if we take that income to be the amount stated by the appellants themselves, the security offered by the property for such a large loan was inadequate. It is pointed out by the learned Counsel for the appellants that Darbari Singh had obtained previous loans from Shambhu Ratan at 6 annas per cent. per mensem and from the plaintiff Chandrapal Singh at 8 anras per cent. per mensem, but these loans were granted as far back as 1902 and 1909 when Darbari Singh was not nearly so heavily involved in debt and the mortgagees had ample security. There was further urgent need of obtaining the loan as had it not been obtained, the property would have been lost altogether to Darbari Singh and the appellants. Darbari Singh, though according to his own statement he made efforts to obtain a loan elsewhere, failed altogether to do so and as a last resort he approached Nandan Prasad, whose ordinary rate of interest not only for cash loans but also on mortgages was 1·8 per cent. per mensem, and Nandan Prasad advanced the money necessary on very poor security. Each case of this kind has to be considered on its own merits, and we are of of opinion that in the present case we would not be justified in interfering with the contractual rate of interest.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, rr. 1, 2, O. XL, r. 1—Temporary injunction, when to be granted—Receiver, appointment of, grounds for—Waste, proof of.

Proof of waste is a ground for the appointment of a Receiver. [p. 761, col. 1.]

In order to obtain an injunction or the appointment of a Receiver the applicant has to show that the property is in danger of being wasted or alienated and should be preserved from waste or alienation; but while in order to secure an injunction it is enough to show that the applicant has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, the Court will not ordinarily appoint a Receiver while one party is actually in possession and an irreparable wrong may be done to him by the Court taking interim possession of the property. [p. 761, col. 1.]

Petition, praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to appoint a Receiver for the suit properties pending disposal of Appeal No. 324 of 1918, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 27 of 1914.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and T. M. Ramasami Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastriar for Mr. A. S. Visuranatha Ayyar, and Mr. K. C. Gopala Desikan, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In this petition the appellant in Appeal No. 324 of 1918 on the file of this Court moves for the appointment of a Receiver for the properties of the Sivagiri Zamin, which are in the hands of the 1st respondent to the appeal as he has succeeded in the suit to establish his right to the Zamindary properties. The motion is based on three allegations of waste: (i) alienation of 114 kotahs of land at a gross undervalue, about 1/3th of their real worth, (ii) indiscriminate cutting of timber trees and (iii) removal of Melvaram paddy by the ryots. The matter was before their Lordships, the Chief Justice and Napier, J., in March of this year and they then decided that the appointment of a Receiver was, as things then stood, unnecessary and directed that 1st respondent should have possession of the plaint properties on furnishing security in 1½ (one and a half) lakhs of rupees, representing two years' income of the properties, the subject of the appeal. It was brought to the notice of their Lordships that the 1st respondent had entered into an agreement (Exhibit 45 in the case) to alienate 100 kotahs of land to various persons who were financing him in his litigation. The learned Chief Justice, however, remarked that the conveyance of the property had not then been carried out and might never take place. It is undisputed before me that not only has the conveyance of the 100 kotahs taken place but an additional 14 kotahs have also since been transferred. The 1st respondent only entered into possession of the property in March last in execution of the decree passed in his favour. Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the 1st respondent, offers to submit to a temporary injunction restraining the respondent from further alienating the corpus of the property pending the appeal, and the question is whether this is sufficient in the circumstances of this case.

As to the cutting and selling of timber, it is objected by the 1st respondent that the evidence of this is furnished largely by the very ryots who are responsible for the removal of the Melvaram crops. I am satisfied, however, on the affidavits that there is some ground for thinking that some timber may have been improperly cut and sold and the ordinary cutting of leased crops has been exceeded. As to the crops, any damage is amply covered by the security already furnished by the 1st respondent, and this point need not be considered,

Assuming that acts of waste have been proved by the alienations referred to and by the cutting and selling of timber trees, the question arises whether I ought in these circumstances to appoint a Receiver. Proof of waste is certainly a ground for such appointment. [Compare Sivagnana-thammal v. Arunachalam Pillai (1).] On the other hand, the distinction laid down in Chandidat Jha v. Padmanand Singh Bahadur (2) between the cases in which an injunction will issue and a Receiver be appointed is as as follows: "The distinction seems to be that while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, in the former case, it would be sufficient if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged; while in the latter case a good prima facie title has to be made out." Here of course the respondent is in possession and his title has been established. In the leading case of Owen v. Homan (3) it is said "that where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the enjoyment, the case is necessarily involved in further questions. The Court by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the defendant, in some cases an irreparable wrong. If the plaintiff should eventually fail in establishing his right against the defendant, the Court may by its interim interference have caused mischief to the defendant for which the subsequent restoration of the property may afford no adequate compensation." In this case it is of course impossible to say that the petitioner (appellant) has a better prima facie title than the 1st respondent. See Sivaji Raja Sahib v. Aiswariyanandaji Sahib (4). I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that a Receiver should be refused, but a temporary injunction will be granted restraining the 1st respondent from making any further permanent alienation of the immoveable property belonging to the Zamin during the pendency of the appeal or until further orders. In my opinion the injunction should be extended to prevent him also from cutting or selling any trees except in the ordinary way by leasing crops or in the usual course of husbandry, for which, of course, the 1st respondent will continue to maintain accounts.

The petition is dismissed but without costs.

A person who takes a mortgage from a Hindu widow ought to know that he is dealing with an individual who has ordinarily only a limited interest in the property which she proposes to mortgage, and if he charges a high rate of interest in consideration of the risk he incurs, that covenant cannot be enforced against the persons to whom the property ultimately goes after the death of the widow, even with regard to that portion of the consideration which may be found to be supported by legal necessity, unless the circumstances, attending the loan, indicate that the rate of interest charged was reasonable Ordinarily, 1 per cent. per mensem is a reasonable rate of interest in such cases. [p 763 col. 1.]

A Hindu widow cannot set up an adverse title against herself or do anything prejudicial to the interest of the reversionary heirs of her husband, so long as she remains in possession in succession to her husband. [p. 763, col. 1.]

A Hindu widow cannot be deemed to represent her husband's estate so as to bind the reversionary heirs of her husband in relation to anything which she may have done herself to the prejudice of these reversionary heirs She represents the estate as against strangers for the purpose of protecting or preserving it Anything done by her for a purpose unconnected with the protection or preservation of the estate or without any legal necessity cannot bind the reversionary heirs of her husband. A decree obtained by a mortgagee against a Hindu widow alone, on the basis of a mortgage which is found not to have been made by her for legal necessity, cannot bind the reversioners. [p. 763, col. 2.]

Where a decree is obtained against a Hindu widow alone on the foot of a mortgage which is found to have been made by her partially for legal necessity, it is not equitable to make the reversioners of her husband liable to pay the costs of the mortgage suit to the extent of that amount of the mortgage money which was taken for legal necessity. Syed Ali Mohammad, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to certain property which belonged to Debidin, who died some time in 1900, leaving a widow, Musammat Maharana. On the 31st July 1906 Musammat Maharana made a mortgage of 31 bighas 8 biswas of sir land in the village of Korari Kalan in favour of Jairam, the predecessor in-title of the defendant-appellant. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 622, carrying interest at 2 per cent. per mensem compoundable half-yearly. On the death of Jairam there was a partition between the members of his family by virtue of which the mortgage bond in question was allotted to the share of Ganga Prasad. Ganga Prasad filed a suit for foreclosure on foot of the said bond and obtained a decree against Musammat Maharana on the 8th March 1912 (Exhibit A1). Subsequently Ganga Prasad sold his decree to the defendant appellant, who got it made absolute on the 17th January 1915.

In pursuance of that decree the defendant-appellant got possession of 9 bighas 5 biswas of land out of the entire property mortgaged, but by some inadvertence he was not given possession over the remainder of the property. Musammat Maharana died on the 20th March 1917. After her death the defendant appellant applied for the possession of the remaining property as against the plaintiffs-respondents, who are the reversionary heirs of her husband. The Court of first instance allowed the execution to proceed, but the lower Appellate Court postponed the decision till the determination of the present suit, which had meanwhile been filed by the plaintiffs-respondents for the recovery of possession of the said property over which the defendant-appellant was awarded possession.

The main question for determination in this suit was whether the mortgage effected by Musammat Maharana was made for legal necessity and, if so, to what extent. The Court of first instance found that the mortgage was made for legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 250-4-6 and that there was no necessity for borrowing the said money at a rate of interest higher than 2 per cent. per mensem. It allowed the plaintiffs-respondents a decree for possession accordingly, subject to the payment of Rs. 250 4-6 with simple interest thereon at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the mortgage till the 20th April 19 8, the date of the institution of the suit. The lower Appellate Court similarly came to the conclusion that Rs. 250-4-6 were taken for legal necessity, but it refused to allow the defendant appellant interest at a higher rate than 1 per cent. per mensem. The defendant has appealed and the plaintiffs have filed cross objections.

There is no reason, however, for interfering with the finding arrived at by the Court below as to the extent to which the mortgage was justified by legal necessity. One of the items allowed was taken for celebrating the fourth anniversary in connection with the death of Debidin. The other item allowed related to certain debts due by Debidin. The lower Appellate Court observes that the performance of the fourth death anniversary is considered to be of some importance in the caste to which the deceased belonged. The plaintiffs respondents cannot, therefore, escape responsibility from the payment of the said amounts.

The next question relates to the interest to which the defendant appellant is entitled. In view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nawab Nazir Begam v. Rao Raghunath Singh (1), where simple interest was allowed at 1 per cent. per mensem, there is no sufficient reason for interfering with the discretion which the lower Appellate Court has exercised. A person who takes a mortgage from a Hindu widow ought to know that he is dealing with an individual who has ordinarily only a limited interest in the property which she proposes to mortgage; and if he charges a high rate of interest in consideration of the risk he incurs, that covenant cannot be enforced against the persons to whom the property ultimately goes after the death of the widow, even with regard to that portion of the consideration which may be found to be supported by legal necessity, unless the circumstances, attending the loan, indicate that the rate of interest charged was reasonable. Between the 14th June 1905 to the 31st July 1906 Jairam advanced not less than three loans to Musammat Maharana on interest varying from 2 per cent. to 3·2 per cent. per mensem. He was apparently trying to use the situation to his best advantage and the plaintiffs-respondents cannot be reasonably expected to carry out a hard bargain, which he had succeeded in exacting from the lady.

It is urged on behalf of the defendant appellant that Musammat Maharana was in possession of 7 bighas 16 biswas of sir land under an oral gift said to have been made by Debidin in her favour. It appears that mutation of names was made in her favour in pursuance of the alleged oral gift on the 10th July 1895 (Exhibit A3). The possession of Musammat Maharana could not, however, be adverse, even if it existed, to the reversionary heirs, because Debidin died within 5 years of the date on which the mutation of names was effected and no registered document was executed to convey a title to the donee. On the death of Debidin the right of the heirs of Debidin to obtain possession vested for the time being in Musammat Maharana, who could not set up an adverse title against herself or do anything prejudicial to the interest of the reversionary heirs of her husband, so long as she remained in possession in succession to her husband. The defendant-appellant cannot, therefore, be allowed to justify the mortgage so far as it related to 7 bighas 16 biswas of sir land on the ground of an adverse title.

It is also urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the suit for foreclosure brought by Ganga Prasad against Musammat Maharana was practically a suit against the person who then represented the estate of Ganga Prasad, and a decree passed therein was binding on the plaintiffs respondents. But the widow cannot be deemed to represent the estate so as to bind the reversionary heirs of her husband in relation to anything which she may have done herself to the prejudice of the said reversionary heirs. She represents the estate as against the strangers for the purpose of protecting or preserving it. Anything done by her for a purpose unconnected with the protection or preservation of the estate or without any legal necessity cannot bind the reversionary heirs of her husband. The decree for foreclosure obtained by the defendant-appellant does not, therefore, bind the present plaintiffs respondents.

It is further urged on behalf of the defendant appellant that the costs of the suit for foreclosure ought to have been added to the amount for which the legal necessity was established. But as the legal necessity was only partial, it would not be equitable to add those costs to the mortgage money, particularly as the parties to the present case were not made parties to the suit for foreclosure and were given no opportunity of redeeming the mortgage.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents states that he does not press any cross objections other than those which have already been dealt with, but he wants that the interest should be further reduced. There is, however, no sufficient reason to justify a further reduction.

The appeal and the cross-objections are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Khajeh SOLEMAN QUADER AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Family settlement by way of wakf, validity of—Test determining validity—Maintenance—Successive allowances in favour of unborn persons, validity of—Parties, whether can validate invalid wakf—Construction of document—Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913), whether retrospective.

A wakf created before the passing of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, in which the gift to charity is illusory and in which the chief, if not the sole object of the settlor, appears to have been to create a settlement in perpetuity for the aggrandisement of the family, is invalid in law. The test to be applied in determining the validity of such a wakf is whether there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other. [p 766, col 2.]

Statutes which are properly of a merely declaratory character have a retrospective effect. But the nature of a Statute must be determined from its provisions, and the mere fact that the expression "it is declared" has been used is by no means conclusive as to the true character of the legislation. [p. 767, col 1.]

The Mussalman Wakf Validating Act is not a purely declaratory Statute and is not retrospective in operation. The language used in sections 3 and 4 of the Act leaves no room for doubt that the Legislature intended to make its provisions applicable only to wakfs created after the date of the enactment. [p. 767, col. 2.]

A scheme for the grant of maintenance allowances to the members of a family which is founded on and is intimately associated with wakfs that are invalid in law, cannot take effect. The assertion of the parties or their representatives cannot validate an illegal wakf, and the Court cannot be utilised for the enforcement of a scheme elaborately devised to carry out a plan of family aggrandisement under the colour of a wakf in contravention of the whole policy of the law. [p. 769, col. 1.]

Whenever a wakf is created, the ownership of the appropriator in the thing dedicated is extinguished and there is a detention of the thing in the implied ownership of God in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind. Consequently it would be wrong to assume that a person creating a wakf, in which there is a provision for the maintenance of the members of his family, could ever have intended that such maintenance would be a charge upon the dedicated estate. [p. 769, col. 2.]

The creation of a succession of allowances for maintenance from generation to generation in favour of unborn persons, which are not charged upon an estate apart from a scheme of valid wakf, does not appear to be recognised by Muhammadan Law. [p. 770, col. 1.]

A well-known rule of construction of a document which offends against the rule against perpetuities is that the document is first to be construed without reference to the rule against perpetuities and then the validity of the disposition made by it is to be tested by the application of the rule. [p. 768, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 16th April 1917.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for recovery of money claimed for arrears of maintenance allowance and for the cost of construction of a house. The claim for allowance has been decreed by the trial Court, while the claim for cost of erection of the house has been dismissed. The plaintiffs have not preferred a cross-appeal with regard to the portion of the claim disallowed by the Court below, and we are consequently concerned in this appeal solely with the question of the validity of the claim for arrears of maintenance allowance. That claim is based on a document called a "deed of agreement" executed by the late Nawab Sir Asanulla of Dacca, father of the 1st defendant. A brief recital of the family history of the defendants and of the events which led up to the agreement in question is necessary for the appreciation of the questions in controversy between the parties.

Khaja Abdulla, who came from Cashmere, set up an extensive trading business in the town of Dacca, and settled there towards the end of the eighteenth century. He left four sons, Khaja Asanulla, Hafizulla, Khaja Abdul Azim and Khaja Abdul Karim. Hafizulla, after the death of his father, became the head of the family and died about the year 1831. He was succeeded by his son Abdul Gaffur who was followed by his cousin Alimulla, the son of Asanulla. On the 28th September 1835 this Alimulla made a gift of a sum of two lacs of rupees in favour of his son Abdul Gani, followed, on the 26th December 1845, by a deed of gift of valuable immovable properties. On the 8th May 1846 the other members of the family created a wakf of which Abdul Gani was made the mutwalli. This document recited that the custom of the family had been to appoint one of the members as the head, who granted allowances to the others and was accepted by them as the leader of the family; it was stated explicitly that the object of the wakf was the maintenance of the members of the family. It was also provided that the mutwalli would not be liable to be removed and would have authority to appoint his successor. On the 11th September 1868 Abdul Gani executed a tuliatnama, whereby he transferred the mutwalliship to his son Asanulla and also executed a deed of wakf whereof he appointed his son Asanulla as a mutwalli. The wakf was created "in favour of all his sons, offspring and all the members and relatives descended from his grandfather, and was descendible to children in the male and female lines, and on their failure, in favour of the fakirs and the poor indigent of Dacca." There can be no doubt as to the purpose of the wakf, because it was expressly recited that the wakf was created for the maintenance of the members of the family, generation after generation. To remove the possibility of all doubt on this point, the founder added:

"The object of the wakf of the properties is this, that they be protected from injury and ruin and that the name and dignity of the family be maintained and that the profits of the estate be, according to the practice and usage of the family, spent for the improvement of the position and dignity of the family, for the comfort and benefit of the persons in whose favour the wakf is made, and for the performance of worldly and religious affairs and of charitable acts."

Rules were laid down for the management of the wakf properties, for succession to the office of mutwalli and for other like matters, and there was a somewhat remarkable provision that none of the beneficiaries would be competent to demand accounts from the mutwalli. The mutwalli appears to have carried out the directions of the founder for many years. But harmony could not well be maintained for all time to come in an ever growing family, and on the 2nd September 1880 a suit was instituted by some of the members against Nawab Sir Abdul Gani and Nawab Asanulla. The plaintiffs repudiated the tauliatnama of 11th September 1868, and claimed to recover more than two lacs of rupees on settlement of accounts. Nawab Asanulla filed his written statement on the 1st December 1880, wherein he relied upon the tauliatnama and repudiated the claim for accounts as inconsistent with the rights created thereunder. The trial of the suit extended over many months, and judgment was reserved on the 11th August 1881. The friends and well wishers of the family (including the then Lieutenant-Governor and the District Judge), however, intervened with a view to bring about a settlement of the disputes. Their endeavours were successful, and on the 26th August 1881 an application was presented to the Subordinate Judge by the plaintiffs for leave to withdraw the suit without right reserved to institute a fresh suit on any cause of action which formed the subject-matter of the suit. This application was based on a memorandum of agreement executed on the same date (Exhibit 12), which was followed on the 17th September 1881 by a supplementary deed of agreement (Exhibit 11) specifying the amount of monthly allowance payable to each member of the family out of the income of the wakfs of 8th May 1846 and 11th September 1868, respectively. The application for withdrawal of the suit was accepted by the Subordinate Judge and the order for withdrawal was made on the 21st September 1881. The claim for arrears of maintenance allowance in the present litigation is based on the two documents just mentioned, dated 26th August 1881 and 17th September 1881.

The anticipations of the friends and well-wishers of the family for final settlement of all controversy were, however, not realised. In 1889 the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Ahsanulla v. Amarchand Kundu (1) negatived the validity of wakfs made in favour of the family and descendants of a settlor without an ultimate substantial trust for the poor or for other religious or charitable purposes. The true position was made still clearer by subsequent judicial pronouncements, specially those in Bikani Mia v. Shuk Lal (2) and Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhury (3). In these circumstances, legal advice was not difficult to obtain, and on the 2nd April 1894 Nawab Sir Abdul Gani instituted a suit against his son Nawab Asanulla and the other members of the family to test the validity of the wakf of 11th September 1868 and of the agreements of the 26th August and 17th September, 1881. The father of the present plaintiffs, who was one of the defendants in that litigation, repudiated the agreement as fraudulent. During the pendency of this suit, some of the other members of the family instituted a suit on the 17th September 1894 against Nawab Sir Abdul Gani, Nawab Asanulla and others for declaration of the invalidity of the wakfs of 1846 and 1868 and of the agreements of 1881, for accounts and possession, and for other incidental reliefs. Throughout these two litigations, questions were raised as to the title to the properties covered by the wakfs, and the suggestion was made that should the wakfs be pronounced invalid, the properties must be divided amongst the persons found entitled thereto. But neither of the two suits mentioned led to a decision on the merits. The suit instituted by Nawab Sir Abdul Gani was withdrawn on the 20th March 1895. The suit instituted by the members of the family abated by reason of the death of some of the numerous parties, and an order to that effect made by the lower Court on the 9th September 1907 was confirmed by this Court on the 4th August 1914. On the 19th November 1895 some of the members of the family instituted a suit against Nawab Sir Abdul Gani and Nawab Asanulla for partition and possession of all the family properties on the assumption that no valid wakf was in existence. On the 29th September 1896 Nawab Asanulla filed his written statement wherein he did not repudiate the challenge thrown against the wakfs, but claimed to be in possession of the properties comprised therein, subject to the true meaning and legal effect of the agreement for grant of maintenance. The issues were settled on the 3rd July 1899. But we are informed that the suit has never come on for trial by reason of the successive deaths of the numerous parties enrolled as plaintiffs and defendants. Meanwhile, as the plaintiffs allege, the Nawab has discontinued the maintenance, and they have instituted this suit for enforcement of their rights under the agreements to which they themselves were not parties. In fact, the plaintiffs were infants at the date of the institution of this suit and attained majority on the 21st September 1912 and 11th October 1913 during the pendency of the trial in the Court below; this shows that they were born sometime after the agreements of 1881, which is the foundation of their claim. The substantial matter in controversy thus is, whether there is a valid agreement enforceable at the instance of the plaintiffs. For the determination of this question, it is necessary to investigate two preliminary points, namely, first, are the wakfs valid in law? and secondly, if not valid in their inception, have they been validated by the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913.

As regards the first question, there has been no serious controversy between the parties in this Court that according to the decisions of the Judicial Committee the wakfs were invalid. The gift to charity was illusory and the chief if not the sole object of the settlor was to create a settlement in perpetuity for the aggrandisement of the family: Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhury (3), Mujibunnissa v. Abdur Rahim (4), Muhammad Munawar Ali v. Razia Bibi (5). The test to be applied in cases of this character is, whether there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other [Mahomed Ahsanulla v. Amarchand Kundu (1)]; or as Lord Robertson put it in Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (4) the deed is a valid wakf, if its effect is to give the property in substance to charitable uses; it is not so, if the effect is to give the property in substance to the testators's family: Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (6). The first point must consequently be decided in the sense that the wakfs were not valid according to the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee.

As regards the second question, it has been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, which received the assent of the Governor-General on the 7th March 1913, is a declaratory Act and is consequently retrospective in operation. It need not be disputed that Statutes which are properly of a merely declaratory character have a retrospective effect, because if the Statute is in its nature declaratory, the argument that it must not be so construed as to take away pre existing rights, ceases to be applicable: Attorney-General v. Theobald (7). But as was pointed out by Lord Halsbury, L. C., in the case of Harding v. Commissioners of Stamps for Queensland (8), the nature of the Statute must be determined from its provisions and the mere fact that the expression "it is declared" has been used is by no means conclusive as to the true character of the legislation. Tested in the light of this principle, what is the position in the case before us? The preamble states the object of the legislation, namely, that as doubts have arisen regarding the validity of wakfs created by persons professing the Mussalman faith in favour of themselves, their families, children and descendants and ultimately for the benefit of the poor or for other religious, pious or charitable purposes, it is expedient to remove such doubts. This, read by itself, is ambiguous, and may be taken either to include wakfs to be created in the future as also wakfs created in the past or to be limited only to future wakfs. These are the alternative constructions which can be applied to the preamble. Section 1 states that the Act may be called the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913. Section 3 then provides as follows:—"It shall be lawful for any person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf" (which fulfils certain specified conditions). Section 4 finally provides that "no such wakf shall be deemed to be invalid merely because the benefit reserved therein for the poor or other religious, pious or charitable purposes of a permanent nature is postponed until after the extinction of the family, children or descendants of the person creating the wakf." The language used in sections 3 and 4 leaves no room for doubt that the Legislature intended to make the provisions applicable only to wakfs created after the date of the enactment. If the intention had been otherwise, language suitable for the purpose might easily have been used In the absence of clear provision to that effect, we cannot possibly hold that the Legislature intended to affect numerous titles which might have been accepted on the faith of the correctness of the law as expounded by the highest judicial tribunal in the Empire. The legislation in fact is not even in terms a purely declaratory Statute; in reality, it effects a vital alteration in the law. We are consequently unable to accept the contention that the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, is retrospective in operation, and our conclusion is in harmony with that adopted in Rahim-un-nissa Bibi v. Manik Jan (9), Muhammad Bukth Majumdar Ajmon Raja (10), Amir Bibi v. Aziza Bibi (11), Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (6). We hold accordingly that the wakfs under consideration, which were invalid in their inception, have not been validated by retrospective operation of the new legislation. This brings us to the fundamental point in the case, namely, the construction and legal effect of the agreements embodied in the deeds of 26th August and 17th September 1881.

As regards these agreements, we may state that in view of the invalidity of the wakfs which constitute the foundation of the entire transaction, an ingenious endeavour has been made on behalf of the respondents to put a forced construction on them not justified by the plain language of the documents. It is consequently useful to bear in mind a well known rule of construction of documents which offend against the rule against perpetuities, namely, that the instrument is to be construed without reference to the rule and then the validity of the disposition is to be tested by the application of the rule. See the observations of Baron Parke and of Patteson and Maule, JJ., in Daungannon v. Smith (12). Lord Selborne, L. C., emphasised the principle in Pearks v. Moseley (13) in the following terms: "You do not import the law of remoteness into the construction of the instrument, by which you investigate the expressed intention of the testator. You take his words, and endeavour to arrive at their meaning, exactly in the same manner as if there had been no such law, and as if the whole intention expressed by the words could lawfully take effect. I do not mean, that, in dealing with words which are obscure and ambiguous, weight, even in a question of remoteness, may not sometimes be given to the consideration that it is better to effectuate than to destroy the intention; but I do say, that, if the construction of the words is one about which a Court would have no doubt, though there was no law of remoteness, that construction cannot be altered or wrested to something different, for the purpose of escaping from the consequences of that law. So understanding the rule, the first question in every case of this kind is that of pure and simple construction - what is the meaning of the words ...used? What would their effect be if there was no law of remoteness?"

Let us now analyse the agreement which forms the foundation of the claim. The fundamental document of the 26th August 1881 consists of twenty paragraphs. The first paragraph provides for the re constitution of the suit then pending. The second paragraph provides that in the suit as reconstituted, all charges of fraud against the Nawabs and their ancestors shall be withdrawn. The third, fourth and fifth paragraphs provide that the signatories admit that the wakfs of 1846 and 1868 are valid and binding, that they have no interest in the properties in the possession of the Nawabs and that the lists appended to the document contain a complete enumeration of the properties included in the wakfs. The sixth paragraph recites that Nawab Asanulla as mutwalli under the two wakfs has increased the allowances of the various members of the family mentioned in the schedules, which give an exhaustive enumeration of all persons entitled to receive maintenance. The paragraph further states that the parties had agreed to the appointment of a committee of family members for the determination of the exact amount payable to each person. The seventh paragraph makes it obligatory upon Nawab Asanulla to execute a formal deed when the amount of allowances has been fixed by the committee. The eighth paragraph makes the debts of each member of the family payable by himself or recoverable in instalments from the allowance fixed for him. The ninth paragraph makes the allowances invarible for a period of twenty years from the 3rd September 1880 (the date of institution of the suit); on the termination of this period, the allowances would be revised by a committee of the family. The tenth paragraph provides for the payment of arrears of allowance. The eleventh paragraph is in these terms: "On the death of any member of the family in receipt of an allowance his or her allowance shall be distributed amongst his or her heirs and residuaries in proportions to be determined by the family Panchayet." The twelfth paragraph provides for expenditure by the mutwalli on occasions of family rejoicings and mournings, the amount to be fixed by the family Panchayet. The thirteenth paragraph relates to expenditure by the mutwalli for repairs to dwelling houses and for increased accommodation for members of the family, when deemed necessary by the family Panchayet. The fourteenth paragraph imposes on the mutwalli the obligation to provide medicines and medical attendance for members of the family, such as may be deemed necessary by the family Panchayet. The fifteenth paragraph provides that no mutwalli, present or future, shall stop the allowances fixed under clause (6) without "just cause" to be declared as such by the family Panchayet. The sixteenth paragraph provides for cases where the allowance of a member may be stopped for just cause, leaving it open to the mutwalli to grant a compassionate allowance to the offender and to pay the balance of allowance to members of the family dependent on the latter. The seventeenth paragraph provides that when the family Panchayet so determines, an allowance which has been stopped by the mutwalli shall be restored. The eighteenth paragraph defines the mode of constitution of the family Panchayet previously mentioned. The nineteenth and twentieth paragraphs provide for the withdrawal of the suit and for the payment of a sum of money by Nawab Asanulla to Ramkissen. The supplementary document was executed on the 17th September 1881 pursuant to the sixth paragraph of the memorandum of the 26th August 1881. It recites that a committee of family members had been constituted on the 30th August 1881, who had determined the allowance payable to each member of the family out of the wakfs of 1846 and 1868 respectively. Nawab Asanulla undertook to pay these sums within seven days from the beginning of each month, subject to the conditions set out in the original document which were briefly recited.

Such then is the substance of the scheme for the grant of maintenance allowance to members of the family. It is manifest that the scheme is founded on and is inseparably associated with the wakfs of 1846 and 1868; consequently, as soon as these wakfs are pronounced to be invalid and inoperative in law, the entire scheme must of necessity be shattered to pieces. The assertion of the parties or of their representatives cannot validate illegal wakfs, and the Court cannot be utilised for the enforcement of a scheme elaborately devised to carry out a plan of family aggrandisement in contravention of the whole policy of the law. In this view, a desperate effort has been made on behalf of the respondents to support the scheme as if it were not based on the wakfs of 1846 and 1868; but plainly it is not the function of the Court to reconstruct for the parties a plan of maintenance allowance out of the wreckage of the scheme they themselves had ingeniously but unsuccessfully devised. Besides, even if such an attempt were made, it could not possibly succeed, as the Court would have to support what was in disguise a scheme of family settlement which had failed because it was based on the illegal wakfs. In our opinion, there is good ground for the contention of the appellant that a scheme for family allowances so framed would itself be contrary to law. They have supported this argument by reference to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Chandi Churn Birua v. Sidheswari Debi (14), where a promise to make a future grant in favour of persons yet unborn was held to be an unenforceable contract. The same view was indicated by the Judicial Committee in Raja Rajeswara Dorai v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (15), which affirmed the decision of the Madras High Court in Rajaraieswara Dorai v. Sundarapandiyaswami Thevar (16). In that case, the scheme for grant of maintenance in perpetuity was upheld, only because the maintenance was charged on the estate, and this accords with the earlier decisions of the Judicial Committee in Narayana Ananga Garu v. Madhawa Deo Garu (17) and Mahomed Hossain Khan v. Mahamed Nehaluddin Khan (18). In the case before us, however, the allowance payable to each member is not charged upon the estate; indeed, it could not be so charged, as the founders had made a permanent dedication of their properties for what, in their judgment, constituted purposes religious, pious or charitable. Whenever a wakf is created, the ownership of the appropriator in the thing dedicated is extinguished and there is a detention of the thing in the implied ownership of God in such a manner that its profits may revert to or be applied for the benefit of mankind. Consequently, it would be wrong to assume that the persons who created these wakfs, in the belief that the dedications were lawful, could ever have intended that a charge should be created on the dedicated estate for a purpose which was not religious, pious or charitable. We cannot hold accordingly that the eleventh paragraph of the memorandum of the 26th August 1881 created heritable interest ; on the other hand, it merely made provision for the grant of money allowances from generation to generation, the amount whereof could be varied by what was called the family Panchayet, and this appears to have been the view adoped by Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J., in Khaja Abdul Ahed v. Rajanikanta Chaudhri (A. O O. No. 298 of 1891, decided on the 28th August 1892 unreported). But the creation of a succession of such allowances from generation to generation in favour of unborn persons, apart from a scheme of valid wakfs, does not appear to be recognised by Muhammadan Law [Amtul Nissa Begam v. Mir Nurudin Hussein Khan (19), Moosbhai v. Yacoobbhai (20), Jainabai v. Sethna (21), Mahomed Ibrahim v. Abdul Latif (22), Mahomed Shah v. Official Trustee of Bengal (23), Humeeda v. Budlin (24), Nizam ud din v. Abdul Gafur (25), Tavakalbhai Sultanbhai v. Imtiyajbegum Mirbaresaheb (26) Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (27)]. It follows that in 1881 the parties intended to make such arrangements alone as would be consistent with the theory of the existence of valid wakfs created in 1846 and 1868. The framers of the scheme could not have contemplated the creation of permanent charges on what they deemed to be endowed properties, and the respondents have been driven to take up that position, only by reason of the inextricable difficulty in which they have been placed by reason of the illusory nature of the wakfs themselves. In our opinion there is no escape possible from the position that as the wakfs have failed, the entire scheme for grant of maintenance allowances by the mutwalli from the income of wakf properties has been completely demolished.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 2nd April 1917, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 11th December 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage effected by the plaintiffs in favour of Mathura Prasad on the 18th August 1914. The deed of mortgage provided that redemption shall take place after 99 years in the month of Jeth in the fallow season on payment of double the amount of the principal money secured by the mortgage irrespective of the profits realizable from the mortgaged property. The explanation for the covenant, entered in the deed, was that the profits of the mortgaged property were small.

The Courts below found that the covenant, by which the redemption of the mortgage was postponed for 99 years and the mortgagors were required to pay double the amount of the principal money, operated as an unreasonable clog on the equity of redemption and could not be enforced. A suggestion was made on behalf of the plaintiffs that the covenant had been obtained by undue influence, but the finding of the Courts below was that no exercise of undue influence was established. The only question for consideration in this appeal is whether the covenant, postponing redemption for 99 years and requiring the mortgagors to pay double the amount of the principal money, can be treated as valid and enforceable.

A covenant postponing the redemption of a mortgage till the lapse of a certain period is not by itself illegal, but where along with other circumstances its effect is to create an unreasonable and oppressive fetter on the right to redeem, a Court may, as pointed out in Durga Singh v. Muhammad Raza Husain Khan (1), allow redemption irrespective of that term on such conditions as it may deem fit to impose. The Courts below have not determined what the profits from the mortgaged property were. Surajbali, the Patwari of the village in which the property mortgaged is situated, states that the profits of the property do not exceed Rs. 90 per year. That being so, the importance of the covenant, requiring the mortgagors to pay double the amount of the principal money on redemption after 99 years, can easily be understood. The mortgagee cannot, however, be allowed to enforce the condition postponing redemption for 99 years with the covenant requiring the mortgagors to pay double the amount of the principal money, because the two covenants taken together may fetter the hands of the mortgagors to such an extent as to render redemption practically very difficult. The value of the mortgaged property may not amount to as much as double the amount of the principal money: and if redemption is postponed for that period, the mortgagors may not find it beneficial to redeem the mortgage at all. These covenants practically clog the equity of redemption and they cannot, therefore, be enforced except in so far as they allow the mortgagee reasonable interest to make up the deficiency in the profits. In Miran Bakhsh v. Bajrang Bahadur Singh (2) a covenant to pay half as much more as the amount of the principal sum secured by the mortgage was held to be valid. But in that case there was no covenant postponing redemption for an unduly long period. While the mortgagors can avoid these covenants, so far as they unreasonably fetter their right to redeem, the mortgagee cannot be deprived of the extra interest, which the deed of mortgage secured to him, in recognition of the deficiency in the profits. The deficit interest which the mortgagee was to receive for a period of 99 years was fixed at Rs. 2,200, or exactly double the amount of the principal money advanced. The mortgagee ought to get so much out of the same as would represent the deficiency for the period extending from the date of the mortgage to the date of redemption.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs decreed subject to the payment of Rs. 2,029-10-8 with such additional interest thereon as the defendants may be found entitled to from the date of the mortgage to the date of redemption calculating as if Rs. 2,029-10-8 had been stipulated to be made payable on account of interest for 99 years in addition to the profits. A decree will be framed in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Six months' time will be allowed for payment. In case of non payment the mortgagee will be allowed a decree for sale. The defendants-appellants will get their costs in the Court of first instance; but in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court the parties will bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff's suit was unsustainable. The possession of the defendant must be treated as the possession of the Tarwad. If the Kanom is not binding on the Tarwad, the only remedy open to a junior member is to obtain a declaration to that effect. As a declaratory suit was barred, the plaintiff has adopted this device of suing for possession. See Padammah v. Themana Ammah (1) and Parakandyilparkun Kishakkayil v. Kilath Puthiya Purayil Ahmad (2).

An Anandravan who himself gets a Kanom and attornment from tenants stands in a different position from that of a stranger.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent.—The action has been rightly conceived. The alienation has been found to be not binding on the Tarwad, and the defendant alienee has been receiving rents from tenants. An Anandravan has certainly the right to secure possession on behalf of the Tarwad. Receipt of rent is possession. It is not necessary that a plaintiff should ask for physical possession to sustain an action for possession. The provision of Order XXI, rule 36, Civil Procedure Code, also supports this view.

The position of an Anandravan getting a Kanom is in no way different from that of a stranger. The only question is whether the alienation has injuriously affected the Tarwad and whether the Tarwad has been ousted.

The cases cited for appellant do not apply. In them there was no parting of possession.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a junior member of a Tarwad who obtained permission to conduct the suit on behalf of all its members for possession of certain Tarwad properties. The predecessor of the present Karnavan, the 1st defendant, gave a Kanom in 1904 to the 2nd defendant under Exhibit X. Thereupon the tenants of the Tarwad attorned to the 2nd defendant and paid him rent. It was found by both the lower Courts that there was no consideration for the Kanom and that it is not binding on the Tarwad. The only ground urged by Mr. Menon in second appeal is that the possession of the defendant, if any, must be deemed to be possession of the Tarwad and that the only remedy open to an Anandravan under the circumstances is to sue for a declaration. He also contended that this is a subterfuge to evade the law of limitation as a suit for declaration would have been barred. Strong reliance was placed upon Padammah v. Themana Ammah (1) for this contention. There can be no doubt that, on the facts found by the lower Courts and accepted in second appeal by the High Court, that judgment was right. It was found in that case that the Karnavathi, although she executed certain deeds in favour of her daughters, did not part with possession of the alienated properties. There was no finding that the tenants paid any rent to the transferees. In these circumstances it was held that an Anandravan can secure the rights of the Tarwad by suing for a declaration without any consequential relief as to possession There are no doubt observations in that judgment about "unity of possession" and about the possession of the tenant being the possession of the Tarwad, etc. But they must be read with the facts of the case and do not support the contention that under no circumstances can a junior member of a Tarwad sue for possession if the Tarwad had parted with possession. The next case, Parakandyilparkun Kishakkayil v. Kilath Puthiya Purayil Ahmad (2), is clearly distinguishable from the present case. In that case what stood between the Tarwad and the 3rd defendant, the alienee, was a piece of paper under which no possession passed. The learned Judges must be taken to have held that this impediment in the way of the Tarwad, which might at any time endanger its rights, might best be removed by obtaining a declaration that the document was invalid. Neither of the two decisions quoted by the learned Counsel is authority for the broad proposition that a rightful owner can never sue for possession unless he wants physical possession. The acceptance of such a contention would mean that, in cases where tenants are actually in possession, rival claimants cannot seek to recover possession unless all the tenants are impleaded as defendants. Rule 36 of Order XXI, Code of Civil Procedure, to which Mr. Madavan Nair drew our attention, negatives this proposition. It has been held in Rathnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramasami Aiyar (3) that a receipt of rent by a trustee is possession which can be recovered in a suit. In Jagannatha Charry v. Rama Rayer (4) it was held that where tenants are actually on the land and the defendant collected rent from them, it was a matter to which the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act relating to possession applied. These decisions support the view taken by the Courts below that a suit like the present one is maintainable. Mr. Menon suggested that the position of an Anandravan who obtains a Kanom and gets attornment is different from that of a stranger. The character in which an alienee Anandravan holds possession will depend upon how far he ousts the Tarwad, and not upon whether he is a member of it or not. If the Tarwad is ousted then the possession of the ouster, whether he be a member of it or not, is as injurious to the Tarwad as ouster by a stranger and the member in possession must be sued as if he was a stranger. The principle is not inconsistent with the observations in Padammah v. Themana Ammah (1).

For these reasons the second appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of the office of Mutwalli and, as ancilliary thereto, for possession and control of the properties covered by a Wakf. The Wakf in question was executed on the 8th May 1846, and it is alleged by the plaintiffs that the last Mutwalli, Nawab Sir Salimullah of Dacca, died on the 16th January 1915. They pray for reliefs in the alternative as follows: first, that the first plaintiff may be declared to be the Mutwalli appointed in accordance with the long-established custom and usage of the family and in conformity with the provisions of the deed of Wakf; secondly, if the Court should come to the conclusion that the first plaintiff has not been validly appointed Mutwalli, the Court may issue orders for the nomination and election of the Mutwalli by the members of the family and thereafter to appoint the person so nominated. The defendant denied the claim and alleged that he had been duly nominated and appointed Mutwalli by his father. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit. He has found that Nawab Sir Salimullah appointed the defendant as his successor on the 8th January 1915, and the appointment was confirmed by him five days later. The Subordinate Judge has further held that this appointment was valid and operative and that the alleged election of the first plaintiff had no legal effect. On the present appeal, the plaintiffs have sought to impeach the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge upon all material points, but in view of the course we propose to adopt, we have not thought it necessary to hear them on the merits.

The deed of Wakf is, on the face of it, invalid and inoperative in law. The gift to charity was illusory, and the chief, if not the sole, object of the Wakf was to create a settlement in perpetuity for the aggrandisement of the family. The test to be applied in cases of this character is, whether there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other; the deed is a valid Wakf if its effect is to give the property in substance to charitable uses; it is not so, if the effect is to give the property in substance to the testator's family: Mahomed Ahsanulla v. Amarchand Kundu (1), Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhury (2), Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (3), Muhammad Munawar Ali v. Razia Bibi (4) and Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vara Lewai Marakayar (5). This very document was under consideration in the case of Habibullah v. Soleman Quader (6), and the Court then came to the conclusion that as the gift to charity was illusory, there was no valid Wakf. We invited, however, the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs-appellants to address the Court on the question of the legality of the Wakf irrespective of the decision of this Court in the case last mentioned. But he conceded that in view of the long series of decisions of the Judicial Committee, any attempt to support the validity of the Wakf would be futile. He did not also dispute that the Musalman Wakf Validating Act of 1913 was not retrospective in operation and could not validate the Wakf which was invalid in its inception. He argued, however, that as in the Court below the parties had proceeded on the assumed basis that the Wakf was good and valid, this Court was not competent to determine whether this assumption was or was not well founded. He contended in substance that although we must examine the provisions of the instrument in order to determine the rights of the parties, yet we must not form an opinion as to its legality, even though on the very face of the document it was apparent beyond controversy that the object of the Wakf was a perpetual family settlement with an ultimate illusory gift to the poor We are clearly of opinion that this contention cannot possibly prevail.

It is well settled that if the illegality of a transaction is brought to the notice of the Court, the Court will not assist the person who invokes its aid, even though the defendant has not pleaded the illegality and does not wish to raise that objection. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Connolly v. Consumers

Cordage Co (7), where Lord Halsbury observed as follows: "Their Lordships entertain no doubt that it is the right and duty of the Court, at any stage of the cause, to consider, and, if it is sufficiently proved, to act upon, an illegality which may turn out to be fatal to the claim of either of the parties to the litigation." The Lord Chancellor added that "their Lordships did not doubt that the learned Judges who tried the case in the Court below had a right and that it was their duty, if they thought that the facts were established, to take care that the process of the Court should not be used for the purpose of establishing a claim that ought not to be permitted to be enforced in a Court of justice." In that case, however, as the Supreme Court of Canada had assumed the existence of an illegal conspiracy which had not been made the subject of investigation by the trial Court [Consumers Cordage Co. v. Connolly (8) per Girouard, J.], the Judicial Committee remanded the suit for a new trial, on the ground that a new point in appeal should not be allowed to be taken, if evidence could have been brought to affect it, had it been taken at the trial. The principle thus enunciated by the Judicial Committee has been repeatedly applied. Thus, in Scott v. Brown (9), a company promoter came into Court to enforce against his confederate a contract for purchase of shares at a fictitious premium. The contract was not sham, but it was part of a scheme, much favoured by company promoters, for deluding the public into thinking that there is a bona fide market for the shares. The plaintiff had to disclose the *turpis causa, with the result that the Court of Appeal "drove him from the judgment seat." Lindley, L. J., observed with epigramatic severity, "I am quite aware it is very common, so is pocket picking," and rested his decision on the ground that no Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to its notice and if the person invoking its aid is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded illegality or whether he has not; if the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality, the Court ought not to assist him. To the same effect are the decisions in Gedge v. Royal Exchange Assurance Association (10), Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation v. Sjoforsakrons Aktiebolaget Vega (11), Thomas v. Dey (12) and Luckett v. Wood (13). A similar view has been adopted in the Courts of the United States; thus in Fabacher v. Bryant (14), Miller, J., ruled that the Court, in aid of public policy and the law, will notice, irrespective of the pleadings, that the controversy submitted for adjudication grows out of illegal purposes or combinations, and when that illegality is manifested by the record, it is obligatory on the Court to dismiss the suit. If a contrary view were adopted as to the duty of the Court, the Court would have to assist a highwayman who might have the audacity to file a bill in equity for an account against his partner: Everett v. Williams (15); for the legend mentioned by Lord Kenyon, in Ridler v Moore (16), by Bacon, V. C., in Ashhurst v. Mason (17) and by Jessel, M. R., in Sykes v. Beadon (18) has turned out to be by no means apocryphal: See Note by Evans on Pothier on Obligations, Volume II, page 3.

We are of opinion that the Court is in no way bound by the assumption made by the parties as to the legality of the Wakf in question and cannot be invited by either of them to adjudicate upon their claim in relation thereto. Wakfs of this character have been pronounced invalid by the highest judicial tribunal in the empire as contrary to public policy, and this Court cannot with propriety declare, on the invitation of Where in a village there is a private partition in force, according to which each co-sharer collects profits to the extent of his share, and the parties have been paying their revenue separately, there can, as between the co-sharers, be no liability for profits, so long as this arrangement remains in force.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 1st August 1918, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, Gonda, dated the 8th April 1918.

Babu Eisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit for profits for the years 1322—1324 Fasli. The Assistant Collector found, and the finding is amply supported by the evidence on the record, that there is a private partition in force in the village according to which each co-sharer collects to the extent of his own share. It appears also from the remand findings that the parties have been paying their revenue separately. The plaintiff's own witness admits that he collected up till the years in suit. As long as this arrangement remains in force, there can be no liability to profits. The learned District Judge disregarded it and remanded the case for a finding as to the actual amount collected by each co-sharer. The case in Jokhu Singh v. Ran Autar Singh (1) relied on by the respondent is clearly distinguishable. In my opinion the decree of the Assistant Collector was correct and I allow the appeal with costs and restore that decree.

As regards Nageshwar Prasad, objection is taken that he should not have been joined in the appeal. As all the co-sharers were concerned in the account, I am not prepared to hold this. Nageshwar Prasad will bear his own costs but will not be liable for costs of the appellant.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are simple. Rajaram, defendant No. 2, who is the father of the three plaintiffs, mortgaged for Rs. 4,500 the joint ancestral property in suit to defendant No. 1 on the 26th April 1909. Civil Suit No. 169 of 1912 was instituted on the basis of this mortgage, but the plaintiffs were not made parties to it. The case was contested by defendant No. 2, but a preliminary sale decree was passed on the 11th March 1914 and a final decree on the 10th February 1915. A sale in pursuance of these decrees took place on the 31st August 1917, that is, a few months after the institution of the present suit.

One Vithal Sadashiv Karkare alias Bandunana obtained a decree against defendant No. 2 in Suit No. 191 of 1903. The execution of the decree was transferred to the Collector, who on the 8th October 1907 leased out the fields now in dispute, with the exception of Survey No. 424, to the judgment debtor, that is, defendant No. 2, for a period of twelve years from 1907 to 1919. The lease provided for payment of annual instalments, but in default of any single instalment the lease was to be void and the Collector was at liberty to resume possession and execute the decree in such manner as he thought fit.

The reliefs asked for in the present suit are: —

(1) a declaration that the mortgage deed dated the 26th April 1909 and the decree based upon it in Suit No. 169 of 1912 are both inoperative, as the mortgage was executed when the property was under the management of the Collector; or in the alternative

(2) that the decree does not bind the shares of the plaintiffs, as the debt was not incurred for the benefit of the family.

The suit was dismissed by the lower Court and the appeal has been filed by the plaintiffs.

It is now settled law that a transfer made in contravention of section 325 A of the Civil Procedure Code of 1832, which corresponds to paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the present Code, is void and of no legal effect whatever, as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gaurishankar Balmukund v. Chinnamiya (1). It is admitted that the mortgage took place whilst the property was under the management of the Collector. Therefore, the mortgage was bad, except as to Field No. 434 which was not under the Collector's management at any time. The judgment debtor, however, was a lessee for twelve years. Rajaram as judgment-debtor was incompetent to mortgage the fields, but this disability did not extend to him in his capacity as lessee under the Collector. The lease has not been translated, and we do not know whether it provided for re-entry on the part of the Collector in the case of a transfer. Even if there is such a stipulation in the lease, it would not affect the power of defendant No. 2 to make a transfer binding him for the term of the lease, though it might be voidable at the instance of the lessor.

The main question for consideration, however, is the effect of the decree in Suit No. 169 of 1912. The Law of Mitakshara as interpreted in this Court regarding the power of a co-parcener to alienate his own share follows the rulings of the High Courts of Bombay and Madras. It has, therefore, not been contested before us that whatever may be the result of this litigation, the share of the father would pass to the auction-purchaser.

It is urged that as the plaintiffs were not parties to the former suit, they are not bound by the decree and can question the mortgage both as regards its validity and as regards its binding character so far as the plaintiffs' shares are concerned. It is, however, admitted that the father was the manager of the joint family consisting of himself and his three sons. The mortgage was of the entire family property and the suit was brought to enforce that mortgage not merely against the share of defendant No. 2 but against the whole family property. The suit was, therefore, brought against the father in his representative character. In such a case, as held in Gore v. Kashiram (2), the father represents the entire joint family and the sons cannot re-open the decree against the father, except on grounds personal to themselves, e.g., that the debt for which the mortgage was given was not binding on them under Hindu Law. It is correctly pointed out on behalf of the appellants that in the case just cited the sons were seeking to redeem a mortgage already foreclosed in a suit against the father. In the present case they seek to impeach the validity of the mortgage as also its binding character so far as their shares are concerned. To the extent that the father represented the family the decree is binding on the sons. In Suit No. 169 of 1912 defendant No. 2 had set up a plea of repayment. This was expressly decided against him. It would not have been open to the present plaintiffs to re-agitate the same question. Similarly in regard to a plea that was open to the father equally with the sons, that is, a plea available to the joint family, whether expressly or constructively decided, the decision is binding on the sons. It was open to the father to have pleaded that he was incompetent to make the mortgage in view of the provisions of paragraph 11 of Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code. Explanation 4 of section 11 bars the trial of that issue between the parties to the previous suit and their privies. The plaintiffs were represented by the father so far as this plea is concerned, and they cannot now be allowed to raise it.

The lower Court, however, is wrong in holding that the plaintiffs cannot question the binding character of the mortgage on their share. This is based upon a misreading of the case of Gore v. Kashiram (2). In Nanomi Babuasin v Mothun Mohun (3) Lord Hobhouse says:

"All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own. Assuming they have such a right, it will avail them nothing unless they can prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale."

We accept the appellants' contention that they are entitled to have the question tried as to whether the mortgage executed by the father was binding upon the sons.

On the evidence we have come to the conclusion that the mortgage was one binding on the entire family property and was justified by Hindu Law. There was a default in payment of the instalments due under the lease. This would have in all probability led to a sale of the fields by the Collector. Defendant No. 2 has been examined as witness in the case. Although he is trying to assist his sons, as would appear from an endorsement made by him on the summons, he is obliged to admit that he had to pay Vithal Sadashev, who had a decree against him for Rs. 4,500 (four thousand five hundred), and that he represented to defendant No. 1 that Rs. 4,000 (four thousand) was required to pay the decree-holder to get his property released. The mortgagee Asaram has also gone into the witness-box and he swears to these facts. He adds that the remaining sum of Rs. 500 (five hundred) was required by Rajaram for paying the Government assessment, and that after the payment it was treated as a khata debt.

The appellants, however, rely upon Exhibits P-3 and P-4 to impeach the testimony of Asaram. These are certified copies of depositions of Asaram. P-3 was his deposition in Suit No. 169 of 1912. No issue was raised in that suit regarding legal necessity. In cross-examination he says: "Why defendant borrowed Rs. 4,500 (four thousand five hundred) I cannot say. I do not know Bandunana." Bandunana is the alias of Sadasheo Karkare. The mortgagee might not have known why defendant borrowed Rs. 4,500, but he knew the representation that was made to him when the loan was asked. In point of fact the money was not eventually paid to Karkare. The deponent may not have known Karkare by the name of Bandunana. Exhibit P-5 is a copy of a deposition of Asaram in a criminal case under sections 467, 471 and 193 against Rajaram arising out of a receipt filed in Civil Suit No. 169 of 1912. Here the witness is recorded in the certified copy as having said that he did not know Vithal Sadasheo Karkun not Karkare. The discrepancy is capable of an explanation. When we have the testimony of the plaintiffs' father to corroborate the present deposition of Asaram, we feel justified in coming to the conclusion that the present testimony may be accepted as true. There are other witnesses who corroborate the story. The evidence regarding Rs. 500, (five hundred) is somewhat meagre, but on the whole we think Asaram's statement may be accepted as true. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the father was justified in mortgaging the family property, inasmuch as there was legal necessity for the loan. The plaintiffs, we note, do not question the decree obtained by Karkare as constituting an antecedent debt of the father untainted by illegality or immorality. These are all the points argued before us.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 804 OF 1918.

May 23, 1919.

Present:—Justice Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri, KT., and Mr. Justice Cuming.

DAKSHAYANI DASSI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

AMRITA LAL GHOSE SARKAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Bequest of life-estate with remainder over, validity of—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), applicability of—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 100, 101, applicability of, to Will made before Act.

Section 100 of the Succession Act has no application to a Will made before the Hindu Wills Act came into operation, nor can section 101 of the Succession Act be invoked for the construction of Hindu Wills made before that section came into operation. By reason of the saving clause in the Hindu Wills Act, neither of the foregoing sections, though embodied in that Act, has any application to Hindu Wills. [p. 781, col. 2; p. 782, col. 1.]

A Hindu testator made a disposition of his properties in the following manner:—

(a) to his wife during her lifetime;

(b) on the death of his wife, to his daughter or daughters then living, during her or their lifetimes;

(c) on the death of his daughters, to his grandson or grandsons then living, during his or their lifetimes;

(d) on the death of his grandsons, to his younger brother and nephew, or on their death to their descendants in succession.

In the case of (a), (b) and (c the succession was not to be by right of inheritance, and in each case the properties were to be kept intact. The plaintiff, the widow of a grandson of the testator, brought the present suit, contending that the gift over to the brother and nephew of the testator was bad and inoperative, and that after the death of the testator's daughters, the estate vested absolutely in her husband and she was entitled to it as a Hindu widow:

Held, (1) that the bequest was not affected by the rule of remoteness and did not offend against the rule against perpetuities; [p. 782, col. 1.]

(2) that the husband of the plaintiff, who was in existence at the time the Will was made, though not specifically named therein, took only a life-estate under the Will; and that the remainder rightly vested in the brother and nephew of the testator. [p. 782, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated the 29th January 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Hooghly, dated the 26th June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dawarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Monindra Nath Banerji), for the Plaintiff-Appellant.—The whole case turns upon the construction and legal effect of a certain Will of one Nobokrishna Ghosh. The plaintiff is the widow of Nibaran Chandra Sur, who was the son of Kurani—the widowed daughter of the testator. Kurani died in 1304 and Bhuban Mohini, the second daughter of the testator, died childless in 1305. Clause 4 of the Will, which purports to be a gift over to the brother and nephew of the testator after the death of his grandsons, is bad in law and so inoperative. I submit that after the death of the two daughters of the testator, the estate vested absolutely in the plaintiff's husband and she is entitled to it as a Hindu widow. Clause 4 is bad for remoteness. The learned Judge has misconstrued clause 3 by saying that the bequest to testator's grandsons was not wholly void but was operative so far as Nibaran—plaintiff's husband—was concerned. Nibaran took an absolute estate. Moreover, section 100 of the Succession Act militates against the provision of bequests in favour of the testator's grandson or grandsons. By gift over the vesting of the estate is postponed beyond a life and the attainment of majority by a possible minor. The bequest offends against the rule of perpetuities. Refers to Sivasankara Pillai v. Soobramania Pillai (1) and Khimji v. Morarji (2), Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (3).

Babu Shib Chandra Palit, for the Defendant-Respondent.—The lower Appellate Court was quite right in its construction of clause 3 of the Will. The primary intention of the testator must be looked to. It does not at all matter that Nibaran has not been specifically mentioned. The testator clearly meant him as he was in existence at the time the Will was made. Refers to Rai Bishen Chand v. Amaida Koer (4), Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (5), Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (6). As the Will was made before the Hindu Wills Act was enforced, so the argument as regards section 100 of the Succession Act does not apply. There is nothing in the Will which can be attacked on the ground of remoteness or offending against the law of perpetuities, as the intention of the testator is clear. Refers to Bhagabati Barmanya v Kali Charan Singh (7), Advocate-General v. Karmali Rahimbhai (8). The secondary intention of the testator was that Nibaran, who was alive at the time of the Will and the death of the testator, was to take and all that he took was only a life-estate under the Will.

Dr. Mitter replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to the construction of the Will in suit. The testator Nobokrishna Ghose died in Aghran 1268. At the date of the Will and of the testator's death his family consisted of his wife, Sreemati Dasimoni Dasi, and two daughters, Kurani, a widow, and Bhuban Mohini Dasi, a married woman whose husband was then living. Kurani had a son of the name of Nibaran Chandra Sur then living, the husband of the plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arises. There were also living at that time the testator's younger brother Ramratan Ghose and his nephew Harish Chandra Ghosh, son of a predeceased brother Iswar Chandra Ghose. The Will recites that the testator was in joint possession of his landed and ancestral properties with his co-sharers, referring to his brother and nephew. The following are material portions of the Will:

"I have my wife Sreemati Dasimoni Dasi and my two daughters, of whom the first, Kurani Dasi, is a widow and has a son named Nibaran Chandra Sur living, and the second, Bhuban Mohini Dasi, has her husband living, and is likely to have sons born to her. Now, while in full possession of my senses, I make the following disposition of my properties.

1. After my death my wife Sreemati Dasimoni Dasi shall possess my properties, but not by right of inheritance. She shall enjoy the properties during her lifetime, keeping them as they are.

2. After the death of my wife my daughter or daughters whoever among them may be alive, whether with or without sons, shall possess my properties, but not by right of inheritance. She or they shall enjoy the properties during her or their lifetime, keeping them intact.

3. After the death of my daughters my grandson or grandsons, whoever among them may be alive, shall possess my properties, but not by right of inheritance. He or they shall enjoy the properties during his or their lifetime, keeping them intact.

4. After the death of my grandsons all my properties will go to my father's family, that is to say, my younger brother Ram Ratan Ghose and my nephew Harish Chandra Ghose, son of the deceased brother Iswar Chandra Ghose or, on their death, their descendants shall succeed to my properties and the same shall be enjoyed by them and their descendants in succession."

The plaintiff is the widow of Nibaran Chandra Sur who died in 1312 B S. Kurani died in 1304 and Bhuban Mohini in 1305, childless. The plaintiff contends that the gift over to the brother and nephew in clause 4 is bad and inoperative and, therefore, after the death of the testator's daughters the estate vested absolutely in her husband Nibaran Chandra Ghose, and she is now entitled to it as a Hindu widow. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the bequest to the testator's "grandson or grandsons" in clause 3 was not wholly void as a bequest to a class, but was operative so far as Nibaran was concerned having regard to the Privy Council decisions in Rai Bishen Chand v. Amaida Koer (4) and Bhagabati Karmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (5) and the decisions of the High Court in Ram Lal Sett v. Kanai Lal Sett (9) and Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (6), inasmuch as the primary intention of the testator was that his daughter's son who was in existence and such other daughter's son who might be born afterwards should take equally, and that his secondary intention was that the grandson, namely the plaintiff's husband, who was then in existence and, therefore, capable of taking, should take. It has been argued that the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in so construing clause 3. No doubt in that clause Nibaran has not been specifically named, but there is no doubt whatsoever that by the expression "my grandson or grandsons" he was referring to his grandson Nibaran who was in existence at the time the Will was made. The testator referred to "grandsons" as he contemplated the possibility of sons being born to Bouban Mohini. We do not think there can be any doubt whatever, upon the authorities referred to, that Nibaran Chandra Sur took a life-estate under the Will.

It is next argued that the bequest in favour of the testator's grandson or grandsons is void in view of section 100 of the Succession Act. The Subordinate Judge rightly held that as the Will in question was made before the Hindu Wills Act came into operation that section had no application. It appears to have been argued before the learned Subordinate Judge that the gift over in this case was bad having regard to section 101 of the Succession Act, and it is now argued that the gift over in clause 4 is not operative as it is said to be too remote and offends against the rule of perpetuities. It is argued that the gift over, having regard to clause 3 which speaks of a gift to grandson or grandsons then unborn, may delay the vesting of the estate beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease and the minority of some persons who may be in existence at the expiration of that period. This argument overlooks what the section requires. It says: "No bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority of some persons who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong." Here the thing bequeathed was to take immediate effect after the death of the daughters and Nibaran and other grandsons, if any, were to take at the same time. No vesting is postponed beyond a life and the attainment of majority of a possible minor. Section 101 by itself does not apply to this Will, as it was made before the Hindu Wills Act. But it has been argued that the rule of perpetuities is operative as a matter of public policy even in respect of Wills made before the enactment. That may be so, but section 101 lays down a special rule and it differs from the English law on the subject. There is no reason why it should be invoked for the construction of Hindu Wills made before that section came into operation.

(9) 12 C. 663; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 450.

It was held in Ram Lall Sett v. Kanai Lall Sett (9) by Wilson, J., that it was settled law having regard to the decision in Alangamoniori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (10) that by reason of the saving clause in the Hindu Wills Act neither section 100 nor section 101 of the Succession Act, though embodied in the Hindu Wills Act, had any application to Hindu Wills.

In Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (7) all these cases and Leake v. Robinson (11) were elaborately discussed. In that case the primary intention of the testator was, as found by the learned Judges, that all his nephews then born and those who may be born afterwards should take equally but those that had then been born were the immediate objects of his affection and bounty, and the idea must have occurred to the testator that if any other nephews were not born those who were then in existence, though not specifically named, should take the whole of the estate. They followed Ooleman, In re (12) and the Advocate-General v. Karmali Rahimbhai (8). The observations made in that case apply to the case before us.

We are of opinion that the bequest in this case is not affected by the rule of remoteness as applied in England and it does not offend against the law as to perpetuities. The secondary intention of the testator was that Nibaran, who was alive at the time of the Will and the death of the testator, was to take and all that he took under the Will was a life-estate and the remainder has rightly vested in the defendants. The Privy Council has upheld and approved the general rule of construction which was held applicable to Hindu Wills in Ram Lal Sett v. Kanai Lall Sett (9), and it has also affirmed the decision of the High Court in Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (7). They said that the principle enunciated in Leake v. Robinson (11) was sought to be introduced in India owing to a mistaken analogy and approved of the observations made in Ram Lal Sett v. Kanai Lall Sett (9). In this connection Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (6) may also be referred to. Sivasankara Pillai v. Soobramania Pillai (1) has no application to this case. There was no gift to a grandson in that case. The testator there empowered the executor to divide his property into five shares as he had five sons and to deliver the shares to the grandsons in the case of sons with male issue, and in the case of sons without male issue to the sons themselves when the grandsons may attain their age. In that case the learned Judges held that section 101 was applicable, inasmuch as the distribution in that case was to take place only after all the sons who might be born to the sons of the testator had attained their majority.

In Khimji v. Morarji (2) the learned Judge deduced the following propositions from Ram Lall Sett v. Kanai Lall Sett (9) and other similar cases that "it is the primary duty of the Court so to construe a Will as to carry out, as far as possible, the intentions of the testator, and that if the Court comes to the conclusion that the testator had the primary intention of benefiting all the members of a class and if such intention fails by reason of its being void, yet if the Court could deduce a secondary intention that at least such members of the class should take as were in existence at the time of the testator's death, then effect should be given to such secondary intention". In adopting that test he came to the conclusion that in the case before him the testator intended to benefit all the members of certain classes and that he had no intention of benefiting any particular members of any of the classes in the event of the gift to the classes as a whole failing by reason of the non-existence of some of the members at the time of the testator's death. That case, therefore, has no application here.

INDI v. GHANIA.

Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (3) also has no application. It was there held that the manifest purpose of the deed under construction was to fasten upon the grantor and his successors in the Raj a perpetual duty of giving, in some way or other, the means of maintenance to all the descendants of four persons who were in life at its date. It did not directly impose an obligation of that singular and unprecedented description; but on the failure of the then Raj, at any future time, to maintain these descendants, however numerous, the latter were to have immediate right to four of the donor's villages, which thenceforth were not to "appertain to his kingdom". That is altogether a different case from the present one.

We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in his conclusions and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Guardianship—Minor—Mother, right of —Remarriage, effect of—Welfare of minor—Grandfather, whether can be appointed guardian in presence of mother—Right of mother to effect marriage of her daughter in presence of paternal grandfather.

Under Hindu Law the mother is, after the father, the natural legal guardian of her minor daughter and she does not lose her right by remarriage in any case when such remarriage is recognized as valid by custom. [p 783, col. 2.]

Unless it can be shown that the welfare of a female minor is being neglected by the mother, it is not permissible to appoint the paternal grandfather as guardian of the person of the minor and to allow him to remove the girl from the custody of the mother. [p. 784, col. 1.]

A Hindu mother can effect a valid marriage for her daughter even in the presence of the paternal grandfather. [p. 784, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 4th January 1919, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 3rd August 1918, decreeing the claim.

Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. D. Bhalla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The case will be the clearer by a reference to the genealogy below :—

TEHLA

Sister of Suba	= Ghania, plaintiff	Suba,
Labhu (1)	= Musammat Indi, defendant	= (2)—Ganda defendant.

Musammat Banti, defendant.

The parties are Hindu Jats of the Hoshiarpur District.

The defendant, Musammat Indi, was first married to Labhu by whom she had a daughter, Musammat Banti.

On Labhu's death some thirteen years ago she remarried Ganda, taking her infant daughter with her, and the girl has lived with her mother in Ganda's house for twelve or thirteen years.

A suit has now been brought by the girl's paternal grandfather, Ghania, for a declaration that he has a prior right to Musammat Indi to give Musammat Banti in marriage; he has also applied to be appointed guardian of the person of Musammat Banti and has been successful in both proceedings, whilst Musammat Indi's appeal in the declaratory suit has been dismissed by the learned District Judge.

Musammat Indi has again appealed to this Court both in the suit and in the guardianship proceedings.

The parties are Hindu Jats and the decision should follow their custom if any definite custom can be ascertained, failing which it is permissible to fall back on their personal law.

Now there can be no doubt that under Hindu Law the mother is, after the father, the natural and legal guardian of her minor daughter and she does not lose her right by remarriage in any case where such remarriage is recognised as valid by custom [Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 276; Ram Krishna's Hindu Law, Volume II, pages 406-407, Nur Bibi v.

Mehran (1) and Ganga Prasad v. Ramasrey (2)].

This proposition is supported by much authority and is hardly open to question, whilst among Jats the custom of the remarriage of widows is certainly common and the validity of Musammat Indi's marriage to Ganda has not been denied.

Unless, therefore, it can be shewn that the welfare of the minor is being neglected by her mother, it certainly does not appear to be permissible to appoint the grandfather as guardian of the person of the minor and to allow him to remove the girl from the custody of her mother.

The rule that the mother or a maternal grandmother has the better title to the guardianship of a girl has been followed in many published decisions, e. g., Fatima v. Rani (3), a case from Delhi, and Ambo v. Ganga Sahai (4), a Punjab case, where the maternal grandmother was preferred to the father's father, and Bindo v. Sham Lal (5) where the maternal grandmother was preferred to even the father.

As there does not appear to be any reason to suppose that Musammat Indi is neglecting the welfare of her daughter, it follows that the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge appointing Ghania as guardian of the person of Musammat Banti is not maintainable and must be set aside.

To turn to the question of the right of the grandfather to give the girl in marriage.

In the judgment of the learned District Judge some expressions appear from which it might be inferred that before him the original preferential right of the grandfather to select a husband for the girl was admitted.

Nevertheless the grounds of appeal in the District Court go so far as to deny the grandfather's right and in the grounds preferred to this Court it is not admitted: whilst in argument it is contended that in any case the grandfather has entirely neglected his grand daughter until the time when he thinks that he can derive some personal advantage from her disposal in marriage, that he is not interested in her welfare and has, therefore, forfeited his right, even supposing that any such right ever existed.

The text on which the grandfather's claim might be based is given in Mayne (8th Edition), page 101: "A father shall give his daughter in marriage himself or a brother with the father's consent or a grandfather, maternal uncle or relatives. In default of all these the mother, if she is qualified."

The view has, however, been taken in Madras that the object of placing the male relation before the mother was merely to supply that protection and advice which the Hindu system considered to be necessary on account of the dependant condition of women, which dependence has now practically ceased to be enforced by the law.

In a recent decision the text has been discussed, and the conclusion arrived at that the mother is entitled to so decided a voice in the selection of the bridegroom that she can effect a valid marriage for her daughter even in the presence of the paternal grandfather, and even though it be not shewn that he has neglected his duties [Ranganaikammal v. Ramanuja Aiyangar (6)].

In Bombay the view has been taken that the text refers to the ceremonial duties at the girl's marriage, which are laid upon the paternal relatives as a matter of duty and which are not ordinarily to be performed by a woman.

In the selection of the bridegroom, which is a different matter, the mother must be consulted; and the text inculcates on the paternal relative a duty, but does not confer a right [Bai Ramkore v. Jamnadas Mulchand (7)].

In the Punjab it has been held that the mother alone can effect a valid marriage of her daughter [Maya Devi v. Ram Chand (8)].

and in Bombay that a marriage so performed is not invalidated even by the absence of the father's consent [Mulchand v. Bhudhia (9)].

The authorities quoted above certainly do not lead to the conclusion that the text must be interpreted as conferring a right on the grandfather to dispose of the girl in marriage in opposition to the wishes of the mother and although there is a judgment in the Punjab [Narain Das v. Musammat Gurdevi (10)] to the effect that the mother is not entitled to entirely disregard the wishes of her husband's collaterals, this was a limitation placed on the view expressed by the local commissioner that the mother has full authority.

It is at least difficult to see why a girl should be liable to be taken away from her natural guardian and disposed of by a possibly distant kinsman, and there does not appear to be any judicial authority for this view, at least none has been quoted.

In the absence, therefore, of any great preponderance of evidence proving a custom to the contrary, the conclusion from judicial decisions would appear to be that the mother has a preferential right to select a bridegroom or at least that the grandfather cannot dispose of the girl in opposition to her wishes. From this it would follow that the grandfather is not entitled to the declaration sought and taking this view, I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

NAGAMUTHU NACHIAR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender to reversioner—Maintenance, provision for, as part of transaction of surrender—Reservation of absolute interest in large properties far in excess of maintenance allowable—Validity of surrender.

The provision for the maintenance of a widow is consistent with the validity of a surrender of her husband's estate to the nearest reversioner. [p. 792, col. 2.]

If, however, the provision for maintenance is a cloak or device by the widow to divide the property with the reversioner or to secure large benefits for herself quite out of proportion to the maintenance that is legitimately awardable to her compatibly with her position and status in life, the surrender is invalid. [p. 793, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Original Suit No. 85 of 1914

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 5th and 6th December 1917, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—One of the arguments that have been addressed on behalf of the appellant in support of the deed of surrender, is to the effect that the provisions made therein for Mangaikkarasu Nachiar, including a gift to her in absolute right of one of the villages, were by way of maintenance, and that would not affect the validity of the surrender. Whether this is a sound argument or not would, it is urged, depend mainly on what is the total value and income of the entire properties and what is the income assigned to this lady and whether what she got under the deed of surrender could be said to be a bona fide provision for maintenance, having regard no doubt in this connection to the status of the family and to the practice prevailing in that family with reference to provisions for ladies entitled to maintenance. It is necessary, therefore, to ascertain what was the value and income of the entire estate of Sivagnanasami Thevar at the date of the surrender and of what was reserved to Mangaikkarasu Nachiar. With reference to the village which was given absolutely to Mangaikkarasu Nachiar, there is also the question whether it was intended at the time of the surrender that she was to make a gift of it to charity, and whether in fact that village was granted by the lady to a temple as is alleged on behalf of the respondents.

It has been contended that gifts by a Hindu limited owner, whether a widow or a mother, to charity would be valid if they are of a moderate and reasonable portion of the estate. It ought also to be found whether, if it was contemplated by the parties to the surrender that Mangaikkarasu Nachiar should be given this village to enable her to dedicate it to a temple, and if, in fact, she so dedicated it, the gift was such as would be permitted by the Hindu Law, that is, whether it could legitimately form part of an arrangement by way of surrender.

The Subordinate Judge will submit findings on these points, and the parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence with reference thereto. He will have time for two months from the date of the receipt of the records in his Court for the submission of the findings, and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

We do not mean to express any opinion at this stage on the merits of the appeal.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura submitted the following

FINDINGS.—I have been directed by the High Court to submit findings on the following three issues:—

i. What were the value and income of the entire estate of Sivagnanasami Tevar at the date of the surrender and of what was reserved to Mangaikarasu Nachiyar?

ii. Whether with reference to the village which was given absolutely to Mangaikarasu Nachiyar it was intended at the time of the surrender that she was to make a gift of it to charity and whether in fact that village was granted by the lady to a temple, as is alleged on behalf of the respondents?

iii. Whether, if it was contemplated by the parties to the surrender that Mangaikarasu Nachiyar should be given that village to enable her to dedicate it to a temple and if in fact she so dedicated it, the gift was such as would be permitted by the Hindu Law, that is, whether it could legitimately form part of an arrangement by way of surrender?

2. First issue.—This relates to the value and income of the entire estate of the late Sivagnanaswami Tevar and of the portion of the estate reserved for Mangaikarasu Nachiyar. The whole estate of the late Sivagnanaswami Tevar comprises the properties in Schedules A and B contained in Exhibits A and A1. A Schedule properties were taken by the brothers Pandithorai and Kottaswami Tevar consequent on the surrender by Mangaikarasu Nachiyar in their favour. The properties in B Schedule are those that were reserved to the lady by the two brothers under the surrender. There is no value given for the A Schedule properties in Exhibits A and A1, but for those in B Schedule values are given. The values of the B Schedule properties given in Exhibits A and A1 are objected to as being unduly low and intended to avoid the payment of excessive stamp and registration fees. Exhibits A and A1 are dated 15th November 1891. Exhibit K, the partition deed between the two brothers, dividing between them the properties in Schedule A, is dated 12th October 1892. The value of the said properties given in Exhibit K is Rs. 1,94,000-0-0. This value has not been objected to by either side and it may be taken as correct and as representing the value of the A Schedule properties on the date of the surrender. Plaintiff's second witness has also sworn to the value of the A Schedule properties as given in Exhibit K being correct. But there was a suit, Original Suit No. 35 of 1890 on the file of the East Sub-Court, Madura, pending at the time of the surrender against the whole estate which the brothers, Pandithorai and Kottaswami, were directed under the surrender deed to prosecute and take over to themselves the benefit or loss arising therefrom. The suit itself was for Rs 40,000-0-0 but the final decree in the suit was for Rs. 20,000-0-0. This decree amount of Rs. 20,000-0-0 Pandithorai and Kottaswami were to pay under the surrender deed. So, the A Schedule properties, when taken over by them, must be regarded as burdened with this debt of Rs. 20,000 0-0. In determining, therefore, the actual value of the said properties the burden on them to the extent of Rs. 20,000 0 0 will have to be deducted. Deducting therefore, this Rs. 20,000-0-0 from the value Rs. 1,94,000-0 0 given in Exhibit K, we will get the sum of Rs 1,74,000-0-0 as representing the net value of the A Schedule properties on the date of the surrender deed. Then as regards the value of the B Schedule items, I may note at the outset that the value given in Exhibits A and A1 has been grossly understated, whatever may have been the reason therefor. The B Schedule properties consist of seven items. Almost all these items comprise Dharmasanam villages.

3. The sub-joined tabular statement will show the value of the several items at different periods, the cost price, the value given in the surrender deeds, Exhibits A and A1, the price for which they were sold later on by Panditborai in favour of the several defendants in the suit and the value given for them in the plaint in this suit.

4. The total cost price of the items in Schedule B, excepting the lease right in four Pangus in Ayan portion of Kalaiyoor village, the village of Panikkanendal and the palace reserved for the residence of Mangaikarasu, comes to Rs. 35,000-0-0. The palace is valued at Rs. 2,000-0-0 in Exhibit A, whereas in Exhibit K it is valued at Rs. 5,000 0 0. In 1906 Panikkanendal village was sold for Rs. 3,150-0-0. In the plaint in this suit, filed in 1914, it is valued at Rs. 7,000 0-0, that is, more than double the value in 1906. There is nothing from which the cost price of this village could be determined. When, as stated above, the cost price of the several items in Schedule B which were required between 1860 and 1869, except in regard to item No 5 which was purchased at Court auction in 1876, comes to Rs. 35,000-0-0, the total value of all the B Schedule properties including the palace and the Panikkanendal village and the lease right of Kalaiyoor village as given in Exhibits A and A1, is Rs. 10,250-0-0, that is, less than a third of the cost price itself. From the tabular statement it would be seen that mere nominal values have been given for some of the items. It has been attempted on the plaintiff's side by oral evidence to show that the prices of the B Schedule items given in Exhibits A and A1 were given with reference to the income from the several items without producing any statements or lists of the income of the items alleged to have been prepared at the time of the surrender deed and without any reference whatever to the prior title-deeds in respect of the items. It is not pretended on the plaintiff's side nor by any of the plaintiff's witnesses that the values of these items had gone down since their purchase till the year 1891, the date of the surrender. The values, therefore, given in Exhibits A and A1 regarding the B Schedule properties must be rejected as altogether fictitious and arbitrary. If between 1860 and 1870 the items in B Schedule were worth Rs. 35,000-0-0 (excepting the lease right in four Pangus in Kalaiyoor village and the Panaikkanendal village and the palace), in 1891, about 21 years thereafter, it may safely be taken to have been worth at least double the amount if not more, that is, Rs. 70,000-0 0. Adding the value of the palace given as Rs. 5,000 0 0 in Exhibit K and taking the value of the Panikkanendal village as Rs. 2,000-0-0 and the lease right in the four Pangus in the Ayan Kalaiyoor for 8 years at Rs. 5,000-0-0, (Rs. 639 being the annual income), the total value would come to Rs. 82,000-0-0. At any rate we may say that the value of all the B Schedule items in 1891 was over Rs. 70,000-0-0 and not less than that. This value would appear to be correct when examined in one or two modes. The annual net income of the B Schedule properties as per list filed on the plaintiff's side, calculated on an average of ten years prior to 1890, comes to Rs. 2,139-0-0. According to the plaintiff's third witness the income in the shape of interest from the B Schedule properties cannot go above four annas per cent. per mensem. The capitalised value, therefore, at the rate of four annas per cent. per mensem for a net income of Rs. 2,139-0-0 would be more than Rs. 70,000-0-0. Under the sale-deeds executed by Panditborai in favour of the several defendants in this suit and the sale-deed for Pottithatti village the purchase-money of the several items, excluding the palace and Sembilangudi (item No. 5) and Ayan Kalaiyoor, comes to Rs. 1,25,000-0-0. Even if we deduct Rs. 50,000-0-0 for the rise in price since 1891, we would get a balance of over Rs. 70,000-0 0 as representing the value of the said items in 1891 or thereabout. Farther, the valuation given in the plaint for the B Schedule items, excluding Ayan Kalaiyoor, the palace and Pottithatti village, is Rs. 91,600-0-0. Including their value on the date of the plaint in 1914 (taking Pottithatti to be worth Rs. 60,000-0 0, the palace, Rs. 10,000-0-0 and the Ayan Kalaiyoor, in lieu of which a fixed money allowance was provided for in the surrender deed, to be worth Rs. 6,000-0-0), the total value would come to Rs. 1,67,000-0-0 on the date of the plaint. Even taking that, on the date of the plaint, the properties had doubled in value from what they were in 1891, we would get not less than

Rs. 80,000 0 0 as the value of the properties in 1891. Making every allowance, we may take the value, at any rate, at not less than Rs. 70,000-0 0. The A Schedule properties were worth, as I have already stated, Rs. 1,74,000-0 0. Adding the value of the B Schedule properties, the total value of the estate of Sivagnanaswami Tevar, on the date of the surrender, would be Rs. 2,44,000-0-0. The properties reserved to Mangaikarasu Nachiyar, that is, the B Schedule properties, were worth not less than Rs. 70,000 0-0. The income of the whole estate including both the A Schedule and B Schedule properties in Exhibit A after deduction of public burdens is, according to the list put in by the plaintiff, based on the Jamabandi accounts and Exhibits R and T, is Rs. 16,745-0 0. The income of the B Schedule properties alone is Rs. 2,139-0 0. Deducting the income of the B Schedule properties from the total income for the whole Zamin, the income for the A Schedule properties comes to only Rs. 14,800-0 0. From this an amount representing the income of property worth Rs. 20,000 0 0, which was the decree debt charged on the A Schedule properties, would have to be deducted. In addition to the income of Rs. 2,139-0 0 (which is the average on a calculation of the income of ten years preceding 1890) Mangaikarasu was provided with an allowance of Rs. 250-0-0 per mensem under the surrender deed payable no doubt by the two brothers. Thus then the Nachiyar was provided with an annual income of Rs. 5,139 0-0, while the brothers would each have got only about Rs. 6,000-0 0 for his share out of the income of the A Schedule properties after allotting a share of the income for the decree debt of Rs. 20,000 0-0 which they had to pay. The income of the whole estate, therefore, at the time of the surrender was Rs. 16,980 0 0 less a proportion due on property worth Rs. 20,000 0 0, and that of the B Schedule properties was Rs. 2,139-0 0

5. Second issue.—There is nothing but oral evidence on the side of the plaintiff on the point. The documentary evidence is clearly against him. The evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 8 of some talk between Mangaikarasu and her step-sons, Pandithorai and Kottaswami, or of Mangaikarasu sending word to the step sons requesting them to give the village of Pottithatti absolutely to her for being gifted for a Dharmam or for a temple and of the brothers having expressed their consent to do so, is too good to be believed. The lady and her step sons were admittedly on good terms and are admitted to have talked to each other regarding the surrender. So, there was no necessity for sending any mediaries by her to the step-sons regarding this matter. Plaintiff's first witness has, in his former deposition, admitted that the two brothers Pandithorai and Kottaswami talked directly to the lady Mangaikarasu and settled the arrangement and stated also that the Pottithatti village was given by Nachiyar to Muniyandi. The evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses is more or less interested and I am not prepared to believe it. Their evidence is also opposed to the recitals in Exhibits A and O. (the registration copy of Exhibit VIIt). If it had been originally arranged between the lady and her step-sons that this village of Pottithatti was to be given to her absolutely for the purpose of making a gift thereof to a charity or to a temple, there was nothing to prevent its being so stated in the document, Exhibit A. When in some of the preceding paragraphs in Exhibit A there is mention of Dharmam or charity by stating that the income from the villages has been assigned to her for her maintenance and for the pay of her servants and for expenses on charity (i. e., Dharma Silavu), there is nothing said about any Dharmam or charity in the recital in Exhibit A, which states that the village is given absolutely with full powers of alienation to the lady. The omission is significant and tells against the plaintiff's version. Further the gift deed, Exhibit VIIt, is executed by the lady in favour of Muniyandi within ten days after Exhibit A. That deed does not mention a word about any charity or temple. It recites several reasons for her making a gift of the village to Muniyandi personally and not for any charity or temple. Exhibit VIIt is attested by Pandithorai. If the agreement between the step-sons and the lady was that the village was to be given absolutely to the lady for being gifted to the temple, then, when the document was taken to Pandithorai for his attestation, he should certainly have noticed the contravention or violation of the original intention by the lady and he should certainly have objected to attesting it and should not have attested it at all, but should be expected to have taken steps for getting the gift-deed cancelled. If the story told by some of the plaintiff's witnesses, that the document was taken to Kottaswami also and he objected to attesting and refused to attest it altogether and even went the length of declining to pay his share of the allowance to the lady which she is said to have been forced to recover by legal proceedings, is true certainly it is inexplicable that Kottaswami should have taken no steps whatever for questioning this gift deed and for getting it cancelled. All this clearly points to the fact that the story of the plaintiff's witnesses that the village was intended to be given to any charity or temple is a pure fiction and a myth and cannot be accepted for a moment. The evidence of defence witnesses Nos. 1 and 5, attestor of Exhibit O and writer of Exhibit A1 respectively, to the effect that the intention of Mangaikarasu was only to make a gift of the village to Muniyandi absolutely and not to any temple, is consistent with the recitals in the documents and receives support from them and can, therefore, be relied upon. The recitals in Exhibit P, dated June 1892, (that is, within seven months after the date of Exhibit O), the gift-deed by the late Raja Bhaskara Sethupathi in favour of Muniyandi Servai's Subramaniaswami temple, would show that there had been no prior endowment or gift in favour of the said temple for the daily Pooja, Padittharam, etc., and at the request of Muniyandi to the Raja for a gift of a village for the purpose the Raja makes the gift in favour of the temple and not to Muniyandi, making provisions for the utilisation of the income from the village and for any surplus that might remain after the purpose connected with the temple had been met with. The document would show that Muniyandi himself never intended or recognised the gift in his favour under Exhibit O as a gift in favour of the temple. The attempt on the part of the learned Vakil for the plaintiff at the time of the arguments that Muniyandi had played fraud or imposition upon the lady in getting the gift-deed, Exhibit O, in his own name personally instead of in favour of the temple is a belated one and is a pure makeshift for the occasion with the object of getting rid of the recitals in the document itself There is not a word about any fraud or imposition in the plaint. Plaintiff's witness No. 3, who has written Exhibit O, can give no reason whatever for the omission in Exhibit O of the real object of the gift and of the mention in it of other reasons and motives for the personal gift to Muniyandi. There is no foundation for the plea of imposition or fraud by Muniyandi on the lady Mangaikarasu, for she is admitted to have known to read and write, and one deceased Sellammal, who was the Puranam reader to the lady, has also attested the document. Rejecting then the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses regarding any intention to gift the village for charity or for temple, the recital in Exhibit O that the gift of the village was to Muniyandi personally in consideration of his past services to the donor's family, the undue haste in executing the gift deed within ten days after the date of the surrender as per Exhibits A and A1, the donor being a person able to read and write, and the document having been attested by Panditthorai and by Kandimathinatha Pillai, the lady's agent and manager of the estate, the evidence of the defendants' witnesses Nos. 1 and 5, attestors of Exhibit O, Muniyandi's obtaining the grant of Thuthaikulam village from Raja Bhaskara Sethupathi under Exhibit P about seven months after Exhibit O solely for the Pooja Padittharam, etc, of his Subramaniaswami temple and the recitals therein, these and other facts already adverted to completely negative the plaintiff's version of any intention on the part of the parties to the surrender to make a gift of the village of Pottithatti to any charity or to any temple Much less was the village granted at all to any charity or temple. Exhibit O or rather Exhibit VII-t (the original document) negatives any grant of the village by the lady to the temple. It is an out and-out grant to Muniyandi personally, and it appears from the evidence that he had mortgaged the village which his sons ultimately sold away last year for Rs. 67,000-0-0 under Exhibit VII. Pottithatti is the most important of the villages in B Schedule. Even in Exhibit A a higher value is given to it than for any other village. Muniyandi having been Mangaikarasu's agent for her household, very probably he set his heart upon that village so as to secure it for himself and since the lady got the village assigned to her absolutely under Exhibit A, with undue haste betraying rather his anxiety, he obtains the gift deed, Exhibit VII-t from Mangaikarasu gifting the village to himself personally. The second issue, therefore, I find against the plaintiff and for the defendants.

6. Third issue.—On my finding on the second issue this issue does not arise for consideration and does not call for a finding. Should, however, a finding on the issue be found necessary, I am certainly inclined to find it in the negative. The temple in this case was not one built by Mangaikarasu or by any members of her family. It was built or established by Muniyandi and has been called by the plaintiff's witnesses themselves as Muniyandi's temple. So there was no need or necessity for Mangaikarasu to dedicate or make a gift of the village in its favour. It is in the evidence of the plaintiff's witness No. 2 that Sivagnanasami Tevar, the father-in-law of Mangaikarasu, had built another temple and endowed it out of his own estate. There is also a Subramaniaswami's temple or shrine in that temple and out of the income of the estate the expenses of that temple have been met. So any religious merit or virtue by making any dedication or gift of property to a temple that could be acquired for the family had already been secured and there was, therefore, no necessity for the lady Mangaikarasu to make any gift for the purpose. Further, it was not the case of a gift in favour of the temple founded by her husband that is set up in this case, but a gift in favour of a temple founded or established by a different person altogether, that is by Muniyandi. The estate inherited by her was that of her son. A widow can, if at all, have authority or right to make a pious gift or offering in favour of an idol only for securing spiritual benefit only of her husband and not for any other person. By the gift in the present case she could not have secured any benefit to her deceased son but only for herself, for which she would have no authority in respect of her son's estate. In the case of Ramkawal Singh v. Ram Kishore Das (1) it was held that the gift by the widow to a temple established by her husband's mother was invalid and unsustainable. Much less so in this case the alleged gift in favour of Muniyandi's temple can be held valid or sustainable. Further the gift was only a matter of religious luxury and not a necessity, as observed by me already. The estate of her son when she inherited it was encumbered at the time of the surrender. A suit for Rs. 40,000-0-0 as against the estate was pending. Finally a decree in that suit was passed for Rs. 20,000-0-0 and made payable by Pandithorai and Kottaswami. An allowance of Rs. 250-0-0 (rather an exorbitant and exaggerated one considering the maintenance allowance allotted under Exhibit B3 to Kottaswami's own mother) per mensem payable by Pandithorai and Kottaswami to Mangaikarasu was also charged on the estate. The village of Pottithati was the most important of the Dharmasanam village assigned to her under the surrender arrangement. It must have been worth about Rs. 20,000-0-0 or Rs. 30,000-0-0 at the time of the surrender or the gift deed, that is more than a third and nearly a half of the value of the B Schedule properties assigned to her at the surrender. In these circumstances, therefore, I should hold that the gift, if any, of the village, even if it had been in favour of a temple and was out of all proportion or disproportionate in extent and value, was not such as would be permitted by the Hindu Law and could not form part of an arrangement by way of surrender.

7. I find the issue, therefore, against the plaintiff and for the defendants.

This appeal came on for final hearing on the 23rd of April 1919.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar (Advocate-General), for the Appellant.—The stipulations which enure for the widow's benefit were only adequate provisions for her maintenance. The decisions have laid down that a provision for the maintenance of the widow in her deed of surrender would not invalidate the surrender. It is true that if it is a device to divide the property with the reversioners, the surrender would not be valid. But the position and respectability of the widow has to be considered, and all the benefit she derived under the deed is a provision for her maintenance, which is none too high for her position and rank as a Zemindarini.

(1) 22 C. 506.

Pandithorai, the reversioner, and his representatives are estopped from resisting the title of the plaintiff under the surrender deed, Exhibit A, as they got possession under that document. Having elected to abide by the terms of that document, they are now estopped from questioning it. Pandithorai did not, as a fact, question the operation of the deed in respect of the other properties.

Messrs. K. Sreenivasa Aiyangar and K. Jagannatha Iyer, for the Respondents.—Such a large benefit as was secured for the widow Mangaikarasu, inclusive of an absolute right in a village, cannot be called a provision for maintenance even to a Zemindarini. She gets an income of over Rs. 400 a month besides an absolute right in a village. This is only a device to get a share for herself.

There is no question of estoppel or election arising in this case. Pandithorai did not get possession of the properties under the surrender deed, Exhibit A. He got possession after the death of Mangaikarasu as her reversioner.

JUDGMENT.—The first and the only question we have got to deal with in this appeal is whether the documents Exhibits A and A1 operate as a surrender by one Mangayarkarasi of her widow's estate in favour of the then nearest reversioners to the last male holder Sivagnanasami Thevar, namely, Kottasami Thevar and Pandithorai. Exhibit A is described as a 'release agreement.' It is signed by this lady and was executed on the 15th November 1911: It says: "I have given to you now by means of this deed, for the consideration under-mentioned, for being enjoyed with all rights by you who are fully legally entitled to them during my lifetime and after my death, the following :—those properties which are described in the Schedules A, B, C and D hereunder." Then paragraph 5 of the document states :—"As you have allowed me to utilise the profits of the villages described in Schedule B hereunder after paying the Poruppu, quit-rent, road cess, etc., myself, for my maintenance and for meeting the pay of my servants and for charities, till the end of my life, I shall accordingly enjoy the same." Paragraph 6 says: "As you have agreed to give me an allowance of Rs. 250-0-0 till my lifetime exclusive of the income derived from the villages left to me as mentioned in the above paragraph, I shall accordingly receive the allowance till my death." Paragraph 7 provides for her residence in what is called a small palace at Ramnad, and paragraph 8 recites: "As you have agreed to my enjoyment, with powers of gift, exchange and sale, of the village of Pottithatti comprising wet lands, Virayadi 117 Kalams 6 Marakals and $4\frac{1}{2}$ measures and dry lands 300 Kurkams, out of the villages mentioned in Schedule B, set apart for my maintenance, neither you nor your heirs should object to my alienating the said village whenever I like." Exhibit A1, which is called an agreement bearing the same date, is executed by the two reversioners containing the same terms as Exhibit A. We are not concerned in this appeal with the properties of A, C and D Schedules but only with those of B Schedule; that is, properties which are reserved for Mangayarkarasi.

The question is whether this is a valid surrender within the meaning of the law. The value of the entire estate left by Sivagnanasami, who had been divided from his brothers Kottasami and Pandithorai, is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of rupees. What Mangayarkarasi, the mother of Sivagnanasami who was then in possession of the estate on the death of Sivagnana's widow, reserved to herself under the documents were several villages yielding about Rs. 1,800 a year for her lifetime for her maintenance, also an allowance of Rs. 250 a month payable by the reversioners and a right of residence in a portion of the palace belonging to her son. In addition to this, she kept in her absolute right the village of Pottithatti, which is described by the learned Subordinate Judge as a valuable property worth about 20 to 30 thousand rupees at the date of the documents. These are the main advantages which Mangayarkarasi reserved for herself under Exhibits A and A1. The whole income which she gets would be more than Rs. 400 a month with an absolute right to one of the villages which, according to the learned Judge, would be $\frac{1}{3}$rd in value of the entire B Schedule property.

The learned Advocate General argues that this is a valid surrender and the benefit which the widow gets or reserves for herself is nothing more than what would be a proper maintenance for a lady in her position. The law on the subject has been recently stated by the Privy Council in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2). Their Lordships point out the distinction between a surrender and an alienation. They cite with approval their observations in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (3) on the subject of surrender in these words: "It may be accepted that, according to Hindu Law, the widow can accelerate the estate of the heir by conveying absolutely and destroying her life estate. It was essentially necessary to withdraw her own life estate so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee." Then they say: "It has been suggested that the expressions in Behari Lal's case (3) only meant that the widow should retain no interest in what was surrendered and that, therefore, a partial surrender provided that the surrender was absolute as to that part was valid. This, however, is quite against the principle on which the whole transaction rests. As already pointed out, it is the effacement of the widow—an effacement which in other circumstances is effected by actual death or by civil death—which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date. Now there cannot be a widow who is partly effaced and partly not so, and consequently the suggestion was, in their Lordships' view, rightly rejected by the Calcutta Full Bench in Debi Prosad Chowdhury v. Golap Bhagat (4)." And further on, they sum up the result of the discussion of the authorities in these words:—"An alienation by a widow of her husband's estate held by her may be validated if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation. In such circumstances the question of necessity does not fall to be considered. But the surrender must be a bona fide surrender, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner" These are the general principles governing the question of the validity of a surrender. Their Lordships, however, do not deal with the question whether any reservation of a benefit for the widow by way of maintenance would be authorised or not as part of a transaction of surrender. But we have rulings of this Court which lay down that a provision for maintenance is not inconsistent with the validity of a surrender. That was considered quite recently by Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (5), where they held that any stipulation by the widow surrendering her estate that she should be maintained during her lifetime by the person in whose favour the surrender is made would not in any way affect the surrender. This is also the effect of the rulings in Mulugu Kotayya v. Mudigonda Chandramouli Sastri (6) and in an unreported case, in Gopala Krishnayya v. Gangayya, Appeal No. 373 of 1915 noticed in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (5). There are also two cases of the Patna High Court to the same effect, reported as Raghunath Singh v. Kura Kumari (7) and Dilkor Koer v. Harku Singh (8). We may take it, therefore, that the rulings support the view that a provision for the maintenance of a widow is consistent with the validity of a surrender of her estate to the nearest reversioner. It may be pointed out that there is nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council already referred to which can be taken to suggest that a widow surrendering her estate cannot stipulate for proper maintenance for herself. The surrender would be nonetheless a surrender of her entire estate having the effect of accelerating the reversion in spite of such a provision for maintenance. What the learned Advocate-General contends is that a surrender would not be bad if it in fact does not amount to a device on the part of the widow to divide the estate with the reversioners, and he conceded that if the provisions of Exhibits A and AI in this case reserved to Mangayarkarasi anything substantially more than what would be a proper maintenance for her, the transfer would be bad, and it would in fact amount to a division of the estate between herself and the reversioners. He urged that having regard to the position of Mangayarkarasi as a Zamindar's widow, the provisions in the document under consideration should not be regarded as more than what she would be otherwise entitled to as maintenance if her husband died as member of a joint family. But in fact what she purported to reserve for herself was much more than could be needed for her maintenance. She gets an allowance of Rs. 250 a month, which, one would think, would be sufficient for the maintenance of a Hindu widow even though she might belong to a Zamindar's family, especially when she is separately provided with residence. Over and above that she keeps for herself a life estate in certain villages yielding an income of nearly Rs. 200 a month. Most important of all, she does not part with one of the important villages forming part of her son's estate, and this she retains in her absolute right. The learned Subordinate Judge, it seems to us, was quite justified in holding that provisions of this nature can hardly be justified as maintenance. He also points out that the senior widow of Kottasami received only Rs. 100 a month for her maintenance and the benefits which Mangayarkarasi stipulated for herself could not properly be described as provisions for her maintenanance. The Subordinate Judge is right in his view. Exhibit A could not properly be called a surrender of the whole of her estate. She reserves some of the villages for her life and an absolute right in another village. A document of this nature would not come within the principle of the law as laid down by the Judicial Committee. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that Exhibit A cannot be upheld as a valid surrender.

In that view, it is unnecessary to deal with the question whether the village of Pottithatti was reserved to be made a gift of by Mangayarkarasi in favour of a certain temple, and we may mention that the learned Advocate-General at this hearing rested the case of his client on the basis entirely of surrender.

The next question argued by him was one of estoppel; the contention being that Pandithorai obtained possession of the properties under Exhibit A and, therefore, on the authority of some English rulings it is not open to Pandithorai's heirs or representatives to resist the title of the plaintiff under that document. It would be sufficient to meet this argument by pointing out that so far as B Schedule properties are concerned, and these are the only properties to which this litigation relates, he did not obtain possession of them until after Mangayarkarasi's death. Mangayarkarasi was to enjoy some of the villages for her life and with respect to the village of Pottithatti, she had an absolute right and, when she died, Pandithorai took possession of these villages not under the provisions of Exhibit A but as the nearest reversioner of Sivagnanasami, Kottasami having predeceased Mangayarkarasi. We may also point out that the cases cited by the learned Advocate-General have no bearing on the present question. The cases of Board v. Board (9) and Dalton v. Fitzgerald (10) have been considered by this Court in Alamelu Ammal v. Balu Ammal (11). In Dalton v. Fitzgerald (10) the person in possession of the property came into possession under a Will by which he got a life-estate, the remainder being given to some other person. The testator it appeared had no title to the property, but the person who got the life-estate under the Will acquired a good title by possession against the true owner. The question arose whether he was estopped from questioning the title of the remainderman as given by the Will. It was held that estoppel operated in such a case. Lord Justice Lopes at page 93 states the ground on which the estoppel was based as follows:—"If a man obtains possession of land claiming under a deed or Will, he cannot afterwards set up another title to the land against the Will or deed, though it did not operate to pass the land in question; and if he remain in possession till 12 years have elapsed and the title of the testator's heir is extinguished, he cannot claim by possession an interest in the property different from that which he would have taken if the property had passed by the Will or deed." In this case we have got to deal with here, the title of Pandithorai was not acquired by virtue of any possession derived under Exhibit A. It is an independent title which accrued to him as reversioner on the death of Mangayarkarasi and not derived from the so-called deed of surrender.

Then it was argued that Pandithorai must, somehow or other, be taken to have elected to abide by Exhibit A. It is difficult to see how there can be any question of election in the present case. He got possession of B Schedule properties as a reversionary heir of the last male holder and there was no question of his electing to receive these properties in lieu of some other properties. It is pointed out that Pandithorai, so far as other properties were concerned, namely, A, C and D Schedule properties, did not question the operation of Exhibit A and that in fact both Kottasami and his heirs and Pandithorai acted upon the stipulations contained in that document by making payments to the widow according to its terms. But it is not easy to see how these facts can in any way operate as estoppel or amount to ratification or election. Any payments that were made by Kottasami to the widow were in lieu of the benefits which he received under Exhibit A, and it was not suggested by the learned Advocate-General that this is a case to which section 115 of the Evidence Act applies, for there was nothing in the conduct of Pandithorai on which Kottasami could be said to have relied upon to his prejudice.

In the result, the appeal must be held to have failed and it is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 4 to 6, 14 to 16 and 8, 9 and 10. There will be only one set of costs to be divided between these respondents in proportion to their interest in the properties concerned.

Order XXI, rule 67 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code merely provides that an executing Court may, in its discretion, direct an advertisement of a sale to be published in the Gazette, but there is no obligation on its part to do so, and the failure to give such a direction does not amount to material irregularity in the conduct of the sale within the meaning of rule 90 of the Order. [p. 795, col. 2.]

A judgment-debtor applying under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an execution sale must show not only that there has been material irregularity in the conduct of the sale but also that such irregularity has resulted in substantial injury to him. [p. 796, col. 2.]

An execution Court should not consider objections other than those expressly stated in the application presented to it under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code. A fortiori, objections not so taken cannot be considered by an Appellate Court, when hearing an appeal from the order of the Court rejecting an application to set aside a sale. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, rejecting an application, under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, by the judgment-debtor to set aside an auction sale on the ground of irregularities in proclaiming and conducting it. The facts, so far as they are material for the purposes of the appeal before me, are briefly as follows:—

In 1912 the decree-holder, Benarsi Das, applied for execution of a decree for Rs. 17,640 which he held against the judgment-debtors Gopi Chand and others, and prayed for attachment and sale of the rights which the judgment-debtors possessed as mortgagees in a certain bungalow and garden situate in the town of Jagadhri. The application was granted and the property attached was sold in 1913, but the sale was subsequently set aside on the application of the judgment-debtors. A second sale in July 1915 and a third sale in December 1916 both in favour of the decree-holder who had bid Rs. 11,000 for the property were also set aside, and a similar fate befell a fourth sale in December 1918 in favour of Sardar Lachhman Singh who had bid Rs. 13,000. All these sales were cancelled on the application of the judgment-debtors, and, finally, on the 13th January 19.9 a fifth sale, when the property again realised Rs. 13,000, was effected in favour of the said Sardar Lachman Singh. The judgment-debtors applied as usual for cancellation of the said sale, and the objections urged by them on the ground upon which their application was based in the Court executing the decree, were as follows:—

(1) That the auction sale was not duly proclaimed by beat of drum. This objection is not in accordance with the facts, as the proclamation of sale was duly made by that means, and Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, while admitting that the proclamation was duly made, explains that the real objection was that there was no beat of drum at the time when the sale actually took place. Assuming that this was so, I can find no irregularity as there is no provision of law making it incumbent upon a Court to have a drum beaten while the sale is going on;

(2) that the sale was very hurriedly conducted and was concluded in two hours. Here again the objection is contrary to the facts, as the sale was proclaimed on the date fixed, from 10 A. M. till 5 P. M., when the last bid of Rs. 13,000 was made and accepted;

(3) that the property is of great value and that in order to notify the residents of the neighbouring Kalsia State and Saharanpur who would have been the likely purchasers, it was necessary to advertise the sale in the Gazette. Reference in this connection is made to Order XXI, rule 67 (2), Civil Procedure Code, but the Code merely provides that the Court may in its discretion direct an advertisement of the sale in the Gazette and there is no obligation on its part to do so;

(4) that in the proclamation of sale neither the khasra numbers nor the amount of revenue nor the area of the land was specified. This objection ignores the fact that the bungalow and garden are not agricultural land or assessed to revenue. No doubt the area of the property was not specifically stated, but in view of the fact that four previous sales had taken place and that few, if any, persons in the neighbourhood could have been unaware of the exact property that was being sold, I cannot agree that the omission in this particular instance to specify with accuracy the details of the property amounted to a material irregularity;

(5) that the decretal amount as stated in the proclamation is said to be Rs. 17,500 whereas the proper amount due to the decree-holder under the decree of the Appellate Court which awarded him costs was Rs. 20,217-3-4. As regards this objection I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the judgment-debtor was in no way prejudiced by the inaccuracy, inasmuch as the probabilities are that more persons would be inclined to buy the property upon which the decree-holder had a lien for only Rs. 17,500 than would be likely to purchase the property upon which the lien amounted to over Rs. 20,200. If any one was injured by a mistake of this kind, it was the auction-purchaser and not the judgment-debtor, and the former is satisfied with his bargain;

(6) that the agricultural land should have been sold in a separate lot from that in which the bungalow was included and that the sale of both properties in one lot greatly decreased their value. The answer to this objection is that there is no "agricultural land" and that the land surrounding the house and appurtenent to it is a garden It is also pointed out by Mr. Gullu Ram that it was at the express request of the decree holder and the judgment-debtor, made at the time when the property was first attached, that the garden and bungalow were sold in one lot and not separately. This objection, therefore, also fails.

The foregoing are the only objections taken in the application made to the Court executing the decree, but before me Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi wished to urge further on the judgment debtors' behalf that the sale was invalid (a) because no notice had been given to the judgment-debtors; (b) that one-fourth of the property sold belonged not to the judgment-debtors but to their relation Musammat Pishto, and (c) that the value of the judgment-debtors' mortgagee rights in the property had not been specified in the proclamation of sale. Assuming that there might have been force in these objections or any one of them, I have no hesitation in holding that they cannot be urged at this stage of the case. The Allahabad High Court has held, and if I may venture to say so rightly, that the Court should not consider objections other than those expressly stated in the application presented to it under rule 90, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code: Harbans Lal v. Kundan Lal (1). A fortiori objection not so taken cannot be considered by an Appellate Court when hearing an appeal from the order of the Court rejecting an application to set aside a sale.

Mr. Gullu Ram has also urged that it was incumbent upon the judgment-debtors to adduce evidence to prove that they had suffered substantial injury owing to the alleged irregularities in the proclamation and conduct of the sale, whereas in point of fact no evidence whatever was given to show that either directly or by necessary implication such substantial injury had been caused. On this ground also the appeal before me must fail, as there is the highest authority for holding that in cases such as the present the judgment-debtors must show not only that there had been material irregularities but also that such irregularities had resulted in substantial injury to them.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

*Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance, suit to recover, by pauper widow—Suit decreed in part—Costs, rule as to award of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Expenses incurred by widow in performing marriage of daughter, whether can be charged on ancestral property—Limitation for suit—*Bangles and seemantham ceremonies, expenses of, whether can be recovered.

In a maintenance suit by a pauper widow where the right to maintenance is established by decree, the plaintiff alone ought, as a rule, to be given costs in proportion to the amount of her success. [p. 798, col 1.]

A claim by a Hindu widow for the expenses of the marriage of a daughter might be made a charge on ancestral property by a decree of Court, but it does not become a complete charge till it is so constituted by the decree Such expenses are recoverable from the person legally bound to defray them either under section 69 of the Contract Act, or on a principle of equity analogous to that underlying the section. A suit to enforce such a claim must be brought within six years of the date of incurring the expense [p 798, col. 2.]

The expenses incurred in the bangles ceremony and seemantham ceremony respectively are not such as would create any legal obligation on the girl's uncles to discharge. [p. 798, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant before us. She sued her two brothers-in-law for the recovery of future maintenance at the rate of Rs. 277 a year and also for the recovery of Rs. 1,866 odd for arrears of maintenance from February 1907 to the end of June 1916, besides Rs. 1,500 for expenses incurred by her in connection with the nuptials marriage of her daughter and on the occasions of the Bangles ceremony and the Seemantham ceremony performed during her daughter's first pregnancy. The learned Subordinate Judge decreed future maintenance at the rate of 24 Kalams and Rs. 61 a year (the total of which according to the present value of paddy amounts to about Rs. 109 a year). He also awarded arrears of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 109 a year from June 1912 and he also allowed Rs. 200 plus Rs. 50 plus Rs. 70, altogether Rs. 320, on account of expenses incurred for the three ceremonies mentioned above (Rs. 1,500 having been claimed by her in the plaint). He awarded proportionate costs to both sides but directed the plaintiff to pay the Court-fees due to Government, the plaintiff having been allowed to sue as a pauper.

The questions we have to decide in this appeal and in the connected memorandum of objections may be formulated thus:—

(1) What is the net income derivable from the family lands which belonged to the plaintiff's husband and whether the rate of future maintenance allowed should be increased; and if so, to what extent?

(2) Is the plaintiff entitled to arrears of maintenance from February 1907 as claimed by her?

(3) Is she entitled to a sum of Rs. 68-8-0, subsistence allowance of witnesses alleged to have been disallowed in the lower Court's decree by mistake?

(4) Is the lower Court's award of proportionate costs to the defendants improper?

(5) Whether the lower Court ought to have decreed Rs. 50 for the right of residence claimed by the plaintiff?

(6) Whether (vide memorandum of objections) the claim for the expenses of nuptials ceremony incurred in 1907 was barred by limitation?

(7) Whether the award of the expenses incurred for Valagappu and Seemantham ceremonies was not warranted by law? and

(8) Whether the plaintiff is not entitled to any arrears of maintenance before date of suit?

As regards the first question, we accept the reasons given by the lower Court in support of its finding that the income derivable from the joint family properties is only Rs. 590 net a year. The plaintiff's husband's share of that income, if he was alive, would, no doubt, be about Rs. 200 a year, but that whole sum is not to be awarded to the plaintiff unless that amount is so small that it would just suffice for her maintenance. The 1st defendant stated in his chief examination that the plaintiff would require 2 Kalams and Rs. 3 to 4 a month for her expenses. In cross-examination he said that the plaintiff would need two female cloths a year at Rs. 3-8-0 or Rs. 4-0-0 each at the present rate He was not cross examined on the question as to what she would require for food expenses. The plaintiff herself as her own first witness said that two Kalams a month was enough, but she wanted Rs. 10 a month for other expenses. We do not think that the lower Court was not justified in accepting the evidence of the 1st defendant on the question of the fair rate of maintenance to be allowed to the plaintiff. The 1st defendant, in his counter-affidavit during the pauper proceedings and also in his written statement, has no doubt raised some contentions which savour of legal chicanery, but his evidence in the box seems to be straightforward and we see no reason not to accept the general accuracy and truthfulness of his statements in the witness box. We shall, therefore, not interfere with the award of the lower Court in respect of the rate of maintenance.

On the question of arrears of maintenance having regard to the notice, Exhibit A, in which the plaintiff did not claim any arrears but only required the defendants to make arrangements in respect of the plaintiff's maintenance and of the Stridhanam to be given to her daughter within a week, we think it is apparent that she never intended to claim arrears of maintenance. She had been living with her son-in-law and her father prior to the date of the notice and after misunderstandings arose between her and the defendants in connection with the performance of the nuptials of her daughter. Even those misunderstandings seem to have been not at all serious in the beginning. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court in its refusal to award arrears of maintenance prior to the date of the notice Exhibit A.

The next question is about the subsistence allowance for witnesses (Rs. 68-8-0) which is alleged to have been disallowed by the lower Court. There is no order on record by the Judge disallowing any portion of the subsistence allowance or witnesses' Batta claimed by the plaintiff and if there is any clerical or arithmetical error in drawing up the decree, that error should be corrected.

The next question is whether the lower Court was right in awarding proportionate costs to the defendants on the value of the disallowed portion of the plaintiff's claim. Having regard to the denial of the whole of the plaintiff's claim in the written statement, we think that in such maintenance suits by pauper widows where the right to maintenance is established by the decree, the plaintiff alone ought, as a rule, to be given proportionate costs to the extent of the plaintiff's success and the defendant need not be given proportionate costs. We would modify the decree of the lower Court accordingly, disallowing the defendants' costs in the lower Court.

The plaintiff is entitled to a right of residence in the family house and if her being allowed to exercise such right would be inconvenient to all parties, it seems reasonable that she should be awarded a sum of money which would produce an income sufficient to secure a convenient residence for her. As only Rs. 50 is claimed in the memorandum of second appeal for residence and as it is clear that, having regard to the very strained feelings between the parties, it would be inconvenient for both parties that the plaintiff should be allowed to reside in the family house in the village, we allow the modest sum of Rs. 50 as claimed.

Then we come to the contentions of the defendants raised in the memorandum of objections, the most important being whether the claim for the amount incurred in 1907 for the expenses of the nuptials ceremony is barred by limitation. This expense was incurred about nine years before suit. The claim for the expenses of nuptials marriage might, no doubt, be made a charge on the ancestral properties by a decree of Court just as the maintenance allowed to a widow in a family may be so charged. But it does not become a completed charge till it is so constituted by decree of Court. Further while a claim for maintenance accrues daily throughout the life of the widowed claimant or till her remarriage, the expense of the daughter's nuptials ceremony is incurred once for all and there is only one cause of action for its recovery as soon as it is incurred. Lastly, the plaintiff who incurred the expenses in the interests of her daughter can claim recovery of that amount from the person legally bound to defray that amount either under section 69 of the Indian Contract Act or, probably as pointed out in Ranganaikammal v. Ramanuja Aiyangar (1), on the principle of equity analogous to that underlying section 69 of the Contract Act. In either view, we do not think that more than six years can be the period of limitation for enforcing such a claim. This contention in the memorandum of objections must, therefore, be allowed.

Coming to the sum of Rs. 50 and of Rs. 70 allowed for the Bangles ceremony and Seemantham ceremony respectively, these are not expenses the incurring of which is obligatory on the girl's father's undivided brothers, especially the expenses of the former ceremony which is not mentioned in any Shastra. The Seemantham ceremony is a rite to be performed at the expense of the husband as one of the sacramental purificatory ceremonies of the child in the womb and the expected mother's uncles are under no legal obligation to incur the expenses therefor. The conventional presents of cloths made on such occasion between the households cannot be raised to the dignity of a legal obligation on either side.

The result is that the memorandum of objections has to be allowed on these two points, though as regards the further contention that arrears of maintenance ought not to have been allowed even from 1912 to the date of suit, it fails.

As regards the costs of this appeal and the memorandum of objections, the parties will bear their own respective costs.

CHAMPSEY BHARA & CO.—RESPONDENTS.

Arbitration and award—Error of law patent on face of award—Award, whether liable to be set aside—Contravention of rule binding on parties, whether error of law—Vendor and purchaser—Contract, breach of, by vendor—Purchaser, whether can be made to pay damages—Common Law.

A Court will set aside an award if there is an error of law patent on the face of it. [p. 802, col. 1.]

Where a rule binding on the parties to an arbitration lays down that in no case is a particular party liable to pay a sum of money as damages or compensation, then an award directing that party to pay a sum of money is bad on the face of it in point of law. [p. 802, col. 2.]

Under rule 52 of the Rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association where a buyer refuses the cotton on account of non-approval of tender, he may exercise either of two options, viz., he may buy in the market at a reasonable rate on the account, risk and expense of the seller or he may invoice the cotton back to the seller at the market rate of the day, upon which the final award is made; but he is not bound to exercise either of these options, and the failure to exercise either of these options does not render him liable to pay damages to the seller. [p. 801, col. 2.]

Where an award imposes a liability on a party which cannot possibly be said to have been provided for by the contract between the parties on a proper construction of its terms, there is an error of law patent upon the face of the award which entitles the Court to set it aside. [p. 803, col. 1.]

It is entirely opposed to the general provisions of the Contract Act and to the Common Law that a buyer who has rightly rejected goods tendered under a contract of purchase and sale should be in any way liable to the seller. [p. 802, col. 2.]

Per Heaton, J.—Where an award imports by reference the contract rules and correspondence between the parties and then contravenes one of the rules, it can properly be said that there is an error of law patent on the face of the award. [p. 803, col. 1.]

Appeal from the following decision of Mr. Justice Pratt, dismissing an application to set aside an award:—

"This is a petition to set aside the award made in an arbitration under the Rules of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association.

The respondents had made two contracts to deliver cotton to the petitioners. The petitioners complained that the cotton was of an inferior quality and demanded a survey or arbitration under rule 12 of the Rules of the Association. The surveyor or arbitrator found that the quality of the cotton tendered was Rs. 10-8-0 a candy inferior. This award was appealed against and was upheld on appeal by the tribunal appointed under the Association's rules. The award so appealed against was under rule 12 final and conclusive, and rule 52 gave the petitioners the right to reject the cotton and they did so. The respondents then preferred a claim for damages, contending that the contract should be settled at the market rate, which was lower than the contract rate, and claiming that the difference, Rs. 25,000, was payable to them. The petitioners refused to meet this claim. The dispute was referred to arbitration under rule 13, and the arbitrators have awarded the respondents their claim. The petitioners appealed against the award, which was confirmed by the appellate tribunal. It is this award, so confirmed, which is the subject of this petition.

The petitioners went to arbitration under protest contending that there was no dispute to arbitrate upon, and this is the first objection taken to the award. It is contended that there was no dispute which could form the subject-matter of the arbitration and that the arbitrators had, therefore, no jurisdiction. There is no substance in this objection. The respondents' claim was based on the contract and was for the difference between the contract rate and the market rate. There was thus clearly a question in dispute arising out of or in relation to the contract. This was a dispute which fell under rule 13 of the rules and one which the arbitrators had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon. It may be an altogether unjustifiable claim but that was a matter for the arbitrators to decide.

The next objection raised to the jurisdiction of the arbitrators is one raised by Mr. Inverarity in the course of his reply, and that is that when the contract was broken by reason of the respondents' default, the arbitration clause fell with it. But the cases cited do not support this proposition. In Smith Coney & Barrett v. Becker Gray & Co. (1) it was conceded that if the whole contract was illegal by reason of the war, the arbitration clause would also be void. In the case of Jureidini v. National British and Irish Millers' Insurance Company, Limited (2) the Insurance company, having repudiated the whole contract on the ground of fraud, were estopped from raising the arbitration clause as a defence to the suit on the doctrine that they could not both approbate and reprobate. There is here no question of legality or estoppel. The agreement to arbitrate is a collateral agreement. It does not fall when the main agreement is broken, but in fact the breach of the main agreement is one of the factors which brings the agreement of arbitration into operation.

The next and the only other objection taken is that there is an error patent on the face of the award, which is, therefore, liable to be set aside under the rule in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (3), followed in Landauer v. Asser (4) and British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company Limited v. Underground Electric Railways Company of London, Limited (5). It seems to me, however, impossible to impugn the award on this ground, for the award gives no reasons. It merely states the dispute and then gives the arbitrators' decision on that dispute. The error of law pleaded by the petitioners is that the arbitrators have misconstrued rule 52 of the Rules of the Association. This rule gives the buyer, in the case of a tender of inferior goods, when inferiority of the quality is in excess of Rs. 5 a candy, the option of invoicing back at the market rate. This is an option which was admittedly not exercised, and it is impossible that the petitioners could have exercised that option to their own detriment when the market rate was less than the contract rate. It may be that the arbitrators have misconstrued this rule as making the exercise of this option compulsory. But this is only a matter for speculation It is equally possible that the arbitrators have proceeded on the terms in the contracts which provide that they cannot be cancelled for any cause whatever. The arbitrators may have construed this term of the contract as superseding the rule giving the petitioners the right of rejection and may also have erred in making no allowance for inferiority of quality. Again, it is also possible that the arbitrators have overlooked the final effect of the survey or award under rule 12 and considering that the goods were of the contract quality have held that they were wrongly rejected by the petitioners. These seem to exhaust the possible errors which the arbitrators may have committed, but the very fact that there are several errors to choose from makes it clear that the error is one that is latent, and not one that is patent on the face of the award. The strongest of the cases cited is that of Landauer v. Asser (4), but there the award "expressly and implicitly founded its conclusions on the terms of the contract" (p. 193) which gave no warrant for these conclusions. But here it is impossible to trace the error. It may be an error of construction of the rules or of the contract, or of fact as to the quality of the goods tendered.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Pratt, J.

The appellants, the Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd., filed a petition to set aside an award in favour of the respondents, Messrs. Champsey Bhara & Co., which had been made in the following circumstances.

On the 17th August 1918 the respondents contracted to sell to the appellants 100 bales New Machine Ginned Fully Good Mundra Cotton at Rs. 905 a candy, delivery 1st October to 25th November.

On the 4th September 1918, a similar contract was made for the sale of 100 bales at Rs. 950 a candy. Both the said contracts were subject to the Rules and Regulations of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association, Ltd

Against the said contracts the respondents tendered cotton. Surveys were held and in each case the arbitrators made awards giving an allowance of Rs. 10-8 0 per candy. These awards were confirmed on appeal by the Appeal Committee. Rule 52 of the Bombay Cotton Trade Association Rules lays down what are the buyer's rights if the tender is not approved. If the final award for inferiority of quality be in excess of Rs. 5 a candy, the buyer shall have the option either to take the cotton at the allowance fixed by the arbitrators or the Appeal Committee, or upon giving notice in writing to the seller and original tenderer to refuse the same.

Accordingly, on the 25th November, the appellants gave the respondents notice that they refused the cotton tendered.

The rule then provides that if the buyer refuses the cotton he may either buy in the market at a reasonable rate on account, risk and expense of the seller or invoice it back to the seller at the market rate of the day upon which the final award shall have been made. In the event of the buyer exercising his option of invoicing the cotton back to the seller at the market rate of the day upon which the final award has been made, he shall notify his immediate seller and the original tenderer within twenty-four hours of the arbitration and/or appeal, if any, being finally disposed of.

The appellants did not exercise either of the options mentioned in the rule. The obvious reason was that the market had fallen.

On the 29th November the respondents wrote to the appellants claiming Rs. 25,000, being the difference between the contract rates and the room rates when the cotton was rejected. The appellants replied on the 30th November that the contracts were broken and, therefore, they were not liable to the respondents.

On the 4th December the respondents wrote that they proposed to refer the matter to arbitration under the provisions of rule 13.

The appellants replied that they were not bound to refer the matter to arbitration.

At the request of the respondents the Association appointed two arbitrators under the Rules to decide the alleged claim preferred by the respondents. The appellants submitted their contentions to the arbitrators in writing.

On the 23rd of December the arbitrators published their award.

After reciting the contracts above mentioned, the rejection of the cotton tendered, the claim of the respondents, and the denial of liability by the appellants, the arbitrators awarded and directed that the appellants should pay to the respondents the sum of Rs. 25,000.

This award was confirmed by the Appeal Board on the 9th June. The appellants thereupon filed a petition to set aside the award. It was argued before the learned Judge (1) that there was no dispute which could be referred to arbitration, (2) that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction, (3) that there was an error of law patent on the face of the award. All these objections were held to be untenable and the petition was dismissed.

In the view I take of the proper construction of rule 52, a dispute could only validly arise in the event of the buyer exercising one of the options mentioned in the rule. But I think that really the first two points are involved in the third, since, if the third cannot be found in the appellants' favour, it would follow that there was a dispute which it was within the jurisdiction of the arbitrators to decide. The question whether there was an error patent on the face of the award presents many difficulties.

The rule is clear, as laid down in Landauer v. Asser (4), that the Court will set aside an award if there is an error of law patent on the face of it. It was contended that the arbitrators having given no reasons for their award, the error of law which it is said they have committed is a matter of speculation only, so that it cannot be patent on the face of the award.

But the arbitrators have recited the contracts which include the Rules of the Association, the rejection of the cotton tendered, and the reasons for such rejection, and the claim of the respondents, and it seems perfectly obvious from their award that they have allowed the claim made by the respondents in their letter of the 29th November, based on their construction of the provisions of rule 52.

If then it is patent that the arbitrators have wrongly construed the contracts, it seems on the authority of Landauer v. Asser (4) that we are entitled to set aside the award. Kennedy, J., at page 191, after reading the terms of the award, said:—

"'The reasoning of the umpire, which he puts forward in the expression 'as the parties to the contract, etc., were by the terms thereof principals thereto,' is, as Counsel for both parties seemed to agree, far from clear. I do not understand how in any case the facts help Messrs. Asser. But whatever this expression means it is, I think, quite clear that the umpire bases his decision that Messrs. Asser, the sellers, are, and Messrs. Landauer, the buyers, are not entitled to the sum in dispute, entirely upon the terms of the contract of November 3, 1903."

I think it may be said, to use the language of Kennedy, J., that the arbitrators in this case have based their decision that the respondents are entitled to the sum they claim entirely upon the terms of the contract.

Now if it is clear that in no case under rule 52 can the buyer be liable to pay a sum of money as damages or compensation or whatever else it may be called to the seller after he has rightly rejected the cotton, then it seems to me that an award directing him to pay in such a case a certain sum of money is bad on the face of it in point of law.

What are the buyer's rights if he rejects the cotton? (1) He may buy in the market at a reasonable rate on account, risk and expense of the seller. That is to say, if the market has gone up and he buys he can call upon the seller to pay the difference. If the market has gone down and he buys, it is obvious he has no claim against the seller, but the seller has certainly no claim on the buyer for the saving the buyer has effected. (2) The buyer may invoice the cotton back to the seller at the market rate of the day upon which the final award has been made. This he could only do if the market had risen. There is no compulsion upon him to invoice the cotton back to the seller if the market has fallen. These two options are the usual ones given to a buyer as a foundation for a claim against his seller for damages (compare rules 37, 38 and 47) and no man in his senses would exercise either of them unless the market had risen. If the market falls, he has no claim against the seller and he can either buy or not as he chooses. The argument that the word 'may' must be read 'shall' is based on an obvious misreading of the rule. The marginal note shows that paragraph 1 of the Rule deals only with the buyer's rights if the tender is not approved. It is entirely opposed to the general provisions of the Contract Act and to the Common Law that a buyer who has rightly rejected goods tendered under a contract of purchase and sale should be in any way liable to the seller. If the members of the Association think that there should be such a liability, then they must provide for it by express conditions in the contract.

I am aware that my opinion is contrary to the view of the arbitrators and the members of the Board of Appeal who were persons of great experience in the cotton trade, but as they have imposed, as I think they have done, a liability on the buyer which cannot possibly be said to have been provided for by the contract on a proper construction of its terms, I think there is an error of law patent upon the face of the award which entitles the Court to set it aside.

The appellants must have their costs in both Courts.

As the appellants have paid the sum awarded they will be entitled to a refund and interest at 6 per cent. from the date of payment.

HEATON, J.—It is to me quite plain from the facts stated in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice that no Court of law would allow damages or compensation to the seller in this case. He broke the contract by tendering goods of a quality such that the buyer was entitled to reject them and did so. It is directly contrary to law that the person who breaks the contract should receive damages or compensation for the breach. Undoubtedly, therefore, there is an error of law and it is so startling, so fundamental, that it becomes plainly apparent as soon as the award and the papers recited in the award are read. This is so because from the admitted facts and the contract and the rules, both of which are recited in the award, it is apparent that the buyer rightly and not wrongly rejected the goods. I have added this brief statement to the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice with which I agree, because at first it seemed to me doubtful whether the error could be described as apparent on the face of the award. But as the award imports by reference the contract, the rules, and the correspondence between the parties, it may, I think, properly be said that the error of law is apparent on the face of the award.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

THE MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY COMPANY, LTD.—DECREE HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 15, 17—Execution of decree—Joint decree—One of several joint decree-holders, whether can apply for execution—Procedure—Amendment of application for execution, when permissible.

A joint decree cannot be executed by one of the several joint decree-holders in respect of what the applicant considers his share in the decree. Much less can it be executed by one of the decree-holders in respect of the entire decree, unless it is on behalf of the decree-holders for the benefit of them all. Even if the application for execution of the decree by one of the decree-holders be on behalf of or for the benefit of them all, it is for the Court to allow, for sufficient cause, the execution of the decree on such application, and in case the Court does allow the application and the decree to be so executed, the Court is required to make such order "as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application." [p. 804, col. 2; p. 805, col. 1.]

The requirements of rule 15 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code go to the root of the execution of the decree itself, and, therefore, while rule 17 of the Order empowers an executing Court to allow a defect in the requirements of rules 11 to 14 of the Order to be amended it does not include rule 15 of the Order, so that an application for execution of a decree which does not comply with the requirements of rule 15 cannot be allowed to be amended. JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 216 and 229 of 1918 are presented against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 11th May 1918 and the 6th July 1918 respectively. By these orders the Subordinate Judge disallowed the several objections of the judgment-debtor, Mr

MEIK, A. J. v. MIDNAPUR ZAMINDARY COMPANY LD.

A. J. Meik, Manager of Barabhum Encumbered Estate, Manbhum, to the execution of a joint decree held by the respondent, the Midnapur Zemindary Company, Limited, and one Mr. Mathesa against the appellant. The facts shortly stated are as follows :—

The Raja of Barabhum, Sri Ramkanai Singh Deo, brought a suit No. 89 of 1906 against the respondent, the Midnapur Zamindary Company, for setting aside a Patni. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit and awarded costs to defendants, the Midnapur Zemindary Company and Mr. Mathesa. The Raja preferred an appeal No. 79 of 1908 to the Calcutta High Court which was also dismissed on 28th April 1910 with costs. During the pendency of the appeal in the High Court the Raja, on the 17th December 1909, obtained a decree against the Midnapur Zamindary Company for a large sum of money due as arrears of Patni rent. The Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum as Manager of the Encumbered Estate of the Raja obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated 28th April 1910, in favour of the Midnapur Zamindary Company, and on 7th February 1911 hypothecated the said rent decree of the 17th December 1909 in favour of the Raja as security for the respondent's costs of appeal to the Privy Council. An appeal was preferred. In February 1915, the Privy Council dismissed the appeal awarding costs to the defendants, the Midnapur Zamindary Company and Mr. Mathesa. Out of the two decree holders the Midnapur Zamindary Company and Mr. Mathesa, only the former applied for execution of the entire decree to the Subordinate Judge on 23rd June 1917. The execution comprises three decrees for costs :—

1. For costs awarded by the Subordinate Judge in Suit No. 89, Rs. 1,701 9-0, which with interest and costs of the previous executions amounted to Rs. 2,686 1-6.

2. For costs awarded by the High Court in Appeal No. 79, Rs. 2,008 6 0, which with interest and costs of the previous executions amounted to Rs. 2,873-0-3.

3. For costs awarded by His Majesty in Council in Appeal No. 62, Rs. 5,814-12 0.

The total sum covered by the execution is Rs. 11,373-13 9. The decree-holder applied for recovery of the money by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's Zamindary right in Barabhum Estate Pargana, Tauzi No. 1, District Manbhum. The Deputy Commissioner, as manager of the estate of the judgment-debtor under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, filed a petition objecting to the execution of the decree on the 15th of August 1917. This was disposed of against the judgment-debtor by the Subordinate Judge on the 11th May 1918, and the execution was ordered to proceed. Appeal No. 216 is against this order of the Subordinate Judge. On the 29th June 1918, the judgment debtor filed further objections which were disposed of by the order of the Court on the 6th of July 1918. Appeal No. 229 is by the judgment-debtor against this order of the Subordinate Judge. These two appeals may be considered at one and the same time and may be disposed of by one judgment as they relate to the execution of the same decree, and the objections of the judgment-debtor are more or less overlapping.

Mr. Fakhruddin, appearing on behalf of the appellant, has strenuously contended that the petition for the execution of the decree was invalid inasmuch as it contravened the provisions of Order XXI, rule 15. The petition for the execution of the decree was taken out by one of the two joint decree-holders in respect of the whole decree. Under rule 15 of the said Order this is permissible if the execution is for the benefit of all the decree holders. The petition for execution of the decree, dated the 23rd June 1917, does not state that the execution was for the benefit of all the decree holders. The name of the other decree holder—Mr. Mathesa—is not even mentioned in the column prescribed for stating the names of the parties nor anywhere else in the application. It is, therefore, clear that the execution was taken out by the Midnapur Zamindary Company, Limited, one of the decree-holders only, in respect of the entire decree solely on its own behalf. A joint decree cannot be executed by one of the several joint decree-holders in respect of what the applicant considers his share in the decree. Much less can it be executed by one of the decree-holders in respect of the entire decree, unless it is on behalf of all the decree-holders or for the benefit of them all. Even if the application for execution of the decree by one of the decree-holders be on behalf of or for the benefit of them all it is for the Court to allow, for sufficient cause, the execution of the decree on such application, and in case the Court does allow the application and the decree to be so executed, the Court is required to make such order "as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application." This is imperative in order to make an execution of a decree by one of the joint decree-holders valid and competent, as the word "shall" in clause 2 indicates. In the present case there is no application for the execution of the joint decree for the benefit of all the joint decree-holders; nor has the decree been allowed to be executed by one of the decree-holders, nor has the Court passed any order for protecting the interest of the other decree-holder who has not joined in the application. The execution, therefore, is invalid and incompetent. The Court below disposed of this objection by its order, dated 11th May 1918, by simply stating that "Order XXI, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure enables one of the joint decree-holders to execute the whole decree:" vide order 20, dated the 11th May, 1918. The lower Court has overlooked the provisions of the said rule. On behalf of the respondent it has been suggested that the application may be allowed to be amended. Rule 17 of Order XXI, while it empowers the Court to allow a defect in the requirements of rules 11 to 14 to be amended, does not include rule 15 in it and hence the application cannot be allowed to be amended. There appears to be good reason for the said distinction. The defects in the requirements under rules 11 to 14 are only of formal character, whereas rule 15 goes to the root of the execution of the decree itself. The contention of the judgment-debtor must, therefore, prevail and it must be held that there was no valid application for execution of the decree before the lower Appellate Court and the same must, therefore, be disallowed.

The objection as to the execution being invalid under Order XXI, rule 15, has been taken in Appeal No. 216 which relates to the order of the Court of the 11th May 1918, and not in Appeal No. 229 which relates to the order of the Court of the 6th July 1918. But inasmuch as the petition for execution of the decree was in itself invalid, the orders of the Court of the 11th May directing execution to proceed and of the 6th July directing notice to issue under Order XXI, rule 66, are illegal and must, therefore, be set aside.

It is needless to consider the other points raised in both these appeals and we, therefore, abstain from giving any opinion on those points.

The result is that the appeals are allowed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs for both the appeals.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Marten, J., dismissing the suit which the plaintiff had filed praying that the defendant might be ordered to specifically perform an alleged agreement, dated the 28th November 1917, and to do all acts necessary for carrying out his part of the agreement.

The facts are not in dispute and the evidence in the case is purely documentary.

On the 28th November 1917, the plaintiff and defendant drew up two writings in Gujarati which are Exhibits A and AI in the case. It is admitted that for all intents and purposes the documents are in identical terms. Exhibit A was signed by the defendant and Exhibit AI by the plaintiff. The plaintiff contended that those two documents constituted a complete agreement for the sale by the defendant to the plaintiff of a certain property for Rs. 2,15,000. Looking at the documents this would at first sight appear obvious. They contain the names of the parties, the description of the property to be sold, the price to be paid, a provision regarding the division of the costs of the conveyance, etc., the conditions that the seller must make out a marketable title, and that the vendor must get the signature of a certain adopted son on the sale-deed, a provision that the seller has not to pay brokerage, and the time for completion. Finally each party writes 'I have given and taken from you the agreement to the above effect of my own free will and pleasure.' The main defence is contained in paragraph 2 of the written statement:—

"The defendant says that the Gujarati writings signed by the plaintiff and defendant respectively were merely the terms agreed on as a basis for the contract, and not the contract itself which was to be made through a Vakil as stated in clause 1 of the Gujarati writing."

After these documents were executed, a draft agreement in English was prepared but the parties could not agree to the terms of the draft. Eventually, on the 8th December 1917, the defendant's Solicitors wrote that as the plaintiff did not agree to the terms of the draft agreement as altered by them, there was no course left open to the defendant but to break off the negotiation for the sale of the property; that the Gujarati Chitti was not the agreement which the parties intended to enter into for the sale of the property, as their client understood that the altered agreement for sale and all the necessary terms and conditions of such sale would be entered into at the office of the Vakil as provided in the said Chitti. This contention found favour with the learned trial Judge.

After referring to various authorities he said:

"I think the words 'the conditions in respect thereof are as follows' are important, and it is also important that the first of the conditions referred to is for a bargain paper through a Vakil The reference to the more formal document (viz., the bargain paper) is, therefore, a 'condition', and according to Lord Parker, that fact is 'generally if not invariably conclusive against the reference being treated as the expression of a mere desire.' Further, I think there was a special reason here for the parties requiring the services of a Vakil before they were finally bound. That reason was the situation with reference to the two High Court suits, which was a peculiar one and which clauses 2 and 4 of Exhibit A might not entirely meet.

"Then, too, I think it is in favour of the defendants that the earnest money was to be paid on the execution of the bargain paper and not on the execution of Exhibit A."

The fallacy in this argument, with due respect, is the failure to observe that the word 'condition' has two meanings. It is often used as synonymous with 'term' and ordinarily when it is stated in a document which takes the form of an agreement that "the conditions are as follows" as it is stated in Exhibit A, the word 'condition' means 'term.' The commonest occasion when the word has this meaning is when conditions of sale are drawn up for an auction. When a successful bidder signs the agreement annexed to the conditions of sale, those conditions become part of the contract. Therefore, the mere fact that a bargain paper was to be made through a Vakil cannot of itself prove that there was a condition precedent to the agreement becoming effectual as a term of the agreement. There are a great many cases reported where the question before the Court has been whether or not on the evidence in the case there has been a concluded agreement, if there is a provision for the execution of a formal agreement thereafter, and this is to be regretted as once the general rule of construction has been laid down by authority, a decision arising from its application to a particular set of facts cannot operate as a precedent, for the very remote chance of any two sets of fact being absolutely similar may be excluded. And in my humble opinion no Judge can be fettered by an attempt by another Judge to lay down any special rule of construction based on his opinion on the facts of the case before him.

The general rule of construction was laid down by the House of Lords in Rossiter v. Miller (1) and it will be as well to set out the facts of that case. Certain land had been laid out in plots and a plan prepared. Eight conditions were printed on the plan headed, "the following are the conditions of sale." After the conditions came the following clause: "Each purchaser will be required to sign a contract embodying the foregoing conditions and providing for the payment of a deposit at the rate of 10 per cent. and for the completion of the purchase within two months of the contract." Miller offered orally to purchase some of the lots for £1,000 and was informed he must purchase under the conditions printed on the plan. Then certain letters passed and it was contended that Miller's offer had been accepted.

Cairns, L. C., said: "The main question...is whether there was...a concluded contract." Then after setting out the conditions of sale and the correspondence the Lord Chancellor proceeded:

"I pause there for the purpose of pointing out...that in these conditions there are to be found the terms...of a contract, such as might reasonably be expected to be proposed with regard to sales of plots of land of this description...If you find, not an unqualified acceptance of a contract, but an acceptance subject to the condition that an agreement is to be prepared and agreed upon between the parties, and until that condition is fulfilled no contract is to arise, then undoubtedly you cannot, upon a correspondence of that kind, find a concluded contract."

Lord Hatherley said:

"If you can find the true and important ingredients of an agreement in that which has taken place between two parties in the course of a correspondence, then, although the correspondence may not set forth, in a form which a Solicitor would adopt if he were instructed to draw an agreement in writing, that which is the agreement between the parties, yet, if the parties to the agreement, the thing to be sold, the price to be paid, and all those matters, be clearly and distinctly stated, although only by letter, an acceptance clearly by letter will not the less constitute an agreement in the full sense between the parties, merely because that letter may say: 'We will have this agreement put into due form by a Solicitor.'"

Lord Blackburn said:

"But the mere fact that the parties have expressly stipulated that there shall afterwards be a formal agreement prepared, embodying the terms, which shall be signed by the parties does not, by itself, show that they continue merely in negotiation. It is a matter to be taken into account in construing the evidence and determining whether the parties have really come to a final agreement or not. But as soon as the fact is established of the final mutual assent of the parties so that those who draw up the formal agreement have not the power to vary the terms already settled, I think the contract is completed."

Lastly Lord Gordon said:

"No doubt these conditions provided for a subsequent and formal deed being executed by the parties: but that deed was only for the purpose of more formally setting forth the conditions upon which the parties had agreed. If there was anything introduced into the proposed deed, which the purchaser considered beyond the terms and conditions on which he purchased the property, he would have been entitled to object, and, if necessary, the proper terms of the deed could have been adjusted at the sight of a Court of Law."

GOVIND LAXMAN v. HIRACHAND MANCHARAM.

The facts of that case more nearly approach the facts of this case than the facts of any of the other cases which have been cited to us. There were conditions of sale which were considered to be the terms upon which the lots were offered for sale. It was provided that each purchaser was to sign a contract embodying the conditions and providing for the payment of a deposit. But the facts of this case are very much stronger, as the alleged contract is to be found not in correspondence between the parties but in a document which is in the form of a regular agreement. Each party writes that he has given and taken an agreement to the above effect, that is to say, according to the conditions or terms in the document and not subject to any condition. And there is this further fact that Messrs. Hiralal and Co. by their letter of the 1st December certainly considered that the agreement by a Vakil was to be drawn up in consonance with the terms of the Gujarati Chitti. If that document was merely the basis for a future agreement, then it would be open to either party to suggest fresh terms as to price and any other matter.

Now I turn to the facts in the cases on which the respondent relied.

In Winn v. Bull (2) there was an agreement for a lease of a freehold but subject to the preparation and approval of a formal contract.

Jessel, M. R., said:

"The plaintiff says in effect, 'I agree to grant you a lease on certain terms, but subject to something else being approved.' He does not say: 'Nothing more shall be required'...but 'something else is required'... That being so, the agreement is uncertain in its terms..."

In Lloyd v. Nowell (3) the defendant wrote "subject to the preparation by my Solicitors and completion of a formal contract, I am willing to sell to you the lease, etc."

Kekewich, J., said:

"I cannot myself get out of the plain meaning of the words: 'I am willing to sell, not absolutely, but subject to the preparation by my Solicitor, and completion, of a formal contract'...That provision seems to me to go to the root of the contract."

In Watson v. McAllum (4) the letter ran: "We agree to sell the above for £ 1,775 subject to agreement stating fully the conditions being prepared and signed at our office on Monday."

Joyce, J, said: "What is the effect of the words 'subject to'? They introduced a condition or proviso."

Lastly in Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg v. Alexander (5), the case so much relied upon by the learned trial Judge, there was an offer by letter to accept £ 25,000 for the lease of a certain house and a reply by letter accepting 'subject to the following conditions,' and one condition was that the buyer approved her surveyors' report on the structure, and drainage, etc., another was that the buyer's Solicitors should approve of the title and the form of contract. The plaintiff did not approve of her surveyors' report, and the defendant withdrew the offer to sell.

It will be seen, therefore, that in all these cases the words 'subject to' were used and it was held that they imported a condition or proviso.

I may also refer to the decision of Jessel, M. R, in Crossley v. Maycock (6) where the learned Judge said:

"The principle which governs these cases is plain. If there is a simple acceptance of an offer to purchase, accompanied by a statement that the acceptor desires that the arrangement should be put into some more formal terms, the mere reference to such a proposal will not prevent the Court from enforcing the final agreement so arrived at."

Lastly the remarks of Spankie, J., in Whymper v. Buckle (7) seem directly in point. The learned Judge said:

"With all this authority before us we may safely conclude that, unless the defendants can show that by mutual consent there was a condition antecedent to a contract, to the effect that there should be no binding agreement until a written contract had been executed by the parties, or that the assent communicated in their letter of the 20th December 1877, was subject to the provision as to a written contract, then, assuming that any agreement has been proved, that agreement would be binding upon the parties. The case, therefore, must stand or fall to pieces on the evidence."

To say that the words "the conditions thereof are as follows," appearing in a document which has all the appearance of a final agreement, import that all that follows constitutes conditions antecedent to a contract is begging the question. An agreement having been executed, the defendant has to show that it was not to take effect until certain conditions precedent had been fulfilled.

It has been argued that some dispute might arise when drawing up the clause in the formal agreement corresponding to condition 4 in Exhibit A. Now to my mind that clause is perfectly clear. If the pending suits are not disposed of within six months, the agreement is to remain in force until they are disposed of. Disposal must mean final disposal. It could not be read into the clause that if the defendant got a decision in his favour in the first Court, the plaintiff would be bound to purchase without regard to the chance of the decision in the first Court being reversed on appeal. But the fact that a dispute might arise in drafting the formal agreement was considered by Lord Gordon in Rossiter v. Miller (1) in the passage I have referred to above and cannot in any way affect the question we have to determine, unless the defendant can show that the condition in clause 4 is so uncertain that it is patent that no agreement was arrived at and that the parties intended that the actual agreement should be settled thereafter when the bargain paper was executed. But that has not been shown, the question raised by the defendant's Solicitors whether the defendant's agreement was passing to and fro between the parties is no longer of any importance, as we have been told the suits have been settled and the defendants are free to convey, but as long as the suits were pending there would have been no difficulty that I can see, in the event of disputes arising over the terms of the agreement, in getting them or any others adjusted by the Court.

In my opinion, therefore, there was a binding agreement on the 22th November 1917 and the plaintiff is entitled to specific performance.

On the issues, I do not understand the form of the first issue and I think it should be struck out.

On the second issue I should say there was a concluded contract the terms of which are to be found in Exhibit A. I would answer issue No. (3) in the negative, issue No. (4) in the affirmative and issue No. (5) in the affirmative.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff's claim decreed with costs in both Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 66, 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Application to set aside sale on ground of omission to give notice of settlement of sale proclamation Appeal, whether lies—Appeal, second, whether competent—Limitation applicable—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 166, 181.

An application to set aside an execution sale on the ground of absence of notice of the settlement of the sale proclamation, as required by rule 66, Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, can only be considered under section 47 of the Code, and any order passed thereon is open to appeal and second appeal. [p. 810, col. 2.]

Such an application is governed by Article 166 and not by Article 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 813, col. 1.]

The failure to give notice to the judgment-debtor before setting a proclamation of sale would not of itself invalidate the sale. [p. 813, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut, dated 28th November 1917, in Appeal Suit No. 180 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 344 of 1917 of the District Court), preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Palghat, in Execution Appeals Nos. 3348 and 3568 of 1916, in Execution Petition No. 2091 of 1915 (Original Suit No. 74 of 1914).

The appeal against appellate order came on for hearing on the 25th of February 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar (with him Mr. P. R. Ramakrishna Aiyar), for the Respondents, raised the preliminary objection that no second appeal lay against the order. The application is one substantially under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code. Under section 104 (2) no second appeal lies.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.—A ground for setting aside a sale may be alleged de hors rule 90 and would be covered by section 47, Civil Procedure Code. One of the main grounds is that defendants had no notice of the settlement of the sale proclamation. That can only be considered under section 47. There is an appeal and a second appeal.

The absence of notice under Order XXI, rule 66, was due to the decree-holder's fraud. The judgment-debtor is entitled to rely on section 18 of the Limitation Act to save the bar. Even if there was no fraud, the sale itself is a nullity as it was held in defiance of a distinct statutory provision. Syam Mondal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (1).

The suit is not barred, the Article of the Limitation Act applicable being Article 181.

Messrs. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar and P. R. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.—There is no fraud in this case. The failure to issue notice was the fault of the ministerial staff of the Court. Section 18 of the Limitation Act cannot be availed of. Besides, the fraud complained of was anterior to the sale.

Article 166 of the Limitation Act applies and bars the application.

Under Order XXI, rule 66, the giving of notice is not a condition precedent to the validity of the execution proceedings as in Order XXI, rule 22.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of the appeal against appellate order on the ground that no second appeal lies. The application was by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale on various grounds. Many of them would be covered by Order XXI, rule 90. There is one allegation at least which is outside its scope. That allegation is that no notice was given to defendants Nos. 5 and 23 as required by rule 66, Order XXI, before the proclamation was settled. It was suggested that this is a matter relating to the publication or the conduct of the sale. We do not agree with this contention. There are at least three stages contemplated by rule 66. First the settlement of the proclamation, then its publication, and lastly the conduct of the sale in pursuance of it. The first of these stages is not a matter connected with the publication or the conduct of the sale. On the other hand, it is clearly anterior to both these processes. Now comes the question, as this complaint against the sale is not covered by section 90, whether a second appeal lies. It has been held in Anantharama Iyer v. Vettath Kuttimalu Kovilammal (2) a ground for setting aside a sale may be alleged de hors rule 90; and that such an allegation would be covered by section 47. It was contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that even if the allegation was within section 47, if it can also be brought under rule 90 of Order XXI, there will be no second appeal by virtue of the prohibition contained in section 104, clause (2). Asimuddi Sheikh v. Sundari Bibee (3) and Sheo Prasad Singh v Premma Kuar (4), have taken this view. Anantharama Iyer v. Vettath Kuttimalu Kovilammal (2) impliedly accepts this principle. However that may be, we are clear that the ground of complaint relating to the violation of rule 66 can only be considered under section 47. Therefore, there is an appeal and a second appeal against a decision relating thereto. We overrule the preliminary objection. On the merits, the point most pressed by Mr. Madhavan Nair is that the failure to give notice before settling the proclamation was an act of fraud which resulted in his clients being kept ignorant of the subsequent sale and that, therefore, they are entitled to rely on section 18 of the Limitation Act to save the bar. We must say that this allegation is not clearly made, but looking to the place in which it appears, we are not satisfied that the appellant did not complain of this procedure on the part of the decree-holder as fraudulent.

The Courts below, especially the lower Appellate Court, in dealing with the question of fraud, have relied on decisions which lay down that in order that section 18 may be applied, the fraud must be subsequent to the sale and not anterior. At this stage of the case, we prefer to express no opinion on this point. In our opinion, it is necessary that the Subordinate Judge should be directed to find specifically, whether the decree-holder fraudulently failed to give notice to defendants Nos. 5 and 23 as required by Order XXI, rule 66. On the return of the finding the question of materiality of the damage and its relation to the irregularity will be considered, as well as the question of law whether the fraud should be subsequent to the sale if section 18 is to be applied. Finding will be submitted in six weeks and seven days are allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ottapalam submitted the following

FINDING.—The case has been sent back for a specific finding whether the decree-holder fraudulently failed to give notice to the defendants Nos. 5 and 23 as required by Order XXI, rule 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

2. It is conceded on both sides that in settling the sale proclamation the District Munsif failed to comply with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 66 of the Code, requiring notice to be given to the decree-holder as well as the judgment-debtor before the proclamation is drawn up. The facts in connection with what happened in the executing Court will be found stated in paragraph 4 of my predecessor's judgment. It being admitted that notice was not in fact served on the defendants Nos. 5 and 23, the further question arises as to whether the omission was due to any fraudulent act or contrivance on the part of the decree-holder,

3. Mr. V. Raman Nair, who appeared for the defendants Nos. 5 and 23 at the hearing before me, sought to make out a case of fraud by an elaborate reference to the whole of the proceedings that took place before the lower Court both before and after the sale. His position was that fraud by its very nature is not susceptible of direct proof in cases like this and that the Court must infer it from a consideration of all the circumstances. On this basis I was taken through all the papers in the case and with special reference to the entries in the B. Diary. It was contended that there was no service at all on the defendants Nos. 5 and 23 at any time from the inception of execution proceedings owing to the decree-holder having already elaborated in his mind the scheme of fraud which he subsequently carried into effect at various stages of the execution case and that the Court must start with such non service of notice under Order XXI, rule 22, for judging of the later proceedings. The gross undervaluation of the 4th item in the sale proclamation and the fact that there were only three bidders in all, consisting of the decree-holder himself and two of his creatures, were also alleged to be material facts to be considered in arriving at a finding.

4. As regards the question of service of notice on the defendants Nos. 5 and 23 the District Munsif deals with the matter in paragraph 10 of his order, and taking into consideration the relationship of these parties with the other members of the Tarwad and the circumstances attending the service of processes, I think it must be held that there was valid service. It is true that the lower Court has not taken care to record in the order sheet that the defendants had been duly served. But where, as in the present case, the later proceedings show clearly that the Court considered that due service has been effected, the mere omission to pass a specific order on the return of the process-server that the process had been duly served is not of much consequence. I need only refer to Mahomed Mera Rowther v. Kadir Mera Rowther (5).

5. The main contention which forms the basis of the argument fails. There remains the specific point as to whether the omission to serve notices on the defendants Nos. 5 and 23 in connection with the settlement of the proclamation of sale under Order XXI, rule 66 (2), was due to the decree-holder's fraud. As to this the defendants have no case at all.

(5) 22 Ind. Cas. 302; (1914) M. W. N. 63,

6. There is absolutely nothing on record from which it can be suggested that fraud must have been at the bottom of the failure to observe the procedure laid down by the rule. Under section 287 of the former Code there was no provision at all for the issue of notice to the parties before the sale was settled by the Court. But when the section re-emerged in the new Code as Order XXI, rule 66, the words "after notice to the decree holder and the judgment-debtor" were added in clause 2, apparently with the object of rendering the proclamation as full and accurate as possible by calling upon the parties to contribute such facts within their knowledge as would help the Court in arriving at a correct estimate of the particulars to be inserted in the proclamation A subsidiary object may possibly have been to prevent the parties from afterwards questioning the sale on the ground of want of knowledge. However this may be, the fact remains that the provision for previous notice to the decree holder and the judgment-debtor has been newly introduced in the present Code and it emphasizes the view held by the Courts that an execution sale is primarily the act of the Court itself. See Raja of Kalahasti v. Maharajah of Venkatagiri (6). It is thus obvious that whether notice is given or not to the parties in connection with the drawing up of the sale proclamation, it is in the first instance a matter for which the Court alone is responsible. This is made all the more clear by the provision that notice should issue to the decree-holder also. It is the latter that sets the Court in motion by his execution petition praying for sale of property and in no case could any step be taken in execution without his knowledge or active co operation. Further, with regard to sales it is the decree-holder that prepares and files in Court the draft proclamation which is to be accepted afterwards with or without amendments by the Court. That notwithstanding these well known facts the Legislature should have thought it necessary to require in the new Code that a notice must go to him quite as much as to the judgment debtor calling their attention to the fact that the Court is about to settle the terms of the sale is almost conclusive as to the Court being made solely responsible for the sale, proclamation. In a case, therefore, of an allegation of fraud as regards the omission to issue notice under Order XXI, rule 66, to the judgment-debtor there must be clear and positive evidence that the decree holder contrived by some act or other to mislead the Court into not doing its duty and to stay its hand in the matter of issue of notice. Short of this, it may be pointed out, a charge of fraud must inevitably break down.

7. In the present case the records show that the District Munsif overlooked the additions introduced in rule 66 and that he alone was responsible for not passing an order for the issue of notice to the parties. In my opinion, the decree-holder, whatever complexion his other acts may bear in the matter of the execution sale, must be pronounced to be innocent of any fraudulent act or complicity in connection with the question of notice under rule 66.

8. There would be some substance in the defendants' contention if the decree-holder had put in a separate application for settlement of sale [vide Order XXI, rule 66, clause (3) and if it were shown that he managed to get the Court to pass orders on it without notice to the defendants by means of some device or subterfuge. But what happened was something quite different. The decree-holder filed an execution petition once for all and that was being kept on the file and various steps taken. Most of the defendants had appeared and had taken time to satisfy the decree. At this stage of the proceedings the defendants' attention seems to have been concentrated on the effort to raise money and pay off the decree-holder. This they were unable to do and eventually their Pleader intimated he had no instructions. On the same day the Court called for the usual papers for holding the sale and then further proceedings ensued. It was for the Court to have ordered notice to issue on the parties as soon as the papers were filed. But as stated above, the District Munsif was apparently unaware of the newly added provisions as to notice in Order XXI, rule 66. He also overlooked the provisions of rule 150 of the "Civil Rules of Practice, 1905," which provide for the settlement of the proclamation of sale after notice to the judgment-debtor or other party whose property is to be sold and after hearing his objections, if any.

9. The decree-holder's Vakil dwelt upon the imperfections in the defendants' affidavit, which omits to give any details or particulars of the fraud set up and based a series of arguments thereon. In the view I take of the question remitted it is not necessary to deal with this aspect of the case.

10. I find that the failure to give notice under Order XXI, rule 66, was due to inadvertence on the part of the executing Court and that the decree-holder was not responsible for it in any way.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The finding is not attacked, and, therefore, accepting it, we dismiss from consideration the argument based on section 18 of the Limitation Act.

It is then contended that, as the petitioners were parties to the litigation, the Article of Schedule I of the Limitation Act to be applied is No. 181, not No. 166. This is contended with reference to the recent decision of the Full Bench in A. A. A. O. No. 103 of 1917, Thattantavita v. Puthalathau Kandi Kombi Aliassan (7). But that decision dealt with a claim to apply Article No. 165 and we do not think that its application and that of Article No. 166 stand on the same footing or can be dealt with on similar considerations. We have not been shown reasons for restricting the very comprehensive wording of the latter to exclude the present case.

Lastly it is urged that the sale is unsustainable on its merits, because owing to the absence of notice to petitioners of the proceedings for framing proclamation it was held without jurisdiction and is a nullity. Syam Mondal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (1) is referred to in this connection But there the notice, absence of which was relied on, was one required by Order XXI, rule 22, and its issue was a condition precedent to the validity of any execution proceedings. The notice referred to in Order XXI, rule 66, is an incident in the course of execution proceedings, the validity of which is independent of it. Taking this view we disallow this contention also. The appeal against appellate order is dismissed with costs.

KISHAN DAYAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

RODU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND Musammat BAHADRI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS —RESPONDENTS.

Construction of document—Intention of parties—Conduct—Mortgage by several joint owners—Transaction, whether divisible—Refusal of one to execute, effect of.

Plaintiff sued for a declaratory decree to the effect that certain land was liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree against the defendants. It appeared that the land was released from attachment on the objection of K., who contended that it had been mortgaged to him. The mortgage deed was drawn up in favour of K and was to have been executed by three persons, who were joint owners in equal shares of the land in dispute. One of these three refused to execute it on the ground that it was without consideration:

Held, (1) that as the mortgage deed was not signed and executed by all three joint owners of the land, it was incomplete and conferred no rights whatever upon K.; [p. 814, col. 1.]

(2) that the mortgage was intended to be one single and indivisible transaction and could not be split up [p. 814, cols. 1 & 2]

The construction to be put on a particular transaction must depend upon the intention of the parties as inferred from their acts and conduct. [p. 814, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge of Kangra at Dharmsala, dated the 20th January 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Class, Nurpur, District

Kangra, dated the 30th May 1918, decreeing the claim with costs.

Mr. Badrud Din Qureshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal for Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs sued for a declaratory decree to the effect that 4 kanals 3 marlas of land which had been released from attachment by order of the Court, dated the 8th October 1917, were actually liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. It appears that after the land had been attached by the decree-holder, one Kishan Dayal, defendant No. 4, objected to the attachment on the ground that the land had been mortgaged to him by an unregistered deed, dated the 25th November 1916, for Rs. 35. His objection was upheld, the property was released, and the decree-holder accordingly brought the present suit. It appears that the mortgage deed was drawn up in favour of Kishan Dayal and was to have been executed by Salo, Santu and Musammat Bahadri, who are joint owners in equal shares of the land in suit. The deed was duly signed and executed by Salo and Santu, but Musammat Bahadri refused to execute it on the ground that it was without consideration. The first Court held that the mortgage deed was incomplete and gave no rights to Kishan Dayal and that consequently plaintiffs were entitled to the decree prayed for. The Additional Judge on appeal upheld the order of the first Court and upon the same ground. He further held that the mortgage was not effected bona fide, that no mutation had taken place, and that even up to the date of suit Kishan Dayal had made no attempt to have mutation effected in his favour. He also points out that it has been proved that the land is still in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, though the mortgage was supposed to be with possession, and that it is defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who have been paying land revenue.

The defendant Kishan Dayal has appealed to this Court, and on his behalf it is contended that the mortgage was effectual, if not against Musammat Bahadri, at all events to the extent of the shares of Salo and Santu. After hearing Counsel on both sides I am of opinion that in the present case the mortgage was intended to be one indivisible transaction and that it cannot be split up in the manner desired by the appellant. It is further obvious that the mortgage was not a genuine transaction and that none of the parties to it intended that it should be acted upon. In cases of this kind the construction to be put on a particular transaction must depend upon the intention of the parties as inferred from their acts and conduct, and in the present case, even if it can be assumed that the transaction was intended to be genuine, there is nothing in the deed itself to shew that the mortgage was not one single and indivisible transaction but in actual fact three separate and distinct mortgages effected by one instrument. The consideration was stated in a lump sum and there is no specification of the shares of the mortgagors. I hold, therefore, that unless and until the deed was signed and executed by all three joint owners of the land, it was, as found by the lower Courts, incomplete and conferred no rights whatever upon Kishan Dayal, defendant No. 4.

This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 7, 94, 95, O. XXXVIII, r. 5, O. L—Provincial Small Cause Court, power of, to attach moveables before judgment—Orders excluded from jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

A Provincial Small Cause Court or a Court exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court has power to attach moveables before judgment. [p. 815, col. 2.]

The orders excluded from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court are those specifically mentioned in section 94 of the Civil Procedure Code as injunctions or interlocutory orders, that is to say, orders under clause (c) or clause (e) of the section. [p. 815, col. 1.]

Civil reference by the Munsif, 2nd Court, Alipore, dated June 10, 1918.

NANAK GIR v. KISHEN KAUR.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra (Senior Government Pleader), for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under rule 1, Order XLVI, of the Civil Procedure Code by the Munsif of the 2nd Court at Alipore vested with Small Cause Court powers. The point referred is whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has the power to attach moveables before judgment.

The provision of the Code relating to attachment before judgment is rule 5, Order XXXVIII. Order L of the First Schedule of the Code provides that certain portions of that schedule shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court under that Act. It is quite clear that there is nothing in Order L to prevent Small Cause Courts exercising powers of attachment before judgment.

The only other provision in the Code that requires to be considered is section 7 of the body of the Code. Under that section, sections 94 and 95, so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders, do not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts or Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes.

The referring Munsif seems to have thought that all orders under section 94, including those under clause (b) of that section, must be held to be interlocutory orders. In dealing with this reference it is not necessary to consider whether orders for attachment before judgment can under any circumstances be regarded as interlocutory orders: but we are certainly of the opinion that for the purpose of interpreting clause (b) of section 7 of the Code, an attachment before judgment is not one of the interlocutory orders there referred to. If it was intended to exclude from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts the powers to make any order of the nature described in section 94, the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" would be superfluous. In our opinion, the only orders excluded are those specifically mentioned in section 94 as injunctions or interlocutory orders, that is to say, orders under clause (c) or clause (e) of section 94. We do not think that the new Code of Civil Procedure has made any change in the former law, and we answer the point referred by saying that a Provincial Small Cause Court has the power to attach moveables before judgment.

Answer accordingly.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this suit out of which this appeal has arisen are the following:—Nihal Gir, a Subedar in the army, acquired the property in suit and was in possession of it till his death in 1897. He left on his death two widows Jai Dai and Naraini. After him his widow Jai Dai and his son Harnam Gir, succeeded to the property. Harnam Gir died in 1905 leaving a widow Musammat Khemi, two sons Bishen Gir and Kishen Gir and three daughters Musammat Kishen Kaur, Musammat Bishen Kaur and Musammat Santi. His share was inherited by his two sons Kishen Gir and Bishen Gir. The latter having died in 1907 was succeeded by his surviving brother. Musammat Jai Dai having died in 1908 Kishen Gir succeeded to her share also. Kishen Gir having died, the names of his grandmother Musammat Naraini and her nephew (sister's son Nanak Gir) were entered in the revenue papers as his successors. Thereupon Musammat Khemi, the widow of Harnam Gir, and one Kanhya Gir, a nephew of Nihal Gir, instituted a suit against Musammat Naraini and Nanak Gir for the possession of the property in dispute. The case eventually came up in appeal before the Chief Court. During the pendency of the appeal in the Chief Court Musammat Naraini having died, the appeal was prosecuted by Nanak Gir alone as the sole surviving appellant. It was contended on his behalf that assuming that he had no title to the land in dispute Kanhya Gir, respondent, had no right of succession in the presence of the daughters of Harnam Gir as the land was the self-acquired property of Nihal Gir. It may be noted here that Musammat Khemi, having contracted a second marriage, had been held by the Divisional Judge to have forfeited her life estate as the mother of Kishen Gir. The dispute in the appeal was, therefore, between Nanak Gir on the one hand and Kanhya Gir on the other. It was admitted by the Counsel of Kanhya Gir at the hearing of the appeal before the Chief Court that the daughters of Harnam Gir had a right to succeed to the property in preference to his client. The learned Judges accordingly allowed the appeal on the ground that in the presence of the daughters of Harnam Gir, Kanhya Gir had no right to sue for the ejectment of Nanak Gir. The appeal was accordingly allowed and the suit was dismissed.

The present suit has now been instituted by the three minor daughters of Harnam Gir for the possession of the property in dispute, on the ground that under the law they are entitled to succeed to the property left by their brother Kishen Gir who has left no issue. The suit was contested by Nanak Gir, defendant, on the ground that he being the chela of Nihal Gir, who was a sanyasi, had a preferential right to succeed and that the plaintiffs as the sisters of Kishen Gir had no superior right of succession. Both the Courts below have held as a fact that Nanak Gir has failed to prove that he was a chela of Nihal Gir. They have held that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed to the property left by Kishen Gir and have given a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the possession of the property in dispute.

Nanak Gir has come up in second appeal to this Court and fourteen grounds of appeal have been taken in the memorandum of appeal on his behalf. Most of the pleas taken either challenge findings of fact or raise irrelevant questions. The only relevant question that has been urged before us and which we are called upon to decide, is whether under the circumstances of this case the plaintiffs are entitled to come in as the heirs of their brother Kishen Gir, the last owner. Having regard to the rulings in Multani Chand v. Lala Mal (1), Raghunath Kuari v Munnan Misr (2), Mari v. Chinnammal (3) and Nallanna v. Ponnal (4) referred to by the Court of first instance in its judgment, there can be no doubt that sisters can come in as Bandhus under the Hindu Law. The decision of the question will, however, depend upon the special circumstances of each case and on the consideration of the respective relationship of the contending parties. In this case, however, there is no difficulty in deciding the question, as the defendant Nanak Gir is admittedly an utter stranger and has no right to compete with the plaintiffs. He has failed to prove that he was a chela of Nihal Gir.

In this view the decisions of the Courts below are correct and the appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Discharge, order of—Revision by Sessions Judge or District Magistrate—Further enquiry, when to be directed.

The power of revision granted to a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, to direct further enquiry in a case of discharge by a Subordinate Magistrate is not to be exercised as if the case were being heard on appeal. The Revisional Court has only to see whether the evidence is of such a character that it is possible to come to only one conclusion upon it, viz., that the accused has been guilty and that there has been a miscarriage of justice consequent upon the one-sided or perverse view taken by the trial Magistrate. [p 818, col. 1.]

Queen-Empress v. Balasinnatambi, 14 M 334 (F. B.); 1 M. L. J. 343; 2 Weir 557 5 Ind Dec. (N. S.) 234; Narayanaswami Naidu v. Emperor, 1 Ind. Cas. 228; 32 M 220; 5 M. L. T 233 (F. B.); 19 M. L. J. 157; 9 Cr. L. J. 192, explained.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 20th December 1918, of the Court of Session of the Coimbatore Division, in Criminal Revision Petition No. 34 of 1918, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Acting Third Class Magistrate, Dharmapuram, in C. C. No. 227 of 1918.

FACTS.—On a charge of hurt, the accused were discharged after the examination of the prosecution witnesses. The complainant applied in revision to the Sessions Judge, who simply affirmed the order of discharge on the findings of the lower Court. Hence the present revision petition.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—Section 437 read with section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it incumbent on the Sessions Judge to apply his mind to the facts alleged and the evidence adduced in the case and see for himself whether the findings of the Magistrate are correct. An incorrect finding is one of the things to be examined into on revision. The judgment must show that such examination has taken place. It is not enough to say that there is no reason to interfere. Reasons must be stated why the discharge is to be confirmed. The powers on revision are fully dealt with in Queen-Empress v. Balasinnatambi (1) and Narayanaswami Naidu v. Emperor (2).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—That the Sessions Judge thinks that there has been misappreciation of evidence is no ground for interference.]

When a discharge is challenged as improper, he is bound to consider the grounds of impeachment.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Granting that he is bound to consider, he is not bound to interfere unless he considers the discharge as improper. At any rate the High Court won't interfere unless it can be shown that the only conclusion possible on the evidence was as to the guilt of the accused.]

Mr. V. C. Sesha Chariar, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge of Coimbatore refusing to interfere with the order of discharge made by the Subordinate Magistrate. The accused was charged under section 323, Indian Penal Code, with having beaten the complainant with what is known as Sattaivar or rope attached to a stick which is not infrequently used in villages. The Magistrate came to the conclusion, after taking into account the medical evidence in the case, that the evidence as to the beating was discrepant and that there were no sufficient grounds for believing that the accused acted in the manner suggested by the prosecution. Thereupon an application was made to the Sessions Judge to direct further enquiry. It is to be regretted that the Sessions Judge has not expressed any opinion upon the evidence in the case. That would have put an end to this revision petition. He has proceeded upon grounds which one might say are not quite relevant to the consideration of what ought to have been taken into account in dealing with a petition under section 437. Mr. Sesha Aiyangar drew my attention to the fact that the Appellate ASIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR.

Judge, be he a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge, who deals with an application under section 437 has larger powers than the High Court has in dealing with similar matters. It is true, as has been pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Balasinnatambi (1) and Narayanaswami Naidu v. Emperor (2), the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate can come to the conclusion that there has been an improper appreciation of the evidence, and that the Magistrate should be directed to further enquire into the truth of the complaint. I do not understand the decisions to lay down that the Appellate Court has to act as if it were hearing an appeal in a criminal case. The powers with which the Magistrate or Sessions Judge is clothed are powers of revision; and in exercising those powers of revision what the Appellate Court has to see is whether the evidence is of such a character that it is possible to come to only one conclusion upon it, namely, that the accused has been guilty. The mere fact that if he had heard the evidence himself he would have come to a different conclusion on the facts would not ordinarily be a sufficient ground for setting aside the order of discharge. It may not be a question of perversity, but it must be very near it. The Appellate Court must satisfy itself that there has been a miscarriage of justice consequent upon the one-sided or perverse view taken by the trial Magistrate. The Legislature, if Mr. Sesha Aiyangar's contention is accepted, has given to the complainant a right of appeal in all cases of discharge. In my opinion, unless the Appellate Court is satisfied that there has been either of the elements which I have already indicated, it should not set aside the order of discharge. I have made these observations, as questions relating to the setting aside of the order of discharge have come before me frequently during the last two or three weeks and I think it desirable that I should express my view on this question of law. As I said before, the Sessions Judge would have done well if he had expressed his own opinion on the facts of the case. As he has not done so, I heard Mr. Sesha Aiyangar upon the facts and I am satisfied that if I were the Sessions Judge I would not have set aside the order of discharge. I have heard the evidence read and I am clear that the conclusion come to by the Sessions Judge is not unwarranted or that the Magistrate's conclusion is so one-sided or perverse as to have called for interference by the Appellate Court. For these reasons I am of opinion that the order of the Sessions Judge must be sustained though not for the reasons given by him.

I dismiss the petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Order directing prosecution—No evidence on which conviction can be based—Order, legality of.

Where there is no evidence on the record to show that an accused person is guilty of the offence with which he is charged, an order for his prosecution under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is bad in law and must be set aside. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Abdul Sattar v. Emperor, 48 Ind. Cas. 894; (1918) Pat. 352; 20 Cr. L. J. 94; Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor, 4 Ind Cas. 710; 37 C. 250; 14 C. W. N. 330; 10 C. L. J. 564; 11 Cr. L. J. 37, followed.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sitamarhi, dated the 4th June 1919, sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioners under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for offences committed under section 196, 471/109 and 196/109, Indian Penal Code.

Messrs. Ahghar, Gajendra Prosad Das and Gour Chandra Pal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sitamarhi sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioners under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for offences alleged to have been committed under section 196, 471, 471/109 and 196/109, Indian Penal Code.

It appears to me, reading the affidavit which has been placed before me, that there is absolutely no evidence on the record to justify the conviction of the petitioners under the sections which I have just enumerated. It has been held by this Court in the case of Abdul Sattar v. Emperor (1) that where there is no evidence on the record to show that the petitioner was guilty of any offence with which he is charged, the order for his prosecution is bad in law and should be set aside. Mr. Justice Mookerjee, in the case of Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2), expressed the same view. He said: "The principle which should guide Courts in taking action under section 195 or 476 is now well settled. No sanction should be granted unless there is a reasonable probability of conviction." On the materials on the record I am of opinion that there is no reasonable probability of conviction and that, therefore, the order under section 476 is bad, and I accordingly direct that the order sanctioning the prosecution be set aside and that no further proceedings be taken in the matter.

Order set aside.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill. (a)—"Soon after," meaning of—Person found in possession of stolen goods one year after theft, whether bound to explain possession—Presumption—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411.

The expression "soon after" in section 114, ill. (a), of the Evidence Act would not apply to the case of goods discovered thirteen months after the theft. [p. 819, col. 2; p. 820, col. 1.]

A person found in possession of stolen goods 2 or 3 years after the theft is not bound to explain his possession thereof. [p. 820, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Sessions Court, Bellary, in Criminal Appeal No. 19 of 1919, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub Divisional 1st Class Magistrate, Anantapur, in Calendar Case No. 2 of 1919.

FACTS.—The accused was convicted under section 411, Indian Penal Code, on the ground that "he, in January 1919, was found in possession of certain articles lost by one V. in December 1917." Reliance was placed by the Court below on illustration (a) to section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.—The presumption under the illustration (a) to section 114 of the Evidence Act arises only when the possession is found to be soon after the theft. There is no allegation in the present case that a theft took place. Loss is not always theft. Further, the possession was only more than a year after. It has been held in Ina Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (1) that such long interval precludes the presumption. That case has been followed in District Magistrate of Bellary v. Obbava (2) (Miller, J.) and in Criminal Revision Case No. 320 of 1919 (Spencer and Krishnan, JJ.)

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor.—The effect of the interval is taken away by the other circumstances in the case. It is found that the accused is a habitual offender and properties stolen from various other persons were recovered from him.

ORDER.—The conviction must be quashed. The Sessions Judge begins his judgment by saying, "There is no time limit, however, applicable to the presumption in section 114 (a) of the Indian Evidence Act" (Act I of 1872). The section is clear upon the point. It says that "the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession." Certainly 13 months after the theft is not

"soon after." Moreover, the evidence of P. W. No. 7 shows that he lost the articles some two or three years before. Even granting that the evidence of P. W. No. 7 is to be accepted in its entirety that the articles now found out belonged to him, as pointed out in Ina Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (1), this is not a case in which the accused should be called upon to explain his possession. Miller, J., in District Magistrate of Bellary v. Obbava (2) took the same view and that has since been approved in Criminal Revision Case No. 320 of 1919. I am in entire accord with the observations in Ina Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (1) and I think that the Magistrate was wrong in thinking that the accused was bound to explain his possession of the articles.

I was told that there were other articles found in an open well in the compound of the accused which was accessible to all. It does not follow because certain articles were found in a well which could have been reached by other persons, that the accused should have put them into the well having known them to be stolen property. In my opinion the evidence upon which the conviction is based is wholly insufficient to sustain a conviction. I set aside the conviction and direct the bail bond to be cancelled.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350—Transfer of Magistrate—Trial de novo—Return of Magistrate—Trial, whether can be started from stage at which it had arrived before transfer.

When on the transfer of a Magistrate a criminal case pending before him is taken up by another Magistrate and the trial is started de novo, the proceedings which had already taken place before the Magistrate who has been transferred are wiped out, and section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives no jurisdiction to such Magistrate on his re-transfer to the district to proceed with the trial from the point where he had left it. Messrs. Gour Chandra Pal and Harihar Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The petitioners in this case, Jago Singh and Hurnandan Singh, have been convicted under section 325, Indian Penal Code. Jago Singh has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that north of the petitioner's house there is a plot of parti land which is claimed by both the complainant in the case and by the present petitioners. On this land and close to the wall of the petitioners' house the complainant dug the foundation for a cowshed. After the trench for the foundation had been dug and while the complainant was away, the two petitioners came and began to fill up the ditch, one with a kodoli and the other with his hands. While they were doing this, the complainant came on the scene and struck the petitioner Jago with a lathi. Hurnandan went into his house and fetched out a spear with which he attacked the complainant and some others who were with him, and then Jago went into the house and fetched out a sword with which he also attacked them. The result was that the complainant and his friends were severely wounded.

Three points are urged before us on behalf of the petitioners. First, that they have not exceeded the right of private defence; secondly, that the procedure adopted in the trial is wholly illegal, and thirdly, that the Trying Magistrate went and inspected the locality and, without making any report of his proceedings or what he saw, has imported the result of his inspection into his judgment. There does not appear to be any force in the first contention. It may be that the petitioners have a claim to the land upon which the complainant dug the trench, but they had no right to go into their house and fetch out deadly weapons and with them to attack the complainant.

On the second point, however, it appears to me that the petitioners must succeed. What happened is this. The case was first taken up by the Assistant Magistrate Mr. Thadani and the whole of the prosecution witnesses were examined and cross-examined. At this stage Mr. Thadani was transferred and the Sub-Divisional Officer withdrew the case to his own file. In accordance with their right under section 350 the accused demanded a de novo trial. The trial was accordingly started again and was proceeded with by the Sub Divisional Magistrate, who examined some of the prosecution witnesses. Mr. Thadani then again returned to Monghyr and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate re-transferred the case to his file, with the direction that he was to take it up from the point where he, Mr. Thadani, had left it. This Mr. Thadani did. He finished the trial and the petitioners were convicted and sentenced as has already been stated.

The procedure adopted is wholly illegal. When the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took the case on his own file and started the trial de novo, the proceedings before the Assistant Magistrate were wiped out and section 350 gave the Assistant Magistrate no jurisdiction to proceed on the evidence which he had already recorded when the case was re-transferred to him again. It is not a case covered by section 350 at all. Consequently the question of material prejudice does not arise.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to consider the last point which has been urged. I would only say that the Assistant Magistrate should have made a record of what he observed and what he did at the time of the local inspection.

The conviction and sentences must, therefore, be set aside and the case remanded for re-hearing.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Case remanded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 439, 476—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 18—Petition before Magistrate asking that enquiry might be made—Allegations found to be false—Order directing prosecution, legality of—Jurisdiction—Revision—High Court, interference by.

Accused presented a petition before a Magistrate, stating that a certain person was collecting men and that the accused was under the apprehension that the object was to cause him some injury, and asked that an enquiry might be made through the Police. After the enquiry the Magistrate, holding that the petition was false and vexatious, directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under section 182 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the accused having given information to a Magistrate which had been held to be false and which was intended to cause the Magistrate to use his lawful powers to the injury or annoyance of another within the meaning of section 182 of the Penal Code, the order directing the prosecution of the accused could not be said to be illegal. [p. 822, col. 2; p. 823, col. 1.]

The mere fact that the High Court would, if dealing with a certain matter, have come to a conclusion different from that arrived at by a Subordinate Court is no reason for setting aside in revision an order which is not illegal [p. 823, col. 1.]

The Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Arrah giving sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code for having committed an offence under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code. There was an application against this order before the learned Sessions

SADHU CHARAN SINGH v. UDHO PRASAD SINGH.

Judge of Arrah, but the learned Sessions Judge thought that the finding of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer was perhaps open to objection on the ground of vagueness. But he saw nothing illegal in the Magistrate's procedure which would warrant a reference under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Accordingly he rejected the application.

It is argued before me by Mr. Yunus on behalf of the petitioner that the petition presented by his client before the Police, which is the foundation of the proceedings against him, does not contain a single word which is false and, therefore, he cannot be put on trial for having committed an offence under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code.

It appears that there have been various disputes between the petitioner and the daughter and son-in-law of Babu Nathuni Singh, who died leaving a Will by which he bequeathed his property to his daughter and son-in-law. There have been probate proceedings between the parties and there have been various criminal disputes between the parties.

The petition presented by the petitioner before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate states that Udho Prasad Singh was collecting people from villages. He says that the pretext put forward by Udho Prasad Singh was that they had come for a jalsa, but his apprehension was that steps might be taken against him and his relatives. He thereupon asked for an enquiry to be made at once through the Superintendent of Police as to the fact why the aforesaid person was collecting people. He then proceeds to say that his presence in the Court may be taken note of and protection afforded to him. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate thought after the Police enquiry that the petition was false, vexatious and annoying, and thereupon he has granted sanction under section 476 of the Code to prosecute the petitioner.

Mr. Yunus on behalf of the petitioner argues that there is not a single statement in the whole petition which may be said to be false. There was undoubtedly, he says, a collection of people for the jalsa. Undoubtedly (that is his next argument) the petitioner had an apprehension in his mind that some steps might be taken against him by the people who had collected, and, as he points out, there were various criminal disputes between the parties which naturally may have caused him a certain amount of alarm. But the question still remains that he did ask for an enquiry and an enquiry was undoubtedly made by the Police. Reading the petition as a whole, it appears to me that he does make a charge against Udho Prasad Singh and others for having collected people from the villages for causing him some sort of harm. It is quite possible that there was some apprehension in his mind that they might really do him some harm, and it is not for me now to express any opinion on the case at all. It would not be proper that I should. But clearly there was a charge against the opposite party for having collected people from the villages to cause him injury. The question, therefore, is, does it not come under section 182, Indian Penal Code? The charge against him may be false; it may be proved to be false on evidence, but can I at this stage interfere with the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate? The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that he had no power at all and in my opinion he has come to a correct conclusion on this point.

Now the question is, did the petitioner give any information to any public servant which he knew or believed to be false intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that it will thereby cause such public servant to use the lawful power of such public servant to cause injury to any person? That is the whole point. He undoubtedly has given information to a public servant. It has got to be determined in the trial whether that information is false or whether he believed it to be false. I cannot at this stage express any opinion on the point, nor can the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate who disposed of this application. He undoubtedly made the application in order that such public servant may make an enquiry, and of course the whole subject matter of the charge against him now is that his object was to cause the public servant to use the lawful power to the injury or annoyance of some person. I am of opinion that there is no point of law in this matter and that, therefore, I cannot interfere with the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The case seems to me a very trifling one and it is quite possible that no more than a technical offence under that section has been committed by the petitioner. It is quite possible that if I had to deal with that application myself I would have come to another conclusion, but that is no ground at all for setting aside in revision an order which is not an illegal order at all. I, therefore, refuse the application.

Application refused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 520—Notice, whether necessary—Order passed in favour of person, whether should be set aside behind his back.

Although section 520 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not prescribe the issue of notice to any person before an order under that section is passed, yet it is a general principle of law that an order duly passed by a competent authority in favour of any person should not be set aside without that person being heard.

Criminal revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Raipur, dated the 20th August 1917, in Miscellaneous Case No. 49 of 1917.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The order of the Sessions Judge in this matter is not supported either by the learned Standing Counsel for the Crown or by the non-applicant's Pleaders. It was passed without hearing the present applicant, to whom at the close of the non-applicant's prosecution for criminal breach of trust the property in dispute was delivered with the non-applicant's consent. The prosecution in fact was only withdrawn by the Police because the non-applicant professed his readiness to allow the property to be so delivered

It is true that section 520, Criminal Procedure Code, does not prescribe the issue of a notice to any person before an order under that section is passed. But it is a general principle of law that an order duly passed by competent authority in favour of any person should not be set aside without that person being heard. If particular authority is required to support this proposition, I would refer to Laxman Rangu, In re (1).

The Sessions Judge's order is set aside and he will now proceed to dispose of the application made to him under section 520, Criminal Procedure Code, after giving notice thereof and of the date fixed for hearing to Musamnat Rajrani.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 36, 530 (h)—Trial before Bench of Magistrates—Evidence recorded in absence of one member, effect of—Conviction, legality of.

It is illegal for a Bench of Honorary Magistrates to convict in a case in which the evidence is recorded and the judgment delivered in the absence of one of the members of the Bench.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the 1st Class Deputy Magistrate, Peddapur Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 83 of 1918, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the 2nd Class Bench Magistrates, Cocanada, in B. C. No. 2276 of 1917.

SHYAM BEHARI SINGH v. SAGAR SINGH.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Petitioners.—The conviction is illegal. The judgment is not that of the whole Bench. One of the Bench Magistrates was absent when witnesses were examined. The trial should not have gone on during his absence. The judgment also was delivered during his absence. The irregularity vitiates the trial. See Subramania Iyer, In re (1).

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—It is only an irregularity which has not prejudiced the accused. In any case the judgment was that of the majority.

ORDER.—It appears from the affidavit filed and the attendance register that one of the Magistrates, Hussain Khan Sahib, was absent on the 2nd May 1918 when the case was taken up and witnesses examined and also on the 25th July 1918 when judgment was delivered.

I think that the absence on the 2nd May 1919 of one of the Magistrates vitiates the conviction. I need only refer to Subramania Iyer, In re (1), where it was held by Ayling, J., that a conviction was illegal. A similar view was taken by a Bench of this Court in Criminal Revision Case No. 416 of 1918 (Criminal Revision Petition No. 357 of 1918).

I set aside the conviction and direct that the case be retried by the 2nd Class Magistrate of Cocanada. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside and retrial ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 248, 345—Withdrawal of complaint as against one of several accused, effect of—Compounding offence with regard to one of several accused, effect of.

Section 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates the withdrawal of a complaint as a whole. Where a complaint against several accused persons is withdrawn as against one of them, the withdrawal amounts to a withdrawal of the whole complaint in respect of all the accused. [p 825, col 1.]

The compounding of an offence in regard to one of several accused persons amounts to a compounding of the offence in regard to all. [p. 825, col. 1.]

Mr. A. Sami, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—In this case a complaint was made under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and section 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act against two persons, Sham Behari Singh and Hurnandan Singh. After process had issued the complainant, Sagar Singh, filed a petition to the effect that Hurnandan Singh had expressed his sorrow, that he had accepted his apology and asked that he should be acquitted without hearing. The case was then proceeding against the other accused Sham Behari Singh, when he filed a petition contending that as the offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, had been compounded and as the case under section 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act had been withdrawn by the complainant as against Hurnandan Singh, the whole offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, had been compounded and the whole complaint under section 24 had been withdrawn, and he asked that he also should be acquitted.

The learned Deputy Magistrate rejected this application, and on an application in revision to the District Magistrate it was held by him that the compounding of the offence under section 323, Indian Penal Code, with Hurnandan Singh did not affect the other accused, Sham Behari Singh, and that there was no withdrawal of the complaint under section 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act at all.

Against this order the present application in revision has been made. Different views have been taken by the Courts in India, KRISHNASWAMI IYER, In re.

By the Calcutta High Court it has been held that the compounding of an offence in regard to one accused is a compounding of the offence in regard to all: Chandra Kumar Das v. Emperor (1). This view has been dissented from by the Madras High Court, but in our opinion the view of the Calcutta High Court is the correct one.

So far as the case under section 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act is concerned, it is clear that the petition which was filed, asking that Hurnandan Singh should be acquitted without hearing, was withdrawal of the complaint so far as it concerned him. Section 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code, however, contemplates the withdrawal of the complaint, that is, the complaint as a whole. The complaint in this case was one against both the accused and although only one accused is mentioned in the withdrawal petition, it is a withdrawal of the whole complaint and consequently a withdrawal of the complaint in respect of both accused. The order of the District Magistrate must, therefore, be set aside and the petitioner must be acquitted.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Mr. A. V. Narayanswami Iyer, for the Accused.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act for having left his car without a light contrary to rule 16-A of the Madras Motor Vehicle Rules.

Rule 16A states that no person may cause or permit a motor vehicle to stand or be used in a public place between half an hour after sunset or half an hour before sunrise unless it carries lights burning as stated in the rule.

Before the owner of a motor vehicle can be convicted for an offence under this rule it must be shown that he caused or permitted the car to stand without lights burning. As pointed out by the Punjab Chief Court in Sohan Singh v. Emperor (1), rules cannot apply to an absent owner.

There is no evidence that the accused knew that the car had no lights burning or permitted it to stand without lights. The evidence is that he purchased and put oil lights on the car and that his chauffeur was also given carbide. He was not in the car or so near it as to be aware that the lamps were not lighted.

I set aside the conviction and direct that the fine be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Appellate Court, power of, to take additional evidence, limits of—Evidence improperly admitted—Order directing prosecution based on such evidence, legality of.

Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code does not provide that in order to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party additional evidence may be admitted in appeal. It only provides that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence, the Court might admit additional evidence. [p. 827, cols. 1 & 2.]

The legitimate occasion for the use of the power conferred by Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code on an Appellate Court is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. [p. 827, col. 1.]

Where additional evidence is improperly admitted in appeal, the Court has no jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of a witness on the basis of such evidence and an order made under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code in such a case cannot be sustained. [p. 827, col. 2.]

Civil criminal revision against the order of the District Judge, Chapra, directing the prosecution of the petitioner under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code passed by the learned District Judge of Chapra.

It is necessary to state the facts very briefly.

It appears that on the 17th of November 1916 Ram Lagan, who is the opposite party in these proceedings, took a zurpeshgee lease from a lady of the name of Phulesra Kuer for a consideration of Rs. 899. There were two previous mortgages affecting the property in favour of the petitioner, one for Rs. 149-14 and the other for Rs. 70, and the petitioner was in possession of the property by virtue of the two previous mortgages. It was provided in the document executed by Phulesra Kuer in favour of Ram Lagan that Ram Lagan should discharge the two debts due to the petitioner and that he should pay the lady the balance of the money. Ram Lagan tendered these two specific sums of money to the petitioner. The petitioner refused to take them, contending that on the 9th of November 1916, that is to say, before the zurpeshgee deed was executed in favour of Ram Lagan, Phulesra Kuer executed a sale-deed in respect of the same property in his favour. He, therefore, claimed to be in possession of the property as and from the 9th November 1916 as the owner of the property. His case is that after the execution of the document the lady would not register it and so he had the document compulsorily registered on the 7th March 1917.

Ram Lagan thereupon brought the usual suit for redemption against the petitioner. The question before the learned Munsif, who tried the case in the first instance, was as to which of the documents was earlier in point of time, namely, the document executed in favour of Ram Lagan on the 17th November 1916, or the document alleged to have been executed in favour of the petitioner on the 8th November 1916. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the document executed by the lady in favour of the petitioner on the 9th November 1916 was a genuine document and that, therefore his document being prior in time must prevail over the document propounded by the opposite party. He thereupon dismissed the redemption suit brought by Ram Lagan against the petitioner.

From that judgment there was an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Chapra. There the learned District Judge took a course which has been described as unprecedented in the case of Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1). He thought that it was necessary to have some further evidence in the case and he thereupon remanded the case to the lower Court, that is to say to the Court of first instance, merely for the purpose of recording the evidence and transmitting the evidence so recorded to the Court of the District Judge.

(1) 31 B. 381; 9 Bom. L. R. 671; 11 C. W. N. 721; 6 C. L. J. 5; 4 A. L. J. 461; 17 M. L. J. 347; 34 I. A. 115; 2 M. L. T. 435 (P. C.).

Now it is not suggested that this evidence was tendered in the Court of first instance and was rejected by that Court. That is not the suggestion of Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, who has with my leave appeared to argue the case on behalf of the opposite party. It is not suggested by the learned District Judge that there was an inherent defect or lacuna in the evidence as it stood which prevented him from disposing of the case either in favour of the appellant or the respondent. The learned District Judge thought that further evidence was necessary. In my opinion Order XLI, rule 27, gives him no power at all to remand the case to the Court of first instance for the purpose of recording further evidence. The point was discussed in the case which I have just cited and which is reported as Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1). I may draw the attention of the learned District Judge to the weighty words of Lord Robertson in the case which I have just cited. With reference to this very point, Lord Robertson said as follows:—

"The legitimate occasion for section 568" which corresponds to the present Order XLI, rule 27, "is when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, not where a discovery is made, outside the Court, of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it. That is the subject of the separate enactment in section 623".

It seems to me that it was not necessary for the Court at all to admit this fresh evidence in order to enable it to pronounce judgment in the case. The record was complete so far as it went; only the additional evidence might enable the learned District Judge to take another view of the case. That does not fall within the scope of Order XLI, rule 27, at all. The same point has been debated in this Court in more cases than one, and I may draw the attention of the learned District Judge to the case of Kalika Dutt Mandar v. Tulsi Mandar (2). With reference to Order XLI, rule 27, Mr. Justice Roe said as follows:—

"This does not mean that in order to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party additional evidence should be admitted in appeal; it means only that where it is impossible to pronounce judgment at all on the evidence, the Court may call for a document. In this case the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff and in the absence of proof of the consideration the Court was in a position to pronounce judgment in favour of the defendant. The document was not required to enable the Court to pronounce judgment. The highest at which it can be put is that it might have been required in order to enable the Court to pronounce judgment in favour of the plaintiff, which is an entirely different thing."

In this case I have no doubt at all that the fresh evidence which has been recorded by the Munsif by the direction of Mr. Monahan, the learned District Judge, might enable that Court to pronounce judgment in favour of a particular party, but that, as I have already said, is not within the scope of the section at all. The record as it stood enabled the learned District Judge to pronounce judgment in the case: that being so, the question arises whether the order passed by the learned District Judge sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioner under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a proper order. In my view only one answer can be given to this question, namely, that it is not a proper order and cannot be sustained. It is clear to me that the learned District Judge formed an opinion on this matter on evidence which he had no jurisdiction to take in the case at all. In my opinion, therefore, the order against the petitioner must be set aside and I order accordingly.

Order set aside.

The accused was charged with having stabbed his wife with a knife as a result of which she died It was proved that sometime before the occurrence he was subject to insane fits, but there was no proof that when he committed the murder he did not know the nature or the consequences of his act. The accused was convicted and sentenced to transportation for life:

Held, that the conviction was right, but that the papers should be submitted to the Government under section 401, Criminal Procedure Code, for such action as it might think fit to take. [p. 828, col 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Sessions Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Case No. 3 of the Calendar for 1919.

Mr. T. Rangaramanuchariar, for the Appellant.—The accused's wife, i.e., the deceased herself admitted that her husband was subject to fits of insanity and that he had had such fits 4 days before the occurrence. No motive has been alleged or proved. The act must have been done in a state of homicidal mania. Accused was not responsible for his act. He is saved by the provisions of section 84, Indian Penal Code.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—Section 84 cannot apply. It is not shown that the accused did not know the nature and consequences of his act. In the absence of such proof, his criminal responsibility is not absolved. The medical evidence also is against the application of section 84.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The appellant has been convicted of murdering his wife by stabbing her in 2 or 3 places on her person. The two stabs given on the side of the abdomen brought on peritonitis and she died of the wounds 5 days after she was sent to the hospital.

No motive for the offence has been established. The woman herself in her complaint. Exhibit I, and in her statement (Exhibit H to the Sub Magistrate) stated that about 1½ years before the date of the occurrence, which was on the 21st July 1918, her husband was insane, threw the domestic pots here and there and had his hands and legs chained for some months. She also stated that for about 4 days before the occurrence her husband was out of senses, speaking to himself, weeping and abusing his wife and children. But it is not proved that his mind was so affected as to prevent him from knowing the nature and consequences of his acts and though he seems to have stabbed his wife in a fit of homicidal mania, I am unable to say that he is free from criminal responsibility for his act, having regard to the law as laid down by this Court in Queen Empress v. Venkatasami (1) and by the Calcutta High Court in Queen-Empress v Kader Nasyer Shah (2). I shall, however, while following these cases, and confirming the conviction and the sentence of transportation for life, direct (as directed by the learned Judges who decided those cases) that the proceedings be forwarded to His Excellency the Governor in Council for any action which His Excellency may think fit to take under the powers given to the Local Government by section 401, Criminal Procedure Code.

ODGERS, J.—I agree. It is impossible in face of the medical evidence to say that the accused falls within the purview of section 84, Indian Penal Code The evidence is that the doctor had the accused under his observation for about a week in August 1918 and was unable to say that the accused showed any signs of insanity whatever. He admitted, however, that he was also unable to say what the state of the accused's mind might have been in July 1918 when the crime was committed. It is also, in my opinion, a fact to be borne in mind that the accused was in hiding for 20 or 25 days after the commission of the offence.

I agree with my learned brother that the facts of this case are governed by the cases in Queen Empress v. Venkatasami (1) and Queen-Empress v. Kader Nasyer Shah (2) which he has referred to, and I concur in the order proposed by him.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 144, 145, 146—Dispute as to immovable property—Right doubtful—Order under s. 144, whether proper—Procedure—Notice to opposite party, whether necessary—Successive orders under s. 144, whether competent.

Where the right or possession of the parties is not free from doubt and there is a danger of disturbance of public tranquillity on account of both the parties asserting their right and possession over the lands in question, it is inequitable to take action under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code to restrain one party as against the other, the virtual effect of which would be to usurp the functions of the Civil Court and to decide the right and title over the disputed land including the right of possession. [p. 830, col. 2; p. 841, col. 1.]

Where the right of a party is clear and there is a threatened invasion of that right by another party, a temporary order under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code might be useful and effective. Similarly under section 107 of the Code where parties are in the wrong, they can be bound down in order to prevent a breach of the peace. But where there is a doubt as to the right of the parties to be in possession of immoveable property, the only effective remedy is that provided by section 145 of the Code, under which if the Magistrate after due enquiry comes to the conclusion that one of the parties is in clear possession, he will uphold its possession until it is evicted in due course of law, and if on the other hand the Magistrate finds it difficult to decide which of the parties is in actual possession, he has got a remedy to prevent a breach of the peace under section 146 of the Code by attaching the subject-matter of the dispute. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Successive orders under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code condemned. [p. 831, col. 1.]

An order passed under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code without serving notice on the opposite party to show cause is liable to be set aside. [p. 831, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case purchased certain properties in execution of a rent decree, dated the 7th June 1918, under section 208 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908) read with section 11 of the Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865). The petitioner obtained delivery of possession of the tenure on various dates between the 30th March to 14th April 1919. We are concerned with the delivery of possession of a village called Kuru, which was effected on the 30th of March.

In that village there are certain lands called the Manjhias lands which correspond more or less to the proprietor's private lands in this part of this country. The judgment debtor, Thakur Madan Mohan Nath Sahi, had created an under-tenure in respect of the entire village including the Manjhias lands in favour of his wife, the opposite party in this case. The name of Musammat Nirmal Kuar stood recorded in the Record of Rights in 1905 in respect of the said under tenure, though prior to that in 1904 in a certain civil suit the said lady was declared to be only farzidar for the judgment-debtor.

After the delivery of possession the Police reported that there was a danger of a breach of the peace on behalf of both the parties, each trying to cultivate and sow the Manjhias lands in village Kuru in question. On the 18th June 1919 the Magistrate issued an order against the opposite party "forbidding them to go near the Manjhias lands at Kuru or to disturb the possession of the first party over these lands in any way." That order was passed under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

GOURI DUTT v. GOBIND SINGH.

Thereafter the opposite party filed a petition, objecting to the notice being issued against them and praying that a notice under section 144 should rather be issued on the petitioner. In that petition it was stated that the master of the first party Rai Bahadur Baldeo Das Birla was never delivered khas possession of the village Kuru, nor did the nazir, as a matter of fact, deliver possession according to law. Upon that petition the Magistrate directed notice to issue upon the petitioners "to be present with their documentary evidence on the 19th June 1919."

After an adjournment the case was ultimately taken up on the 25th June, on which date the arguments were heard and the Magistrate directed the khatian of the village to be filed.

On the 27th June the Magistrate after looking into the documentary evidence that was on the record passed an order cancelling the notice under section 144 that was already issued and served against the opposite party, and in its stead directed that an order under section 144 "be issued against the auction-purchaser's agent and manager forbidding them to interfere with Musammat Nirmal Kuar's possession over the Manjhias lands of Kuru in any way."

The Deputy Commissioner was then moved to set aside the order under clause (4) of section 144, but without any success. The petitioner has, therefore come to this Court and contends that the order of the Magistrate under section 144 against the petitioner was without jurisdiction. It appears to me that the contention of the petitioner must prevail.

The tenure in question was sold under the aforesaid Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and the Rent Recovery Act. Section 16 of the latter Act clearly declares that the sale of tenure under that Act will be free from all incumbrances which may have accrued thereon by any act of any holder of the said under-tenure, his representatives, or assignees, unless the right of making such incumbrances shall have been expressly vested in the holder by the written engagement under which the under-tenure was created, or by the subsequent written authority of the person who created it, his representatives or assignees.

The under-tenure in question was not created by the judgment debtor in favour of his wife under any express authority in writing by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, who created this tenure in favour of the judgment debtor. The effect, therefore, of this section is that the petitioner had purchased the tenure free from the under tenure that was created by the judgment-debtor. This view is accepted by the learned Deputy Commissioner, who held that the incumbrance was rendered void ipso facto by reason of the sale to the auction-purchaser, the petitioner in this case, and the learned Deputy Commissioner answered the issue raised by him for determination.—"Was the auction-purchaser, i.e., the first party at the time of delivery of possession put in direct possession of the Manjhias lands of Kuru or not?"—in favour of the petitioner and against the opposite party. The result of this finding is that that petitioner was put in possession of the lands free from the under-tenure in question by the Civil Court in execution of a writ issued by that Court. The question, therefore, for the Deputy Commissioner was whether the petitioner had the right to enforce the possession delivered to him by the Court as against the opposite party, who claimed to be in possession by virtue of the under-tenure created by the judgment-debtor. The effect of the order of the Deputy Commissioner is to restrain the petitioner from reaping the fruits of the auction-purchase followed by the delivery of possession by the Court. He has been asked to abstain from interfering with the possession of the opposite party over the lands in dispute. It cannot possibly be contended that the petitioner, in going over the lands and trying to exercise possession thereon by virtue of the writ of delivery of possesion, did commit any wrongful act, or that the opposite party, in spite of their right in the under-tenure having ceased to exist by virtue of the sale, could be lawfully engaged in exercising their possession over the lands as against the petitioner. If the right or possession of the parties be not free from any doubt and there be a danger of disturbance of public tranquillity on account of both the parties asserting their right and possession over the lands in question, it would certainly be inequitable to take action under section 144 and to restrain one party as against the other, the virtual effect of which would be to usurp the functions of the Civil Court to decide the right and title over the disputed land including the right of possession.

Again, in the circumstances of the dispute in respect of the right of possession of the disputed land a temporary order under section 144 is not an effective and sufficient remedy. The learned Deputy Commissioner has already perceived that, and he justified his action on the ground that the temporary order under section 144 "defines the position of the parties and will for this reason, when the order runs out by lapse of time, serve to prevent a breach of peace even then." If the Deputy Commissioner contemplates successive orders under section 144 after the lapse of every two months, the procedure has been condemned by the Courts. The power of a Criminal Court under Chapter XI of the Code of Criminal Procedure is intended to be exercisable and when the right of a party is clear and there is a threatened invasion of that right by another party, a temporary order under section 144 might be then useful and effective. But it is obvious from the very nature of the dispute between the parties in this case that such an order cannot possibly be effective, for after the sowing of the crops the dispute and the danger to the peace will again re-appear after two months. Similarly under section 107 when parties are in the wrong they can be bound down in order to prevent a breach of the peace for trying to commit a wrongful act. But when there is a doubt as to the right of the parties to be in possession of the immovable property, as in this particular case, the only effective remedy is that provided by section 145, under which if the Magistrate after due enquiry comes to the conclusion that one of the parties is in clear possession, he will uphold his possession until he is evicted in due course of law and if on the other hand the Magistrate finds it difficult to decide which of the parties is in actual possession, he has got a remedy to prevent a breach of the peace under section 146 by attaching the subject matter of dispute. The right of the petitioner to the possession of the lands in this case was created by the delivery of possession. Whether the under-tenure created by the judgment-debtor became void or voidable in favour of the opposite party under section 16 of the Rent Recovery Act cannot possibly be decided under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The order is again open to objection, as there was no notice served upon the petitioner to show cause against the order to be made at the instance of the opposite party. The notice under section 144 was served upon the opposite party in pursuance of the order of the 18th June. After that the Magistrate could only set aside or rescind that order under clause (4) of section 144. The Magistrate could not at that stage pass an order under section 144 against petitioner without giving him an opportunity of showing cause against the order.

Taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration I set aside the order of the Magistrate as being without jurisdiction, leaving the Magistrate to take action under the law if there be still an apprehension of a breach of the peace.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Further enquiry, order directing—Notice to accused whether necessary.

Before directing further enquiry under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the District Magistrate ought to give notice to the persons against whom he proposes to pass orders to show cause. [p. 832, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Agra, dated the 7th August 1919.

Mr. Sarkar Bahadur Johari, for the Applicants.

PEDAKANTI CHINNA NAGADU, In re.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a Magistrate of the first class took proceedings under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against five persons. He ordered security to be taken from two and directed that the three others should be discharged under section 190 of the Indian Penal Code. The two against whom the order was made appealed to the District Magistrate. He set aside all the proceedings of the learned Magistrate and ordered a re trial of the whole case, i.e, the case of the men who were discharged as well as of those who were bound over. He did this apparently without giving the three persons, who were not before him, an opportunity of showing cause against such an order. I would call the learned Magistrate's attention to the ruling of this Court in Kharga v. Emperor (1). It was laid down in that ruling that a Magistrate, before taking proceedings under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, should give notice to the persons against whom he proposes to pass orders to show cause. I, therefore, set aside the order of further enquiry so far as it concerns Phool Singh, Desraj and Zaharya. If the Magistrate is of opinion that further action should be taken, he will do so after giving these persons an opportunity of showing cause.

Let the record be returned.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code Act V of 1898), s. 345—Composition of offence, whether permissible after judgment—Appellate Court, whether bound to give effect to composition.

The composition of an offence is permissible only up to the time of the judgment, and not after. After conviction there can be no composition without the leave of the Court, and an Appellate Court is not bound to recognise and give effect to an agreement which the parties might enter into after the conviction of the accused.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session, Cuddapah, in Criminal Appeal No. 16 of 1919, preferred against the conviction and sentence by the Court of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Gooty, in Calendar Case No. 3 of 1919.

Dr. T. C. Kurup, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER —Section 345, clause (5), of the Criminal Procedure Code is conclusive on this question. It lays down that, after conviction, there can be no composition without the leave of the Court. It is in consequence of this provision that the Calcutta High Court points out, Aslam Meah v. Emperor (1), that composition is permissible only up to the time of the judgment and not after. The only point before me is as to whether the Sessions Judge was wrong in having refused to set aside the conviction because the parties entered into an agreement before him. I think he is right in having refused to recognize the composition. The petition, therefore, fails and is, therefore, dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXIII, r. 3—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of, where suit terminated by compromise—Compromise, Court, whether bound to record—Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI B. C. of 1876), ss 3, 9, 17, 19—Rules framed by Lieutenant-Governor under s. 9, rr. 5, 16—Estate under control of Manager—Holder of estate, whether can grant permanent lease—Lease, power to grant—Commissioner, whether can grant lease—Deputy Commissioner, power of, to control Manager, extent of—Powers of Manager, construction of—Power to grant lease, whether includes power to enter into contract to lease—Contract, when completed—Letters and documents containing agreement, construction of.

The doctrine of lis pendens, as embodied in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, applies to transfers during the pendency of a suit, even when that suit is terminated by a compromise decree; but in such cases the Court should be satisfied that the compromise is not a collusive arrangement entered into with the object of defeating a purchaser. [p. 841, col. 2.]

Where a transfer is made pendente lite under the authority of the Court within the terms of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, and subsequently the original parties to the suit arrive at a compromise, the Court before recording the compromise must consider whether it is a bona fide one or merely colourable with the object of preventing the transferee from setting up such defence to the action as might otherwise be open to the original defendant. If there is a real and substantial defence to the claim, the compromise is not a lawful agreement within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court should refuse to record it and to pass a decree in accordance with the terms thereof. [p. 842, col. 1.]

By virtue of the provisions of section 3 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, so long as an estate is under the control of the Manager, the holder of the estate is incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate his immoveable property or any part thereof, and his action in the matter may be ignored. [p. 842, col. 2.]

The mere fact that by virtue of the provisions of rule 16 of the rules framed by the Lieutenant-Governor under section 9 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, the power to grant leases vested in a Manager under section 17 of the Act is subject to the sanction of the Commissioner, does not in itself give the Commissioner power to grant a lease without consulting the Manager at all, much less can the Commissioner, unknown to the Manager, bind him by an agreement compelling him to exercise his statutory powers. [p. 844, col. 1.]

Section 9 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act contemplates that the Manager may be either the Deputy Commissioner himself or some one else. In the latter case the powers of the Deputy Commissioner are confined, by rule 5 of the rules framed by the Lieutenant-Governor under section 19 of the Act, to a general control over the management of another person. To say that in such a case the Deputy Commissioner may treat the Manager as non-existent and exercise his powers himself would be to extend the scope of the rule beyond its legitimate meaning. [p. 844, col. 1.]

The powers granted by the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act to a Manager should be construed as strictly as the powers of guardians and managers of minors. [p 845, col. 1.]

It is not essential to the proper exercise of a statutory power to grant a lease that the person having this power should also have power to enter into a contract to lease. [p. 845, col. 1.]

The power to grant leases given to a Manager by section 17 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act does not include the power to enter into an executory contract to grant a lease [p. 845, col. 1.]

If the documents or letters relied on as constituting a contract contemplate the execution of a further contract between the parties, it is a question of construction, whether the execution of the further contract is a condition or term of the bargain, or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will in fact go through. In the former case there is no enforceable contract, either because the conditions are unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract. In the latter case there is a binding contract, and the reference to the mere formal document may be ignored [p. 845, col. 2.]

Mr. Manuk, for the Raja of Palganj.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated the 24th July 1917, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for specific performance of a contract, alleged to have been entered into on behalf of the Raja of Palganj to grant a permanent lease of Paresnath Hill to the Digambari community of Jains in India.

The suit was instituted on the 5th September 1913 in the names of Dhannu Lal Agarwalla and Parmesti Das Serowgee, as plaintiffs suing on behalf of themselves and as representatives of the entire Digambari Jain community of India. Both these gentlemen died about a year after the suit was instituted. The present plaintiffs thereupon applied under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Order I, rule 8) to be made parties, and by an order of the lower Court, dated the 1st February 1915, their names were added to the record as plaintiffs and the suit proceeded.

At the time when the suit was instituted the defendant's estate was being administered by Babu Krishna Chandra Ghosh, who had been appointed Manager of the Palganj Raj under the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (Bengal Act VI of 1876), and the defendant was sued through the said Manager as his representative and guardian. Babu Krishna Chandra Ghosh, having ceased to act as Manager, Babu Janki Nath Gupta was appointed in his place, and by an order of the 2nd February 1915 his name was substituted on the record as Manager and guardian in place of the former Manager.

The events leading up to the present suit are referred to at some length in the pleadings and a short history of the same is set out in the judgment now under appeal. It is convenient to refer again shortly to the circumstances under which the agreement sought to be enforced came to be made. The range of hills known as Paresnath Hill lies in the Hazaribagh District and runs roughly from east to west. It has a central range about a mile and a quarter long with outlying spurs, a part of which is Government property. The greater part of the Hill, however, is claimed as part of the Palganj Zemindari. For many years this Hill has been an object of adoration by the Jains who hold an Ekrarnama from the father of the present Raja of Palganj agreeing to grant them such lands on the Hill as they may need for the purpose of building temples. Indeed, at one time they went so far as to claim the Hill as their own under sunnads granted by Akbar and Ahmed Shah. These, however, were found by the Calcutta High Court to have been spurious documents. A number of temples have in the past been erected along the crest of the central range and many pilgrims resort there for worship, and in the course of time the Jains have come to regard the locality as a sacred adjunct to the performance of their religious observances and keenly resent its use or occupation by others for purposes which are repugnant to their religious views and which they regard, rightly or wrongly, as an interference with their vested rights.

In the year 1907 the Government of India approved a scheme submitted by Mr. Carey, then Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, for opening a sanitarium and residential buildings for Europeans on the western spurs of the range and on its northern slopes, leaving the crest of the central range for the Jains whose temples at present occupy that site. This scheme met with strong opposition from both the Sitambari and Digambari sects of the Jain community, which resulted in the intervention of Sir Andrew Fraser, then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who took a personal interest in the matter and endeavoured to bring about a settlement which would be satisfactory to all parties. In August 1907, he visited the Hill accompanied by the leading representatives of the Jains of both sects and held a darbar at Madhuban, when he suggested that the Jains should themselves purchase the Raja's interest in the Hill. This suggestion appears to have commended itself to the Jains, and in September of the following year, after some further negotiations, a conference was held at Ranchi with a view to settling terms. This was a task of some magnitude, as there were many interests to be considered. Certain lease-holders had vested interests, the Sonthal tribes claimed the right of hunting wild animals over the whole of the Hill, the Zemindar of Nawagarh claimed the southern slopes as part of his Zemindari, and other claims and encumbrances of a public and private nature had to be considered. Meantime some correspondence passed between the Government of Bengal and the Government of India on the subject, and the latter had expressed their approval of the suggestion that the central hill should be leased to the Jains. The conference at Ranchi was attended by Sir Andrew Fraser, Mr.

(afterwads Sir William) Duke, Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Mr. Macintosh, Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, the Raja of Palganj, and representatives of the Digambari and Sitambari Jains. Certain proposals and counter-proposals were made at this meeting, but it terminated without any settlement being come to. Negotiations, however, still continued between Sir Andrew Fraser and the representatives of the Jains. Two proposals were suggested, one a temporary arrangement terminable when the estate should be restored to the Raja, and the other a permanent arrangement granting a permanent lease at a fixed rental in addition to premium, certain rights being reserved to the Raja. It may be mentioned here that the Sitambari Jains already held leases of certain plots on the Hill the rental of which was Rs. 1,500 per annum, and it was that sect which had the option of taking further plots for the purpose of building temples under the agreement with the late Raja above referred to. Their desire apparently was to obtain complete control and exclusive rights over the whole Hill, including the jungles, villages, and existing lessees. Sir Andrew Fraser would not consent to this scheme, as appears from his letter of the 7th October 1908 addressed to Maharaj Bahadur Singh (Exhibit 19). Subsequently, on the 20th October 1908, Pandit Mohan Krishna Dar, representing the Digambaris, wrote to Sir Andrew Fraser requesting him to use his influence to bring about a settlement on what the writer considered a just and reasonable basis, stating the terms he was prepared to offer for a permanent lease, namely, Rs. 50,000 premium and a rental of Rs. 12,000 annually, including the Rs. 1,500 payable by the Sitambaris. Further correspondence then followed between Sir Andrew Fraser and the original plaintiffs as the accredited representatives of the Digambaris, and on the 3rd November 1908 the latter wrote offering on behalf of the Digambari Jain community and without prejudice to their rights to take a permanent lease of the whole Hill subject to existing leases paying Rs. 50,000 by way of premium (a cheque for which sum was tendered), and an annual rental of Rs. 12,000, the right of cutting timber in the jungles being reserved to the Raja. On the 25th November Sir William Duke wrote in reply detailing the terms which the Lieutenant-Governor would be prepared to accept. These were, with slight modifications, the terms already offered on behalf of the Digambaris. Any excess over and above a limit of Rs. 2,000 which should become payable in future on account of existing leases was to be added to the annual rental of Rs. 12,000, and the mineral rights on the Hill were to be retained entirely by the Zamindar. The demarcation of the Hill was to be made by the Deputy Commissioner and was to exclude the villages in the plain. These terms were prefaced by the following remark:—

"Without discussing the precise character of the rights and ownership of the Zamindar of Palganj over the Paresnath Hill, it is proposed that in deference to the wishes which you and other Jains have expressed the ownership should be limited by a distinct agreement in the following respect."

The letter ended thus:—

"I am to request that you will state clearly and definitely whether you accept these terms and conditions. I am also to request that you will state whether you are to be the contracting parties with the Court of Wards and whether in that capacity you represent the Digambari Jains only or the Jains in general.

"On hearing from you that you accept these terms and who the contracting parties on your behalf will be, the Lieutenant-Governor will give orders to have the agreement drawn up by the Government Solicitor in consultation with any lawyer whom you choose to name."

On the 26th November the original plaintiffs wrote acknowledging the letter of the previous day and adding:—

"We are very thankful to His Honour for his kind and sympathetic consideration of the offer made by us without prejudice on behalf of the Digambari Jains of India. We shall esteem it a great favour if you will kindly permit us to modify the terms of agreement as set forth in paragraph 2, clauses (1) to (6) of your favour. The terms as set forth by you are given below and the modifications prayed for by us are shown in italics. In the margin we have indicated, in brief, some of the reasons which have induced us to make the aforesaid modifications."

Then follow the proposed terms and the modifications which were not of a substantial character. The letter concludes in this way:—

"We hereby accept the terms modified as above, provided that a short agreement embodying these terms be prepared and executed by (1) the Deputy Commissioner or such other officer representing the Court of Wards as is authorised to sign such agreement, (2) the Raja of Palganj, and (3) ourselves as representing the Digambari Jains.

"The permanent lease and other documents may hereafter be prepared as suggested by you and in those documents it would be better if you would kindly allow to join us at least two other representatives of our sect, to wit, Seth Manick Chand of Bombay and Lala Devi Sahay of Ferozepur."

The only modification of the proposed terms which calls for remark was the first which stipulated "A permanent lease of the whole Hill will be granted to the Digambari Jains, subject to the terms and conditions and reservation hereinafter contained."

The proposed terms having contemplated a grant to the Jains generally and not to the Digambari sect, attention is drawn to this because one of the points urged in argument by the respondent was that a community such as the Digambari Jains, not being a legal entity, could not be the grantees of a lease.

On the 30th November 1908, Sir William Duke replied to this letter, stating:—

"I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 26th November 1908, and to say that the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to accept the modified terms of agreement as set forth therein. I am to enclose herewith for your information a copy of letter No. 4791, dated the 30th November 1908, to the Solicitor to the Government of India, and to request you to nominate a lawyer in consultation with whom the draft agreement may be prepared."

The letter to the Government Solicitor, No. 4791, a copy of which was enclosed was as follows:—

"I am directed to state, for information, that the Lieutenant-Governor has been pleased to sanction the grant to the Digambari Jains of a permanent lease of the Hill known as the Paresnath Hill, in the District of Hazaribagh, owned by the Zamindari of Palganj on the conditions mentioned below:—

"(1) A permanent lease of the whole Hill will be granted to the Digambari Jains, subject to the terms and conditions and reservations hereinafter contained, so that the Hill may be protected from every thing repugnant or opposed to the feelings or the religious tenets of the Jains.

"(2) This lease is to be subject to the existing leases and arrangements, but the income derived from these existing leases and arrangements shall go to and be received by and be assigned over to the Digambari Jains, provided that any amount payable on account of these leases over and above Rs. 2,000 shall be added to the annual payment of Rs. 12,000 referred to below.

"(3) The Digambari Jains have paid by a cheque Rs. 50,000 (fifty thousand) by way of premium and no further premium will be demanded.

"(4) The Digambiri Jains will also pay an annual sum of Rs. 12,000 by way of rent, this sum of Rs. 12,000 will include the Rs. 1,500 now annually payable by the Sitambari Jains.

"(5) The Palganj Zemindar shall be entitled only to the premium and the rent aforesaid and excess over Rs. 2,000 as mentioned in clause (2), as also to the rents of sub-leases under clause (7). He shall also be entitled to cut the jungle according to the necessity of himself and of his present estate, such cutting to be done in accordance with rules to be framed by the Deputy Commissioner with the sanction of the Commissioner, regulating the kind of timber or wood to be cut, and the time, conditions, and circumstances of the cutting. The right to minerals on the Hill shall be retained entirely by the Zamindar, but no steps shall be taken for the prospecting for minerals or for their working, collecting, securing or removal without the order of the Deputy Commissioner passed with the sanction of the Commissioner and without the consent of the Jains; such consent only to be withheld when anything repugnant to the religious feelings of the Jains is proposed. Beyond this the Zemindar will have no other right, interest, claim or control over any part of the aforesaid Hill, as long as the stipulated annual payment is duly made.

"(6) The demarcation of the Hill shall be made by the Deputy Commissioner and shall exclude the villages on the plain so as to render it more convenient to deal with the existing leases and rights.

"(7) The Digambari Jains will not be entitled to grant any sub-lease with regard to any piece or parcel of land not now covered by the aforesaid subsisting leases without the consent of the Zemindar of Palganj in writing, and the rents from such sub-leases shall go to the said Zemindar of Palganj.

"I am to request you to draw up, in consultation with any lawyer whom the Jains may choose to name, a draft agreement embodying the above terms which have been accepted by the Digambari Jains for execution by (1) the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh as Manager of the Palganj Estate now managed by the Court of Wards under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, (2) the Raja of Palganj, and (3) Babus Dhannu Lal Agarwala and Parmesti Das Serowgi as representing the Digambari Jains."

The terms set out in the above letter were those already agreed to between the plaintiffs and Sir Andrew Fraser and they contain the agreement of which specific performance is sought. The agreement embodying these terms was never in fact drawn up or executed, but a draft lease was prepared by the Government Solicitor and forwarded to the plaintiffs' Solicitors in January 1909.

In August 1909 it was decided to make a survey and prepare a Record of Rights of the area to be leased which had not up to that time been delimited, with a view to obtain the requisite particulars for the grant. This took some time, and disputes arose as to the line of demarcation, the Digambaris representatives contending that the Hill extended further into the plain including several villages lying therein outside the demarcation line laid down by the Deputy Commissioner; and before the Survey Report was completed the Government of Bengal, acting on instructions from the Government of India, informed the plaintiffs' Solicitors that the arrangement arrived at for a settlement would not be carried through. This decision was conveyed in a letter from the Government of Bengal to the plaintiffs' Solicitors on the 6th September 1910 in the following terms:—

"GENTLEMEN,—I am directed to state that on behalf of the Raja of Palganj, whose estates are under the management of the Court of Wards, this Government agreed to the grant to the Digambari sect of the Jains of a lease of the Paresnath Hill in the district of Hazaribagh on certain conditions proposed in a letter, dated the 26th November 1908, from your clients, Seth Parmesti Das Serowgi and Babu Dhannu Lal Agarwalla. Having regard, however, to the preferential claims of the Sitambari community the Government of India, to whom the matter was reported, do not feel justified in giving effect to the offer of settlement made by this Government. I am, therefore, to request that you will be so good as to inform your clients that the arrangement proposed in November 1908 has fallen through and that the Accountant-General, Bengal, has been asked to refund them with interest at 4 per cent. (the Bank rate of fixed deposits) the sum of Rs. 50,000 which they had paid as premium."

This decision was, no doubt, arrived at in consequence of a report made by Mr. John Reid, the Settlement Officer of the Chota Nagpur Division, on the 3rd June 1910 (Exhibit D1) in which he stated that the grant of the proposed lease to the Digambari Jains would result in serious differences and disputes between them and their rivals, the Sitambaris, who were in possession of the existing temples and had preferential rights over the Hill in case they wished to erect new temples. The Digambaris, on the other hand, had no such rights and were not in possession of any temples of their own. In dealing with what he considered would be the immediate result of granting the proposed lease Mr. Reid reported that, "The Digambari Society would proceed to erect new tonks, some of them possibly adjacent to the already existing tonks which are managed by the Sitambaris. The Sitambaris would of course object and would fall back on their rights under the agreement of 1872. To enforce their legal rights they would, no doubt, resort to violence, and very likely the site of every proposed new tonk would be the scene of a riot of greater or less magnitude. I understand that it is not the local authorities but the Local Government who propose to sanction the lease of the Hill to the Digambari Jains. In that case the latter authority would be put in the extremely invidious position of having sanctioned an agreement, the result of which must necessarily be rioting, possibly of a serious character. With this prospect in view, if there is any doubt of the legality of the proposed lease it is evidently one which cannot be carried through."

There can be no question that these two rival branches of the Jain community entertain feelings of hostility towards each other, and the conclusions arrived at by Mr. Reid may possibly have been justified. However that may be, the Government of Bengal definitely refused to proceed further in the matter. At that time Sir Andrew Fraser's term of office as Lieutenant-Governor had come to an end. The appellants refused to accept the cheque and interest tendered in the letter of the 6th September 1910, and on the 5th September 1913 instituted this suit claiming specific performance of the contract mentioned or alternatively damages against the defendant.

Various defences were pleaded in the written statement. The most important of these may be summarised thus: –

(1) That the defendant's estate was at all material times vested in a Manager under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, by section 3 of which the defendant was incompetent to charge, lease or alienate his immoveable property or to enter into any contract which might involve him in pecuniary liability, and if, and in so far as he had purported to do so by himself or through others, such contract was invalid. None of the persons conducting the negotiations had any authority to enter into a binding contract.

(2) That under the Act the only person having power to deal with the defendant's property was the Manager, and even his powers derived from section 17 of the Act did not include the power of entering into an agreement to grant a lease.

(3) That no binding agreement was entered into, and that what took place was mere negotiation, all parties thereto contemplating the necessity of ascertaining the exact legal rights of all persons interested in the Hill before a lease could be granted, no date being fixed for the commencement of the demise.

(4) That the parties were fully aware that none of the persons conducting the negotiations had authority to enter into a binding agreement, and that the plaintiffs agreed only to be bound in the event of a short agreement embodying the terms being prepared and executed by such person or persons as were authorised to sign such agreement, and that this was never done.

(5) That Sir Andrew Fraser was acting solely in an executive capacity and had no authority to enter into a contract binding upon the defendant or his estate.

(6) That negotiations were not conducted on the basis of obtaining the highest value for the property.

(7) That the contract should not be enforced on the ground of public policy.

The Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, before whom the case came for trial, dismissed the suit, being of opinion that none of the officers who conducted the negotiations with the plaintiffs was competent to make the agreement in question, and that it had, therefore, no operation in law. His judgment was based mainly upon the interpretation of the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act. By section 3 of that Act the proprietor of an estate vested in a Manager under the Act, so long as that management continues, is incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease, or alienate his immoveable property or any part thereof. The powers vested in the Manager by section 17 include the power to demise all or any part of the property under his management for any term of years or in perpetuity to take effect in possession in consideration of any fine or fines or without fine and reserving such rents and under such conditions as may be agreed upon. By an amending Act of 1909 what is now known as clause 18B was added. This was not in operation at the date of the agreement now under consideration. It provides as follows:—

"Subject to the sanction of the Commissioner, the Manager shall have power to enter into any contract or to execute or relinquish any lease or counterpart of any lease or to take any action not otherwise provided for in this Act which in his opinion is necessary for the proper care and management of the property."

It must be borne in mind that the Manager in whom the estate was vested at the date of the agreement was Babu Krishna Chandra Ghosh. This gentleman was no party to the agreement, and, so far as the evidence goes, there is nothing to shew that he was even consulted during the negotiations and before the agreement was entered into. It is also quite clear that the Raja of Palganj, although he may be taken to have been throughout a consenting party, had no power to deal with his estate. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that Sir Andrew Fraser, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, had no functions at all in the matter connected with the granting of the lease; that the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner were authorised by the rules framed under section 19 of the Act to sanction leases to be given by the Manager alone, and considered that they could by clear implication dictate terms to the Manager, but could not demise themselves and far less make a binding contract to lease; that the only person authorised to grant a lease under the Act was the Manager and nobody else. Having arrived at that conclusion his judgment proceeds in this way:—

"The question, therefore, resolves itself into this:—Whether the power to lease provided in section 17 necessarily implies a power in the Manager to contract for it as well."

He then considered the arguments addressed to him on this question and arrived at the conclusion that the power to lease granted by the Act did not necessitate the power to enter into a binding contract to lease. The fact that the latter power had been conferred upon the Manager by the amending Act of 1909 (section 15B) indicated to him that before the passing of the amending Act such power had been excluded and he came to the conclusion that none of the officers who took part in the negotiation was competent to make the agreement in question and, therefore, that it had no operation in law and he dismissed the suit.

It is not very clear from these findings whether the learned Judge dismissed the suit solely on the ground that the Manager had no power to enter into an executory contract to grant a lease, or whether he also based his decision upon the ground that even if such power existed, the Manager was no party to the agreement. Having arrived at the conclusion that the suit must fail on the ground above referred to, he thought it unnecessary to determine the other issues; but, in view of an appeal, he recorded his findings on those issues on the assumption that the agreement in question should be held to be a competent one. He considered that the agreement was a concluded agreement and not a mere negotiation contemplating further steps before it should have a binding effect. He further thought that Sir Andrew Fraser, in bringing about a settlement which involved questions of public policy of considerable magnitude, must be supposed to have been acting in his executive capacity because he had no statutory power to deal with the matter, and that his action was, therefore, subject to the control of the Government of India; that he had obtained the sanction of the Government of India to settle only the central range, and that his subsequent scheme leasing the whole range was not submitted to or approved by the Government of India who refused to sanction it; that Sir Andrew Fraser was under a misapprehension that the Digambari sect represented the majority of the Jain community and possessed the greater number of shrines on the Hill, which was not the fact, and that he conducted the whole negotiations in an extremely partial manner without enquiring into the preferential rights and privileges of the rival sect of Sitambaris, and that the effect of giving the Hill to the Digambaris would be to put the estate under a disadvantage and to throw the two rival sects into unavoidable conflict to the detriment of the estate. In view of these facts and circumstances he considered that he would not have been prepared to decree specific performance of the contract. On the question of damages he came to the conclusion that assuming there was a binding contract and specific performance was not enforced, damages would have to be allowed only nominally as the actual amount spent could not be ascertained by the evidence adduced.

By the time the case came on for hearing on appeal before this Court, the Palganj Estate had ceased to be administered by a Manager and the Raja had been restored to the possession and enjoyment of the property under clause 12 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, a notification to that effect having been published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette, dated the 11th December 1918. The Raja, it appears, was at that time quite prepared to carry out the agreement of the 30th November 1903 and grant the appellants a lease on the terms therein mentioned. He accordingly presented a petition, dated the 24th February 1919, praying the Court to pass a decree under Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, in accordance with the terms arrived at by a compromise between himself and the plaintiffs, which terms are set out in the petition. By this compromise the Raja admits the appellants' claim for specific performance of the contract for a perpetual lease of the Hill upon the terms and stipulations of the agreement on which the claim is based; the appellants give up their claim for interest, mesne profits, damages and costs, and undertake to bear the costs of all litigation that may arise out of the present litigation as well as the costs of an appeal, if any, to His Majesty in Council from the final decree in this case. This application was opposed by learned Counsel on behalf of Nagarseth Kasturibhai Manibhai, representing the Sitambari Jains, who had been added as a respondent to this appeal under the following circumstances:—

In the year 1911 the proprietor of the Nawagarh Zemindari, commonly known as the Raja of Nawagarh, instituted a suit against the Raja of Palganj through his Manager and guardian Krishna Chandra Ghosh in whom the estate was then vested as defendant, claiming a declaration of title to the southern half of Paresnath Hill. The Raja of Nawagarh, who unlike his neighbour of Palganj, is an adherent of the Sitambaris was successful in his suit before the Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh. An appeal (No. 551 of 1914) was preferred against that judgment to the High Court on behalf of the Raja of Palganj and came before this Court in January 1918. Pending that appeal the Raja of Nawagarh entered into an agreement with a representative of the Sitambaris to grant him or his nominee a permanent lease of his interest in the Hill. The policy of the Manager and those associated with him in the management of the Palganj Estate also favoured the transfer of the Raja of Palganj's interest in the Hill to the Sitambaris, the Government of India considering that they had preferential claims over their rivals, the Digambaris. In fact, the sanction of the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur had already been obtained on the 6th October 1917 under section 13B of the Act to transfer the Raja's rights to the Sitambaris. The result was that when the appeal in the Raja of Nawagarh's suit came before this High Court in 1918 the parties to that litigation, although disputing as to their respective rights and interests in the Hill, were both anxious to transfer those rights, whatever the extent of them, to the representatives of the Sitambaris who, in their turn, were apparently prepared to pay each of the contesting parties the price they were willing to accept for a transfer of their respective interests. In these circumstances, a purchaser being found who was willing to take over from the disputants their joint interest in the Hill without further determination of their respective rights and interests inter se, a compromise was arrived at between them, when the appeal in that suit was partly heard, and on the 4th February 1918 a compromise petition setting out the terms agreed to by the parties and approved by the Sitambaris was ordered to be filed and the parties were ordered to carry out the terms of the compromise, the appeal standing over for final orders. By the compromise it was provided that both parties should transfer, the one by a conveyance and the other by a permanent lease, their right, title and interest in Paresnath Hill to the representatives of the Sitambaris upon terms already settled between them; that all questions of ownership and possession of the respective parties should remain undetermined as between the parties; but that, in order to settle the extent of the interest to be transferred by the Raja of Nawagarh, the boundary between the Hill and Nawagarh Pargana to the south should be determined by a competent Survey Officer to be appointed by the Court. The conveyance and lease contemplated in the said compromise were then prepared and subsequently executed by Janki Nath Gupta, who had succeeded Krishna Chandra Ghosh, as Manager of the Palganj Estate and the Raja of Nawagarh, respectively, transferring their interests in the Hill to Nagarseth Kasturibhai Manibhai in his individual capacity and as representing the Sitambari community of Jains. The Raja of Palganj was personally opposed to this settlement, and when the matter came again before the Court for final orders on the 8th March 1918, he petitioned the Court complaining of the bargain made by the Manager on his behalf with the Sitambaris, and asking the Court to recall the order made on the 4th February, and not to pass a final decree in the terms of the compromise. At the same time a similar petition was presented on behalf of the Digambari Jains, who had previously made an unsuccesful application to be added as parties in that suit. The Raja's petition was rejected both on the ground that he had no control over the management of his estate at that time and also on the merits, he having, it appeared, agreed personally with the Sitambaris on more than one occasion in 1912 and 1913 to grant them a permanent lease of the Hill. The Digambaris' petition was also rejected, although the Court consented to hear them through Counsel. The Court then ordered a decree to be passed in the terms of the compromise and ordered the conveyance and lease, copies of which were filed, to be executed and registered. The Court also observed that the terms of the conveyance by the Manager of the Palganj Estate safeguarded the interests of the Digambaris in so far as they provided that the conveyance should be subject to any order which might be passed by this Court in the present appeal. In the same conveyance the purchaser representing the Sitambaris covenanted to take all necessary steps to get his name substituted in place of that of the Raja of Palganj as respondent in the present appeal and, at his own expense, to defend the action and indemnify the vendor and the Palganj Estate against all costs and damages arising out of the litigation after the 1st January 1918. The purchaser, after execution of the conveyance, accordingly applied to this Court on the 7th August 1918 to have his name substituted in place of that of the Raja of Palganj as respondent, when it was ordered that the name of Nagarseth Kasturibhai Manibhai be added as a respondent in the appeal, the name of the original respondent being also left on the record.

The question which now arises is whether we ought, in the circumstances just mentioned, to record the compromise of the 24th February 1918, and pass a decree in accordance with the terms thereof. The appellants rely upon the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, and say the Court has no option in the matter once the compromise is satisfactorily proved, as in this case, and ought to pass a decree in accordance therewith. They further contend that the respondent Nagarseth Kasturibhai Manibhai is a purchaser pendente lite and takes subject to the rights of the appellants under the decree now asked for. It is true that the purchase on behalf of the Sitambaris was, by the terms of the conveyance and with the approval of the Court which sanctioned that conveyance, made subject to any order which might be made in the present litigation. It is also true that the doctrine of lis pendens, as embodied in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, applies to transfers during the pendency of a suit even when that suit is terminated by a compromise decree; but in such cases the Court should be satisfied that the compromise is not a collusive agreement entered into with the object of defeating the purchaser. It must be taken that the compromise entered into by the Manager of the Palganj Estate in Appeal No. 551 of 1914 and the conveyance made in pursuance thereof are binding on the Raja of Palganj and his estate to the same extent as if the latter had been himself the contracting party. There was, therefore, an implied obligation on the transferror not to derogate from the grant. It was contemplated also that the purchaser should be substituted in the present appeal as respondent in place of the Raja and indemnify the latter against all liability he might incur by an adverse decision therein. In such circumstances to deny the purchaser the right of defending the present action by setting up any defence that would be open to the Raja of Palganj would be to work a manifest injustice if there is any real defence to the suit. The transfer made to the contesting respondent was made under the authority of the Court within the terms of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, and one of the terms was that it should be subject to any order passed in the present appeal. The object of this was clearly to preserve the existing rights of the Digambaris which were then sub judice, but not to enlarge those rights by putting it in their power to defeat the transfer by a collusive arrangement with the transferror. It seemed to us, therefore, necessary to consider whether the compromise we are now asked to record was a bona fide one or merely colourable with the object of preventing the contesting respondent from setting up such defence to the action as might otherwise be open to the original defendant. It is contended that the compromise is a reasonable one, as the questions to be determined are doubtful and may not end in this Court and the result may be to saddle the Raja of Palganj with heavy costs and possibly damages even if specific performance be not decreed. This argument did not commend itself to us, as there is an undertaking by the purchaser to indemnify the Raja against all liability arising from such a contingency, and it is not suggested that the purchaser's financial resources are inadequate for that purpose. It seemed to us that if there is a real and substantial defence to the claim, the compromise we are asked to record would not in the circumstances already mentioned be a lawful agreement within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, and without considering the case on the merits we were not prepared to record it and pass a decree in accordance with the terms thereof. We accordingly decided to hear the appeal on the merits.

The main questions which were argued before us were, (1) whether the agreement relied on was made by persons who were competent to deal with the Palganj Estate at all; (2) whether the Manager of the Estate, assuming him to be a contracting party, had power to enter into an agreement to execute a lease as ancillary to his statutory power to grant a lease; and (3) whether there was a completed agreement upon which a suit for specific performance could be based. These were the points towards which the arguments were mainly directed, but it was further contended by the contesting respondent that the suit, as framed, was not maintainable because the alleged contract was made either with the Digambari Jains as a body or with certain individuals. In the former case no suit was maintainable by the Digambaris, who are not a legal entity. In the latter case the individuals were dead and their legal representatives were not substituted in their place, and even if they claimed as trustees for the Digambaris, there was nothing to shew that the substituted plaintiffs were appointed trustees in place of the original plaintiffs.

The first of the above points involves a consideration of some of the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, and in dealing with this question it is necessary to determine who in fact were the actual parties to the agreement. So far as the Raja of Palganj is concerned, he may be taken to have been a consenting party and to have authorised Sir Andrew Fraser to enter into a contract on his behalf, but it is clear from section 3 of the Act that, so long as the estate was under the control of the Manager, the Raja was incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate his immoveable property or any part thereof, and his action in the matter may be ignored. According to Sir William Duke's evidence it was Sir Andrew Fraser who directed the whole course of the negotiations, acting on his own responsibility and forming his own decisions. It is also clear from the documentary evidence that the representatives of the Digambaris throughout were treating with Sir Andrew Fraser, and, so far as appears from the evidence, never once approached the Manager of the Palganj Estate. The reason for this is not far to seek. Sir Andrew Fraser was Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. The matter was one which the Government was likely to consider as involving questions of policy in the government of that Presidency. If the Manager of the Estate had been asked to grant a lease, he would probably have refused to commit himself until he was satisfied that his action in the matter had the approval of the Local Government. The Digambaris, no doubt, felt confident that if they obtained the formal sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor to their scheme the rest was merely a question of routine, and that for all practical purposes the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor meant the consent of the Manager and the consequent grant of the lease. Unfortunately for the appellants, however, the Lieutenant-Governor was not himself competent to exercise the statutory powers vested in the Manager. Had the suit been one against Sir Andrew Fraser for breach of warranty of authority different considerations would arise, which it is not necessary to consider. The suit is against the Raja of Palganj through his Manager, who alone at the material time had power to grant a lease of the property. The management of the estate was vested in the Manager under section 2 of the Act. His duties are defined in section 4 and the following sections. They consist mainly in the collection of rents and profits and the disposal of them for certain purposes, which in some cases require the approval of the Commissioner. He must also enquire into and settle debts and liabilities due from the estate, machinery for which is provided involving judicial enquiries with appeals from his decisions in certain cases to the Deputy Commissioner and Commissioner. His powers are enumerated in Part V of the Act. They include certain powers connected with his duties, and section 17 provides:

"Subject to the rules made under section 19 the Manager shall have power to demise all or any part of the property under his management for any term of years or in perpetuity to take effect in possession in consideration of any fine or fines or without fine and reserving such rents and under such conditions as may be agreed upon."

Section 18 gives him power in certain cases with the sanction of the Commissioner to raise money by mortgage, sale or loan in order to pay the debts of the holder or charges on the property. Section 18B, which was enacted after date of the agreement sued on, is set out at length in an earlier part of this judgment.

By section 19 the Lieutenant-Governor may make rules consistent with the Act to regulate certain matters therein specified and generally for the guidance of officers in all matters connected with the enforcement of the Act and such rules, when made, shall have the force of law. Rule 5 says:—

"Wherever the Manager appointed under the Act is not the Deputy Commissioner of the district, the Deputy Commissioner will (subject to such orders consistent with the provisions of this Act as the Commissioner may from time to time issue) exercise a general control over the management of all the properties in his district."

Rule 16 makes the power of the Manager to grant a lease under section 17 subject to the sanction of the Commissioner if the lease exceeds a term of four years.

The appellants contended that it was impossible to believe that even if the Manager were not a formal party to the agreement his consent and acquiescence had not been obtained by Sir Andrew Fraser, and that it ought, therefore, to be assumed. We are unable to draw any such inference. From the evidence of Sir William Duke as to the manner in which the negotiations were carried through by Sir Andrew Fraser, I think it is much more probable that the Manager's opinion was never asked. The only evidence urged in support of this argument consists of two documents which came into existence long after the date of the agreement. The first is a note signed by the Manager and dated the 6th February 1909, [Exhibit 34 (1)] giving certain information required by the Solicitors with a view to preparing the lease. The second is a letter from Ganga Charan Balav, the Forester of the Palganj Estate, addressed to the Manager, Encumbered Estates, Hazaribagh, dated the 25th January 1910, (Exhibit 50) stating that the cadastral survey of the Hill had commenced and requesting sanction for two assistants. There is nothing in either of these documents which would warrant the assumption that the Manager had delegated his powers under the Act to Sir Andrew Fraser even assuming he had power to do so which, to say the least, is a violent assumption in the case of statutory powers.

It was next contended that Sir Andrew Fraser, at all events, consulted and discussed the matter with the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur (Mr. McIntosh) and the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh (Mr. Radice), and, as the Manager was by the rules just mentioned subject to a general control by the Deputy Commissioner and could only grant a lease of this description with the previous sanction of the Commissioner, it was quite sufficient if the consent of these gentlemen should be established. We think it may be assumed from Mr. McIntosh's telegram of the 6th November 1908 (Exhibit 21) that he and the Deputy Commissioner assented to the terms eventually arranged between Sir Andrew Fraser and the representatives of the Digambaris. We are unable to hold, however, that because the power to lease vested in the Manager by the Statute requires the sanction of the Commissioner, this in itself gives the Commissioner power to grant a lease without consulting the Manager at all, much less that the Commissioner may, unknown to the Manager, bind him by an agreement compelling him to exercise his statutory powers. It remains to consider whether the Deputy Commissioner, by reason of rule 5 referred to, which imposes upon him the duty to "exercise a general control over the management of all the properties in his district," can, in like circumstances, dispense with the functions of the Manager and himself exercise the powers vested by the Statute in the Manager. In our opinion such was not the intention of the rule. The Statute contemplates (see section 9) that the Manager may be either the Deputy Commissioner himself or someone else. In the latter case the powers of the Deputy Commissioner are given by the rule and are confined to a general control over the management of another person. To say that he may treat the Manager as non existent and exercise his powers himself would, we think, be to extend the scope of the rule beyond its legitimate meaning. Section 21A gives the Board of Revenue control and supervision over the orders and proceedings of the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner and affords some light on the meaning of the word control. It could hardly be contended that the Board of Revenue could exercise the functions of the Commissioner.

It was lastly contended on this part of the case that the Manager must be taken at least to have ratified the agreement. It is sufficient to say that we have looked in vain for any evidence of ratification. The two documents [Exhibits 34 (1) and 50] already referred to were relied on as indicating acquiescence by the Manager and an attitude of mind from which ratification might be inferred. We do not think any such inference can be drawn. It follows from these findings that the plaintiffs' suit must fail and the appeal be dismissed. But as the other two points were argued at some length before us, we think it desirable to record a decision on those points also.

On the second point it was contended for the respondent that the rule whereby equity aids the defective exercise of a power by a tenant for life so as to bind the remainderman can have no application to powers created by Statute. The foundation of the equitable doctrine would appear to be based upon the view that in most cases the donor of the power cannot have intended that the lack of a seal or the omission of some legal formality not necessarily known to him should defeat the exercise of the power by the grantee, if it otherwise expresses the paramount intention of the donor. But to aid the powers granted by Statute for similar reasons would be to treat the Legislature as inops consilii (See Farwell on Powers, 3rd Edition, pages 394-5). The appellants contend, however, that the rules governing the powers of tenants for life or other limited owners can have no application in a case like the present where the Manager, though appointed by Statute, must be regarded as for the time being in the shoes of the owner, who would undoubtedly have been bound by an executory contract to grant a lease had he remained in control and possession of his estate. This argument, in so far as it denies the analogy between the position of the Manager and that of a tenant for life, has much to commend it. But it appears to us that the decision of the question must depend upon whether a statutory power of leasing can, by the canons of construction relating to Statutes, be read as including the power to contract to grant a lease. It was contended that such power was a necessary and essential adjunct to the power to grant a lease, and should, therefore, be read into the Statute. It does not appear to us to be essential to the proper exercise of a power to lease that the lessor should also have power to enter into a contract to lease. Even in the case of guardians and managers of minors it has been distinctly laid down by the Judicial Committee that it is not within their competence to bind the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property [Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin (1)] The contract in that case was found to be for the benefit of the minor, and it would presumably have been within the competence of the Manager to purchase. In our opinion the powers granted by Statute to managers of an encumbered estate should be at least as strictly construed. We are unable to hold that the power to grant leases given to the Manager by the 17th section of the Act included the power to enter into an executory contract like the present, and this question in our opinion should be decided against the appellants.

The third question is, whether there was a completed agreement upon which a suit for specific performance can be based. The terms offered by the appellants on the 26th November 1908 were undoubtedly accepted by Sir Andrew Fraser on the 30th November. But the respondents contend that the appellants' consent to those terms was conditional and that the conditions were never fulfilled. The conditions were those enumerated in the concluding paragraphs of the letter of the 26th November already quoted. The instructions sent to the Government Solicitors on the 30th November also show that Sir Andrew Fraser intended these conditions to be complied with, although it is noticeable that he treated the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh as the Manager of the Estate, when in fact this was not the case. This misapprehension on his part may account for the fact that the real Manager took no part in the negotiations. Another inaccurate statement in the same part of the same letter is that the estate was being managed by the Court of Wards. It seems probable that the appellants were aware on the 26th November that an agreement by Sir Andrew Fraser alone might not be sufficient legally to bind the estate, and, therefore, stipulated that before they themselves should be bound a formal agreement should be prepared and executed by the proper officer authorised to deal with the estate as well as by the Raja of Palganj and, lastly, themselves.

There is a long series of decisions, beginning with Ridgway v. Wharton (2) in 1857 up to modern times, the effect of which is stated by Lord Parker (as he afterwards was) in the case of Von Hatzfeldt Wildenburg v. Alexander (3). "It appears to be well settled by the authorities," says that learned Judge, "that if the documents or letters relied on as constituting a contract contemplate the execution of a further contract between the parties, it is a question of construction whether the execution of the further contract is a condition or term of the bargain or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will in fact go through. In the former case there is no enforceable contract, either because the condition is unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract. In the latter case there is a binding contract and the reference to the more formal document may be ignored."

The present case appears to us to fall within the first alternative of the first class of cases considered by Lord Parker, where the law will not enforce the contract because the condition subject to which the consent is given is not fulfilled. For the reasons already mentioned, we think the proper construction of the agreement is that the appellants were quite willing to agree to a lease on the terms mentioned provided the Manager of the estate would execute a formal agreement on those terms. We do not lose sight of the fact that this point only arises on the assumption that the Manager was bound by the acts of Sir Andrew Fraser, a hypothesis which, as already stated, we are unable to accept. But even so the circumstances were peculiar, and whatever may have been the real reason it seems to us that the appellants regarded the execution of the formal agreement by the Manager as a condition precedent to their own consent. That condition has so far been unfulfilled. The formal agreement was never prepared, much less executed by the persons named. It was argued, however, that the condition imposed was one introduced in favour of the appellants, and that they would be entitled to waive it, and had in fact waived it as their subsequent conduct in connection with the survey and other matters shewed. The case of Hawksley v. Outram (4) was relied on for this proposition. In that case a term was introduced into a contract which was clearly in favour of the purchaser alone. It bound the vendor of a business not to carry on a similar business within a certain radius. It was found to be in restraint of trade and, therefore, unenforceable. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the purchaser in whose favour the clause was interested could waive it and claim performance of the contract omitting the objectionable clause. That case is merely an authority for the proposition that where a completed contract provides for the insertion in a contemplated conveyance or lease of terms which cannot legally be enforced, either party may waive this part of the bargain if those terms are solely for his benefit, and claim specific performance of the rest of the contract. It was not decided upon the question of whether an agreement had been come to but whether a concluded agreement could be enforced. It is difficult to see how the principle there enunciated can be applied to the facts of the present case, where the question is whether there was a completed contract by which both parties were bound. If one party says: "I agree to certain terms provided a certain condition shall hereafter be fulfilled," and the other party consents, in our opinion it does not lie within the competence of either party to waive the condition without the consent of the other. But even if the principle referred to in Hawksley v. Outram (4) can apply to a case like the present, we think the condition insisted on by the appellants was not one which was for their benefit alone. This question was considered in Lloyd v. Nowell (5). There the plaintiff wrote a memorandum which he signed and sent to the defendant in the following terms:—

"Subject to the preparation by my Solicitor and completion of a formal contract, I am willing to sell to you lease of 365 Camden Road, for a term of twenty-eight years at a rent of £110 per annum, you paying me £500 premium for same and also paying the cost of new lease.—£100 paid (and receipt hereby acknowledged) as conditional deposit. The balance to be paid 1st day of January 1895, and possession given on completion. Plants and conservatory flowers to be included in price named."

The defendant on receiving it wrote thereon "Accepted" and subscribed his name. The defendant, having afterwards refused to complete, the plaintiff sought specific performance. It was there held that such a stipulation was not for the benefit of the vendor alone. It was equally to the advantage of the purchaser to see and consider the formal contract and to have the position defined before final acceptance. It was further held that the stipulation as to the preparation by the Solicitor and completion of a formal contract was one which was a condition precedent to consent. "That provision," said Kekewich, J., "seems to me to go to the root of the contract, and not to be such a stipulation as the vendor may waive, for the purpose of insisting on performance of the contract without it." In our opinion the same reasoning applies with equal force to the present case, and there is in the circumstances which have arisen no complete and binding agreement which can be enforced. It was argued that Sir Andrew Fraser and those associated with him had themselves waived the stipulation by allowing the survey to proceed and allowing the Solicitors to prepare a draft lease. It is sufficient to say we can see no force in this contention. The Solicitors' instructions were to prepare a draft agreement embodying the terms stipulated. Why this was not done, but a draft lease prepared, does not appear, but a perusal of the draft shews that there remained much to be done by way of delimiting the area to be leased. There had already been disputes about the delimitation laid down by the Deputy Commissioner, and it would require more convincing evidence than anything we can find in the record to prove that there was a mutual waiver of any of the stipulations in the agreement.

Whether a suit would lie on behalf of the Digambari sect of Jains by the substituted plaintiffs in a representative capacity it is not necessary, having regard to the above findings, to decide. But it seems to us that it is extremely doubtful whether the Digambaris as a body acquired any right to sue which could be enforced on their behalf by the present plaintiffs under the provisions of Order I, rule 8. The rule deals with procedure only and creates no substantive rights of suit. The Digambari Jains are not a legal entity. The substituted plaintiffs are not the legal representatives of those with whom the contract was originally made, and, unless it can be shewn that all the Digambari Jains individually acquired rights under the contract, a suit brought on their behalf by individuals in a representative capacity would not lie. We do not wish to base our decision on the determination of this question nor is it necessary to do so, but for the reasons already given on the other points we think this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 1212 OF 1918.

October 1, 1919.

Present :—Sir Abdur Rahim, KT., Officiating Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar.

GADI NEELAVENI—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER

versus

MARAPPAREDDIGARI NARAYANA REDDI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. IX, r. 13—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Jurisdiction to vacate decree apart from provisions of rule—Inherent power of Court, scope of, extent of.

A Court has no power apart from the provisions of rule 13, Order IX, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside an ex parte decree made by itself. [p. 851, cols. 1 & 2.]

Somayya v. Subbamma, 26 M. 599 and Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami, 14 Ind. Cas. 823; 22 M. L. J. 284 at p. 296 (1912) M. W. N. 332; 11 M. L. T. 280, overruled.

Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar, 18 Ind. Cas. 360; 24 M. L. J. 235; 13 M L. T. 140; (1913) M. W. N. 165, followed.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—Most of the cases where the Court exercises its inherent power relate to cases of an incidental or ancillary character, though it is not to be understood that the inherent power of the Court is limited to such cases, for that would be unduly limiting the scope of section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. But there is no inherent power in a Court to set aside an ex parte decree by summary procedure and the power of the Court in that connection is limited to the circumstances mentioned in Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. The inherent power of the Court should be exercised not capriciously or arbitrarily, but ex debito justitiæ on sound general principles and not in conflict with the intentions of the Legislature. [p. 851, col. 1; p. 850, col 2]

Per Oldfield, J.—Although statutory enactments, expressed in affirmative language, may sometimes be construed as having a negative implication, such implication must be a necessary and reasonable one. It is impossible to presume that the provisions of Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code contain an imperfect statement of the law on the very definite topic with which the rule deals, viz., the provision of a summary procedure for the re-opening of ex parte proceedings. [p. 851, col. 2.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Section 151, Civil Procedure Code, must be construed, not as empowering a Court to exercise powers which it never possessed, but as preserving to it those powers which it has been in the habit of exercising and which, by oversight or failure to specify, have not been particularised in the Statute. The section has been introduced for the simple reason that no Code can exhaustively deal with the procedure for exercising every power which a Court of justice is competent to exercise, and the language of the section shows that it should be availed of only where a power which has been exercised has not been provided in the Code. [p. 853, cols. 1. & 2.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif at Tirupati, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 244 of 1918, in Original Suit No. 623 of 1917.

FACTS.—On an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte, the Judge ordered that though he was not satisfied with the explanations given in the affidavit, he was setting the ex parte order aside having regard to the amount at stake and the relations of the parties, etc.

On application in revision against the order before Seshagiri Aiyar and Odgers, JJ.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—The Code of Civil Procedure is exhaustive of what it deals with. The only provision for cancelling orders passed ex parte is contained in Order IX, rule 13. There is no power outside it. But there is a conflict of decisions in this Court following upon a dictum of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Somayya v. Subbamma (1), Gopala Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai (2) follows Somayya v. Subbamma (1). But see Durga Bakhsh v. Mahabir (3) and Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4). See also Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami (5), Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (6), Karuppayee v. Chinna ammal (7).

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and T. Kumaraswamiah, for the Respondent.—The Courts have been given inherent power for the express purpose of affording relief where the technicalities of the sections do not strictly permit. See Nalludaroo v. Hari Kissen Rathi (8), Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (9), Lalta Prasad v. Ram Karan (10) (Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 156 of 1918.)

Farther a Court is not bound to pass an ex parte decree. And so if the Court is satisfied that the nature of the case would prohibit such an adjudication, the Court will be perfectly justified in rectifying what would otherwise be a mistake of the Court.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The facts are not in dispute. An ex parte decree was passed in the suit. The defendant applied to have it set aside under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. The District Munsif found that the allegations in the affidavit were not true. In effect, his finding would not have enabled him to set the decree aside under rule 13. He, however, held that as the amount involved was heavy and as a person who stood surety for the defendant on a previous occasion refused to continue to be surety, the decree should be set aside.

Against this order a civil revision petition under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, has been preferred to this Court. Mr. Chandrasekhara Aiyar contended that a Court has no power apart from the provisions of rule 13 to set aside an ex parte decree. Mr. Ramadoss, on the other hand, argued that the conditions mentioned in the rule are not exhaustive and do not restrict the inherent power of the Court to set aside ex parte decrees.

In this Court, the view contended for by the learned Vakil for the respondent is supported by Somayya v. Subbamma (1) and Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (6). There are observations in Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami (5) and in Gopala Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai (2) which support the view taken in Somayya v. Subbamma (1). On the other hand, there is a considered judgment of this Court by two Judges in Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4) which dissents from Somayya v. Subbamma (1). Karupayee v. Chinnaammal (7) is also inconsistent with Somayya v. Subbamma (1). We have refrained from discussing decisions of the other Courts, as in our opinion it is desirable that there should be consistency on a question of procedure in the same Court. In these circumstances and with a view to enunciate for the benefit of the Mofusil Courts a clear and consistent view on the question, we think it desirable that the following question should be referred for the opinion of the Full Bench.

"Has a Court power, apart from the provisions of rule 13, Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside an ex parte decree passed by itself?"

This petition came on for hearing on the 26th and 27th of August 1919 in pursuance of the Order of Reference to the Full Bench.

GADI NEELAVENI v. MARAPPAREDDIGARI NARAYANA REDDI.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—There is no scope for the exercise of inherent power, if any, when there is an express remedy provided by the Code. A decree is passed ex parte owing to the non-appearance of the defendant, and sufficient cause for non-appearance alone would justify a Court in setting such decree aside. Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4). In Somayya v. Subbamma (1) such extra power to set aside ex parte orders and decrees is held to exist. It has been approved in Gopala Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai (2). See also Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (6). Esmail Ebrahim v. Haji Jan Mahomed (11) following the case in Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein (12) dissents from Somayya v. Subbamma (1). Karuppayee v. Chinnaammal (7) conflicts with Gopala Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai (2).

Inherent power is not to be exercised when there is an express remedy provided by Statute. Muthiah Chettiar v Bawa Sahib (13). The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on what it declares is the law. Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (14). Inherent power is to be exercised only in matters not dealt with by the Code. Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (15). See also Tyeb Beg Mahomed v. Allibhai (16), Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (17), Fakhr-ud-din v. Ghafur-ul-din (18), Lalta Prasad v. Ram Saran (10). Nalladuroo v. Hari Kissen Rathi (8) follows Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (9) where, however, the power invoked was different in kind. See also Civil Revision Petition No. 495 of 1915 (unreported).

In the present case, the application purports to have been made under Order IX, rule 13. There is no invocation of inherent power.

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and T. Kumaraswamiah, for the Respondent.—The passing of a decree ex parte on the non appearance of the defendant is not obligatory on the Court. The word in rule 6 of Order IX is 'may', thereby leaving the matter to the discretion of the Court. Hence the reversal of an ex parte decree or order so passed is also within the discretion of the Court.

Section 108 of the Code of 1882 has been held to contemplate cases other than those specifically mentioned in it. Somayya v. Subbamma (1). Order IX, rule 13, states the same rule without change. Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami (5). It does not cover all cases of non-appearance. For instance, a party's Pleader is not a voluntary agent of the client. The non-appearance of such Pleader cannot be taken as the non-appearance of the party, who cannot compel the Pleader to appear.

Express invocation of inherent power is unnecessary, its exercise being in the Court's discretion.

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM. OFFG. C. J.—The question referred to us in this case, which is in these words: "Has a Court power, apart from the provisions of rule 13, Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside an ex parte decree passed by itself?" has been fully discussed before us and I shall shortly express my opinion. Upon an application made to him under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, the District Munsif, while holding that it was not proved that the summons was not duly served or that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, set aside the ex parte decree passed against the respondent, observing "looking, however, to the heaviness of the amount involved and the relationship subsisting between the parties and looking at the unwillingness of the present surety to continue his obligation, I shall allow the petition as a special case and give him a chance of contest." I should say that, even if the Court had inherent jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree on grounds other than those mentioned in rule 13, it could have no jurisdiction to do so arbitrarily and on fanciful grounds, such as those mentioned in the District Munsif's judgment. Section 151 says: "Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court." An order, such as in this case, could not, by any stretch of language, be described as being necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. This section, as is well known, was inserted in the Code of 1908 in accordance with a number of decisions in which the inherent power of the Court ex debito justitiæ was recognised.

Order IX, rule 13, provides a special summary remedy for a particular class of cases mentioned therein, i. e, those in which summons was not duly served on the defendant or in which he was prevented for any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing; and the jurisdiction is limited to the Court by which the decree was passed. To hold that such a remedy can be extended to cases other than those mentioned would be going against the clear intention of the Legislature and cannot be brought within the scope of any inherent power recognised by section 151 or the rulings on the subject.

The opposite view was propounded, so far as it appears, for the first time by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Somayya v. Subbamma (1), approved by Sundara Aiyar, J., in Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami (5), and also to some extent supported by what appears to be a casual dictum of White, C. J., in Gopala Row v. Maria Susaya Pillai (2). On the other hand a Division Bench of this Court in Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4), consisting of Sankaran Nair, J., and myself, dissented from the ruling of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., and there is really nothing useful to be added to the reasons given in Sankaran Nair, J.'s judgment, in which I concurred.

So far as there was any attempt made in Somayya v. Subbamma (1) to construe the provision of the Civil Procedure Code, it seems to me that to read the first part of the rule, that the defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside, as conferring a jurisdiction to pass such an order in cases other than those mentioned in the rest of the section is apparently fallacious and unsound. The main argument of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., is based upon grounds of hardship in certain class of cases mentioned in the judgment and which in his opinion would not be covered by Order IX, rule 13. It has been pointed out in Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4) that in all those cases remedy could be obtained either by appeal or by review.

The question of inherect jurisdiction of the Court was elaborately discussed in Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (15). There Woodroffe, J., has collected a number of cases in which the Court's inherent power has been exercised. He says: "It has thus been held that, although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned, the Court has an inherent power ex debito justitiæ to consolidate; postpone pending the decision of a selected action; and to advance the hearing of suits; to stay on the ground of convenience cross-suits; to ascertain whether the proper parties are before it; to enquire whether a plaintiff is entitled to sue as an adult; to entertain the application of a third person to be made a party; to add (section 32 not being exhaustive) a party; to allow a defence in forma pauperis; to decide one question and to reserve another for investigation, the Privy Council pointing out that it did not require any provision of the Code to authorise a Judge to do what in this matter was justice and for the advantage of the parties; to remand a suit in a case to which neither section 562 nor section 556 applies; to stay the drawing up of the Court's own orders or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require; to stay, apart from the question whether the case falls within section 545, the carrying out of a preliminary order pending appeal; to stay proceedings in a lower Court pending appeal and to appoint a temporary guardian of a minor upon such stay; to apply the principles of res judicata to cases not falling within sections 13 and 14 of the Code and so forth." (See page 932.) There is no instance, so far as I am aware, of an ex parte decree being set aside upon an application made for that purpose in cases other than those coming under rule 13 of Order IX. I do not say that that is a conclusive argument against the existence of such a power, but it is certainly significant to show that this does not stand on the same footing as the cases mentioned. Most of the cases where the Court exercised its inherent power related to orders of an incidental or ancillary character. I do not, however, wish to suggest that the inherent power of the Court mentioned in section 151 is to be limited to cases in which it can be shown to have been already exercised, for that would be unduly limiting the scope of section 151. But I have no hesitation in holding that there is no inherent power in a Court to set aside an ex parte decree by summary procedure, but that the power of the Court in such connection is limited to the circumstances mentioned in Order IX, rule 13. I am, therefore, of opinion that the ruling in Somayya v. Subbamma (1) is wrong as held in Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4) and the answer to the question referred to the Full Bench must be returned in the negative.

OLDFIELD, J.—That our Courts possess inherent power is recognized in section 151, Civil Procedure Code. But the exercise of the power in the particular form in which it is invoked, must be justified in each case in the manner authorized by authority. To justify it directly by reference to a previous course of actual instances of its exercise with or without the endorsement of appellate tribunals will seldom be possible, when it is disputed; and generally the legitimacy of its exercise must be tested with reference to the principles, which authority has prescribed. Those principles have been laid down in judgments, which have so far met with no criticism and which I respectfully follow, by Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., in Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (15) and Nanda Kishore v. Ram Golam Sahu (19), as being that the inherent power shall be exercised, not capriciously or arbitrarily, but ex debito justitiæ on sound general principles and not in conflict with the intentions of the Legislature. I may refer also at this point to my judgment in Muthiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (13).

To apply this to the present reference, I look in vain for any mention of general principle in the authorities relied on by respondent; and necessarily so, when the whole argument in them is directed towards supporting the exercise of the Court's power by reference to the special hardship of the circumstances in the particular case before it. In one of the three cases relied on by respondent in which the matter was considered fully, Lalta Prasad v. Ram Karan (10), the Court, in exercising its inherent power to pass orders necessary for the ends of justice, attempted no further definition of any general principle as covering its action In the others, Somayya v. Subbamma (1) and Aadyapadi Ramanna Upda v. Krishna Udpa (6), the hardship to the party and the merits of the case he was debarred from advancing were statedly the only tests applied.

The second condition above referred to for the exercise of the inherent power, the absence of conflict between such exercise and the Statute Law, was, no doubt, considered at length in Somayya v. Subbamma (1), the conclusion being against the importation into sections 103 and 108 of the Code then in force, corresponding with the present Order IX, rules 8 and 13, of negative words to the effect that the Court shall not set aside a decree passed ex parte except in cases, in which the party or his Vakil was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. The principle relied on is that, although statutory enactments, expressed in affirmative language, may sometimes be construed as having a negative implication, such implication must be a necessary and reasonable one. But as regards necessity it must be remembered that "the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and on any matter specifically dealt with by it the law must be ascertained by interpretation of the language used by the Legislature" [per Woodroffe, J., in Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (15)]. It is, in my opinion, impossible to presume that the rules under consideration contain an imperfect statement of the law on the very definite topic, with which they deal, the provision of a summary procedure for the re-opening of ex parte proceedings.

GADI NEELAVENI v. MARAPPAREDDIGARI NARAYANA REDDI.

And in fact, with all respect for the opinion of the learned Judges responsible for the decisions of this Court last referred to, there is nothing unreasonable or inconvenient in this conclusion. Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., attached weight to the absence of any means of displacing an unjust ex parte decision, if the inherent power could not be utilised for the purpose. But I think that he overestimated the frequency, with which review proceedings would be barred by Order XLVII, rule 2; he certainly overlooked the possibility of a suit by the aggrieved party, when his absence was due to the fraud of his opponent: vide Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Fran Nath Roy (20); and he must have been misled by the decisions in Gilkinson v. Subramania Ayyar (21) and Caussanel v. Soares (22), which were afterwards overruled by Sadhu Krishna Ayyar v. Kuppan Aiyangar (23), into making the erroneous statement that the circumstances in which the ex parte decree was obtained could not be considered in an appeal against it. As regards hardship resort to the Court's inherent power is unnecessary when, as it seems to me, the wording of rules 9 and 13 is wide enough to cover all ordinary cases of default, including those instanced by Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in which the circumstances of a failure to appear are in question; and it may be suggested that in them the matters referred to by him, the merits of the defaulter's case (if indeed they can safely be assumed at that stage in the proceedings) and the grave consequences of an ex parte disposal, can in fact be considered in order to an estimate of the honesty of the allegations as to the existence of sufficient cause. But in cases, in which the existence of a sufficient cause for the default is not alleged or is disproved and those matters alone are in question, I do not see how they can justify interference, if uniformity and certainty are to remain the foundations of our procedure.

Taking this view, I concur in the opinion proposed in the judgment just delivered.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The very full discussion which this case has received has made it clear to me that we must overrule Somayya v. Subbamma (1) and Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami (5). In both these decisions the reasons given for holding that there must be a power outside Order IX, rule 13, ex debito justitiæ are not convincing. For a defendant against whom a decree ex parte has been passed the following remedies are open:—(1). He can bring a suit to set aside the decree if there has been any fraud in the obtaining of it [see Radha Raman Shaha v. Pran Nath Roy (24) and Khagendra Nath Mahata v. Pran Nath Roy (20)]. (2) He can prefer an appeal against the decree itself; there can be no doubt that the powers of the Appellate Court are large enough to enable it to set aside the ex parte decree if there has been a miscarriage of justice. The Appellate Court is not confined to the grounds mentioned in Order IX, rule 13, in dealing with the matter. (3). The aggrieved party can file an application for review; and the grounds for such an application would be wider than those covered by rule 13. (4). He can also file an application as provided by rule 13 to set aside the ex parte decree. The second clause, "or when he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing," is comprehensive enough to cover most cases of default of appearance. A suggestion was made that the default of a guardian of a minor defendant will not be covered by this clause. There is no reason for limiting the language of the clause in that way. Further, there is the authority of Kesho Pershad v. Hirday Narain (25) against this suggestion. Analysing what has been said by the two learned Judges in Somayya v. Subbamma (1) and Muruga Chetty v. Rajasami (5) it seems to me that nothing that they suggest as a possible grievance will not be covered by any of the four classes of remedies mentioned by me. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no reason for invoking the inherent power of the Court in respect of this matter.

On the question of a Court possessing

(24) 28 C. 475 (P. C.); 5 C. W. N. 757.
(25) 6 C. L. R. 69.

such a power I have great doubts. It was held by Lord Macnaghten in Rangoon Botatoung Company Limited v. Collector, Rangoon (26) that a right of appeal must be given by the Statute and should not be inferred from the inherent power of an Appellate Court. In this Court and in other High Courts it has been held that a right of review is not inherent in the Court but must be given by the Statute. A right to set aside an ex parte decree belongs to the same category as an appeal or a review. Because in either case the effect of entertaining the proceeding is to vacate a decree which has been obtained by one of the parties to the suit. To interfere with such a substantial right, it is not enough to invoke the inherent power of a Court. It was argued that as it has been held in a case to which I was a party, following Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan v. Allahabad Bank Limited (27), that there is an inherent power of remand, it must be logically held that there is an inherent power to set aside ex parte decrees. I do not think that the two positions are pari materia. A right of remand is implied in the right to hear the appeal. An Appellate Court which has got jurisdiction to reverse the judgment of the lower Court must have power to set it aside and to direct a new trial. It is because of the idea that this power of remand is implied in the right of appeal that the Legislature in the Act of 1882 by section 564 put restrictions upon that inherent power. By the Act of 1908 that restriction was removed. Therefore, the possession of an inherent power to remand does not argue that there is a power to set aside an ex parte decree on grounds other than those mentioned in Order XIII. Moreover, I am clear that section 151 must be construed, not as empowering a Court to exercise powers which it never possessed, but as preserving to it those powers which it has been in the habit of exercising and which by an oversight or by failure to specify have not been particularised in the Statute. Section 151 has been introduced for the simple reason that no Code can exhaustively deal with the procedure for exercising every power which a Court of Justice is competent to exercise; and the language of the section shows that it should be availed of only where a power which has been exercised, has not been provided for in the Code. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (14), the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive upon the matters for which it provides. This language was employed no doubt with reference to section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is equally applicable to Order IX, rule 13. The Legislature has provided a mode by which ex parte decrees can be set aside. As I pointed out already, there is no necessity for invoking the principle of the remedy ex debito justitiæ, because in all conceivable cases, excepting a case like the present in which the lower Court has made no attempt to conform itself to any rule or precedent, the party aggrieved can obtain justice by resorting to the proper procedure.

As regards cases in the other High Courts I do not propose to deal with them at any length. In Tyeb Beg Mahomed v. Allibhai (16), to which Jenkins, C. J. was a party, it was held that a Small Cause Court had inherent power in cases of eviction to set aside ex parte decrees. I do not think that decision covers the present case. On the other hand in Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein (12) and in Esmail Ebrahim v. Haji Jan Mahomed (11) a different view was taken. Fakhr ud din v. Ghofur-ud-din (18) was a case of an appeal and not of an application. In Lalta Prasad v. Ram Karan (10) one would have thought that the application could be sustained on the grounds mentioned in rule 13. Bibi Tasliman v. Harihar Mahto (17) is another case in which it was not necessary to have appealed to the inherent power of the Court. But none of them are cases in which the question of setting aside an ex parte decree directly arose. In Hukam Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (15) the learned Judges point out that there was by the practice of the Court an inherent power which should not be regarded as having been taken away by the Code of Civil Procedure. That is a typical instance of the application of section 151 of the Code. Speaking for myself, I am zealous of preserving the inherent power of the Court to render justice between party and party. But I am clear that where there is no proof that the power has been exercised by Courts, and where the Legislature has given that power with limitations, Courts are not at liberty to disregard the limitations. For these reasons I am of opinion that Venkatarama Aiyar v. Nataraja Aiyar (4) takes the right view of Order IX, rule 13, and that the answer to the question must be in the negative.

It is necessary, however, to state that the question relates only to applications for setting aside ex parte decrees and not to any other remedy which a party may have.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment—Hatchita executed in lieu of old one, effect of.

Where a borrower executes a hatchitta in respect of a debt in substitution of one previously executed in respect of the same debt, the hatchitta so executed amounts to a fresh acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Hooghly, dated April 24, 1917, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated June 29, 1914.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the first defendant against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 24th April 1917, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah. The point raised in the appeal is this: Whether the hatchitta in question was in this case a fresh acknowledgment under the terms of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act; and, if it was not, namely, if it was given after the period of limitation had expired, whether it was a fresh promise to pay within the meaning of section 25 (3) of the Indian Contract Act? It is obvious that the second question can only arise in the event of the first one being decided in favour of the appellant. Now, what the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found is this, that there was, in fact, an intermediate hatchitta between the original hatchitta and the hatchitta of 1308. That is quite clear and the learned Judge, in my opinion, has held that that hatchitta was in the ordinary course handed over to the defendant, and that it was being withheld by him. It is quite clear that what the learned Judge meant by his judgment was that that hatchitta, if produced by the defendant, would not have supported his case, and, therefore, he held that the present hatchitta of 1308 was a fresh acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. If those facts are right, it is not disputed, having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (1), that the present hatchitta was a fresh acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. In that view, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1284 OF 1918.

August 26, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

NEMANNAKUDRE—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

versus

ACHMU HENGASU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENTS.

Aliyasantana Law—Ejaman, removal of, suit for—Jurisdiction of Court—Declaration of unfitness of next senior member and appointment of one lower down, validity of—Grounds for removal.

In a suit for the removal of the ejaman of an Aliyasantana family the Court has jurisdiction not only to remove him for good reasons but also to declare the next man to be unfit and pass on the succession to his junior. [p 857, col. 1; p 855, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction to remove the ejaman is founded on his forfeiture of his office on gross misconduct rendering him unfit for it [p. 857, col. 1.]

Moral unfitness is an equally good reason for exclusion as mental or physical deficiency. [p. 856, col. 1.]

Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan, 38 Ind. Cas. 513; 32 M. L. J. 323; (1917) M. W. N. 185; 5 L. W. 392; 21 M. L. T. 329, not followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 217 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 184 of 1917 on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the District Munsif, Udipi, in Original Suit No. 133 of 1916.

FACTS.—Suit (1) for the removal of the 1st defendant from the Ejamanship of an Aliyasantana family in South Kanara, (2) for a declaration that the 2nd defendant, who is the next senior member, is unfit to be the Ejaman, and (3) that the first plaintiff is entitled to become the Ejaman. The lower Appellate Court gave a decree. The second defendant alone appealed.

Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Appellant.—The Courts cannot grant a declaration denying a right which a person has by birth to succeed as Ejaman of an Aliyasantana family, when the prior Ejaman dies or renounces or is removed from his Ejamanship. The principle enunciated to this effect in Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (1) in regard to Karnavans of Malabar Tarwads applies to a case like this. By granting such declarations, the Courts would be framing a scheme of management for the family and disturbing the natural order of devolution. The Courts have no such powers. See Pazhavathil Mavilaputhia Veetil Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (2).

Secondly, a suit for removal or for a declaration of unfitness can lie only if the defendant has assumed office. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not intended to be used for prospective declarations: 11 M. L. J. (Journal portion) 129 at p. 136. In Kunhan v. Sankara (3) the Karnavan was removed for a misconduct of his while an Anandravan.

Strong reasons must be proved before a person can be deprived of his birthright. Nothing has been shown in the present case.

Mr. B. Sita Rama Rao, for the Respondents.—It is found as a fact that the appellant persisted in ignoring the rights of the other members of the family including the plaintiffs. That has been held to be sufficient for the removal of a Karnavan. Thimmakke v. Akku (4).

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The first point argued in this second appeal has not been taken in the appellant's grounds of appeal, but as it involves a question of principle, and as it strikes at the root of the jurisdiction of the Courts if the appellant succeeds on it, we have allowed it to be argued.

I agree with my learned brother that what the Courts were asked to do in this suit was not to frame a scheme or to exercise any undefined authority of selecting the most suitable person to manage the affairs of this family, but to remove the present Ejaman for mismanagement and at the same time to declare that the next in order of seniority was unfit to hold the vacant office, and I fail to see any reason for supposing that Civil Courts have no power to grant such a declaration.

Speaking for myself, I am averse to putting any narrow limitations on the power of Courts to do all that is needful to settle the disputes of the parties in all civil matters that come up to be adjudicated upon. To hold otherwise would be to deprive these tribunals of authority to make a final settlement of opposing contentions. In Pachavathil Mavilaputhia Veetil Chindan Nambiar v. Kunhi Raman Nambiar (2) the Full Bench had no doubt about the Civil Court's power to remove from the Karnavanship for misfeasance a person who had attained the position by a course different from the ordinary course, namely, by a family agreement.

In Kunhan v. Sankara (3) acts of misfeasance committed before the appellant became de jure Karnavan were held to be a sufficient cause for removing him, the learned Judges observing "whether the misfeasances were committed either solely or in conjunction with another, in either case the interest of the Tarwad requires that the management of its affairs should not be entrusted to him."

Moral unfitness seems to me to be an equally good reason for exclusion as mental or physical deficiencies.

On the second point, the findings of the lower Courts, as I understand them, are that the 2nd defendant was guilty of fraud and collusion and as these are findings of fact which we must accept, the result is that the declaration of unfitness follows as a natural consequence. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—This second appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiffs as members of an Aliyasantana family to remove the 1st and 2nd defendants as unfit from the management of the affairs of the family and to appoint the 1st plaintiff as Ejamanthi and give her possession of the family properties. Defendants had denied that plaintiffs were members of their family and had in 1905 in conjunction with their mother, now deceased, divided all the family properties among themselves by a registered partition deed, excluding the plaintiffs altogether, and had dealt with them, each with his share as his own. Though the 1st defendant was the Ejaman and the 2nd defendant was the senior Anandravan of the family at the date of suit, they did not look upon themselves as members of an undivided family at all but each managed the properties he obtained on partition. Hence the form of the prayer to remove both of them from the management.

The learned Subordinate Judge gave a decree as prayed for. The 2nd defendant alone has appealed to us, and it is contended on his behalf that Courts have no power to interfere with the right of the senior Anandravan to succeed when the Karnavan is removed and that in any case there are no proper grounds for excluding the 2nd defendant from Ejamanship in this case.

The first contention is a general one and it is sought to be supported by an observation of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Cheria Fanji Achan v. Unnalachan (1), where the learned Judge quoted with approval some passages from an article in XI M.L.J. (Journal portion) 129 at p. 136. The effect of those passages is no doubt to show that the Court has no power to exclude the eldest Anandravan from succeeding when a Karnavan is removed. But it may be pointed out that the learned Judge's remarks are obiter dicta and with all respect to the learned Judge I am unable to accept his view.

To understand the bearings of the question raised, it may be useful to consider how the Court acts in removing a Karnavan: That a Court can remove a Karnavan for good reason is well established by numerous decisions beginning from the decision of the Sudder Adalat in 1 Sud. Dec. 118 and is not now disputed. The authorities do not, however, make it clear on what basis the power is founded. It seems to me, however, that it is based on the theory that the institution of Karnavanship in a Tarwad is intended for the benefit of the Tarwad and the continuance of a Karnavan in office is dependent on a proper discharge by him of his obligations to the family. When he fails to do his duties and his retention in office becomes injurious to the interests of the Tarwad, he forfeits his office. But as he could not be removed by act of parties without his own consent, the aid of the Court is sought to do it by its decree. If the right to Karnavanship is an absolute right inherent in the eldest member and is independent of his obligations, it is difficult to see how the breach of those obligations can affect the right, whatever other remedies there may be. I do not consider that the removal of a Karnawan for his misdeeds is by way of punishment at all. The Civil Court will hardly be the tribunal for it. The Court adopts the remedy of removal as necessary to protect the interests of the Tarwad. It is true that it is not ever failure to perform an obligation that would lead to the removal of a Karnavan but only such misconduct as would make it necessary in the interests of the Tarwad to have him removed. As observed in Kunhan v. Sankara (3), the question to be kept in view is whether the interests of the Tarwad require that the management of its affairs should not be entrusted to him. The jurisdiction to remove him seems to me really to be founded upon his forfeiture of his office on gross misconduct rendering him unfit for it.

If this view is right, I do not see any difficulty in Courts declaring, on the prayer of the parties, that the next person is unfit to assume the office of Karnavan. If circumstances exist which show that he could not or would not perform his obligations to the family, why should not the Court prevent him from assuming office if it is in the interests of the family to do so? It is easy to suggest conditions when the senior Anandravan may be totally unfit to become a Karnavan. He may be an idiot or a lunatic or, in the words of Dr. Ormsby in his "Outlines of Marumakkathayam Law", "a person physically or mentally incapable of conducting the affairs of the Tarwad or he may be of so depraved moral character that the interests of the Tarwad may require that its affairs should not be entrusted to him." Is the Court then to tie its hands and allow him to become the Karnavan? I think not. To hold that the Court has no power in such a case to exclude him will be to nullify the very object of removing the obnoxious Karnavan. I consider that in the same manner that the Court can remove a Karnavan it can, in the same suit, declare the next man to be unfit and pass on the succession to his junior.

It is quite true that the senior Anandravan succeeds to the office of Karnavan by virtue of his seniority and not by any appointment to it. But his rights are no higher than those of the Karnavan who is in office and who is entitled to continue in it till his death: nevertheless Courts have felt no difficulty in removing him from office. It is mere hypercriticism to say that the Court has no power to appoint a Karnavan and, therefore, it cannot choose a person for the office. This is no doubt strictly so, but what the Court does is not to appoint any person it likes but the person next in rank to the Karnavan and the excluded senior member or members that person really succeeds by virtue of his position on the exclusion of his seniors, and his appointment is really a superfluity. The question whether a power to exclude exists does not depend on the existence of a power to appoint, for it is conceded that a power to remove a Karnavan exists, though the power to appoint him may not.

The most important objection to excluding the senior man from Karnavanship is that in doing so you judge from his conduct as a junior member his unfitness to be a Karnavan without allowing for the possibility that he may turn over a new leaf when he is given the responsibilities of the Karnavan's office. No doubt there is force in this argument, but I do not consider that it necessarily applies in every case or that it necessarily tells against the existence of the power to exclude. It shows that great care should be taken in judging of such a person's unfitness and that the power of exclusion should be used only sparingly and only when it is clearly necessary to do so in the interests of the Tarwad. Each case has to be judged on its own facts and no hard and fast rules can be laid down.

The Courts have in many cases exercised the right of considering the fitness of the person who will succeed on the removal of the Karnavan and have barred his succession when there is good reason to do so. No doubt a senior man should not be passed over in favour of his junior on any ground of preferance on account of the greater fitness of the latter, but only on the ground of his own unfitness. Where, however, good grounds exist, I am not prepared to say that the Courts have acted beyond their powers in barring the succession of the next senior man when removing the Karnavan from office. The first contention of the appellant, therefore, fails.

The next contention is one on the merits. The 2nd defendant is found to have conspired fraudulently with his brother in denying the membership of the plaintiffs and excluding them from all participation in the enjoyment of the Tarwad properties. He has, in fact, by getting up the partition deed, attempted to put an end to the family itself and he has taken the family properties which fell to his share as his own and subsequently alienated some of them to strangers. His conduct was thus entirely against the interests of the Tarwad and there is no indication that he is likely to behave properly in the future. In these circumstances I am not prepared to say that the lower Courts were wrong in removing him along with his brother.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Custom or Personal Law—Brahmins—Presumption—Burden of proof—Criteria for determining whether a community follows custom—Brahmins of Kungiana, Tahsil and District Ludhiana.

In a case of disputed succession or alienation on the ground of custom, the universal rule is that a Brahmin is presumed to be governed by his personal law, and if he alleges a custom contrary to the rules of that law, he is bound to prove by cogent and clear evidence that he is governed by such custom. [p 859, col. 2.]

The question of custom is, primarily, a question of fact and in each case has to be decided with reference to the particular circumstances alleged and proved. [p. 859, col. 2.]

The most important criteria for determining whether a particular community has adopted and follows agricultural custom are,—

(a) whether the particular community forms a compact agricultural community by itself;

(b) whether their source of livelihood is solely or almost solely agricultural;

(c) whether the members of the community have given up their old customs under the personal law and have adopted the customs of their agricultural neighbours in matters of alienation and succession. [p. 860, col. 1.]

The Brahmins of Kungiana, Tahsil and District Ludhiana, are governed by Hindu Law in matters of alienation and succession. [p. 861, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

ABDUL RAOOF J. (June 12, 1919).—The facts which have given rise to this second appeal may be stated as follows :—Harbans, minor son of Krishna, Brahmin, the plaintiff in the case, and Chetu Brahmin, defendant No. 1, are admittedly descended from a common ancestor. Kahna and Atra, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, are Jats and mortgagees of certain lands from the defendant No. 1. Chetu held certain lands situated in a village called Kungiana which had descended to him from his ancestors. Out of this land he mortgaged 15 bighas 14 biswas 1½ biswansis to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 under a deed, dated the 4th of September 1913. The plaintiff, alleging himself to be a collateral of Chetu, having a reversionary right in the property, brought the present suit on the ground that Chetu, being a sonless proprietor, could not make a transfer so as to be binding on the plaintiff after his death. He prayed for a decree that the mortgage deed shall not be binding on him. It was further alleged by him that the land was ancestral and that Chetu had no necessity to borrow Rs. 2,600 and make the mortgage affecting the interest of the plaintiff. Chetu admitted the claim, which was contested by the other defendants on the following grounds, namely, that the father of the plaintiff having been adopted by Jhaban, he had ceased to be the reversionary heir of Chetu; that the plaintiff and the mortgagor, being Brahmins, were governed by the ordinary Hindu Law and were not entitled to take advantage of the customary law applicable to agriculturists; that Chetu, being a full proprietor, had unrestricted, power of alienation; and that the mortgage had been executed for valid necessity and on payment of full consideration. The ancestral character of the land was admitted and the fact of the plaintiff being the next reversioner was also admitted, but as stated above, his right to institute the suit as the reversionary heir of Chetu was denied on the ground that his father had been adopted by Jhaban.

The principal issue in the case was whether the plaintiff and Chetu were governed by agricultural custom and whether the plaintiff could maintain the suit. The other important issue was whether the mortgage had been made for necessity and consideration. These are the two issues with which we are concerned in this appeal. Almost all the other questions arising in the case are no more of any importance, nor were they raised or discussed before us at the hearing.

The Court of first instance on the first issue came tc the conclusion that the plaintiff and Chetu were governed by agricultural custom in matters of alienation and succession. On the question of necessity and consideration it held that necessity had been established to the extent of Rs. 1,100 out of Rs. 2,6C0 said to have been borrowed under the mortgage. It accordingly gave a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff to the effect that on the death of Chetu, the mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 shall not be binding on the plaintiff except to the extent of Rs. 1,100, on payment of which he shall be entitled to get possession of the mortgaged land as the reversionary heir of Chetu.

From this decree Atra and the sons of Kahna deceased, namely, Hira and Sardara, appealed to the lower Appellate Court impleading the plaintiff and Chetu defendant as respondents to the appeal. The lower Appellate Court, having taken a different view from that of the first Court on the first issue, set aside the decree of that Court and held that plaintiff was not entitled to succeed and that his suit must be dismissed. On the other points raised before it the lower Appellate Court generally agreed in the decision arrived at by the Court of first instance. His suit having been dismissed, the plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal and has filed the necessary certificate required by the Punjab Courts Act. Three pleas have been taken in the memorandum of appeal. The first which is the most important plea raises the question of custom and the remaining two pleas raise questions as to two items of consideration, namely, Rs. 500 out of Rs. 1,400 and Rs. 70,

On the question of custom elaborate arguments have been addressed to us on both sides and a large number of cases have been cited and discussed. The question of custom is primarily a question of fact and in each case has to be decided with reference to the particular circumstances alleged and proved. The authorities cited, therefore, can hardly be said to be an absolute guide for the decision of this particular case. No doubt certain guiding principles are laid down in the reported cases which will help us in arriving at a conclusion in this case with reference to the facts admitted or proved. One principle appears to be clearly enunciated in almost all the reported cases, namely, that in a case of disputed succession or alienation on the ground of custom the universal rule is that a Brahmin is presumed to be governed by his personal law and if he alleges a custom contrary to the rules of that law, he is bound to prove by cogent and clear evidence that he is governed by that custom. Having this principle before our mind we have to see in this case whether the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing that Chetu and he are governed by the customary rule relating to alientions by agriculturists and they are no more subject to Brahmanic law in this respect. Close to the village Kungiana in which the land in dispute is situated there is a village called Rangian where according to the plaint Chetu and plaintiff reside. The history of the colony of Brahmins to which the plaintiff and Chetu belong appears to be this. A Brahmin, whose name is unknown came and settled in the village and took possession of a part of the area. He was turned out by the Rajputs and the area remained uncultivated for a time. In Sambat 1869 when Maharaja Ranjit Singh became the ruler the area was restored to one Harkishan Singh Brahmin with the help of the authorities and he was left in possession of three ploughs. It appears from the facts found that the descendants of Harkishan Singh have continued to cultivate this area, which has been known for some time as Brahmin Majra. On the evidence it is clear that some of the Brahmins have their houses in Mauza Rangian and live there while a few of them possess houses in Kungiana where their agricultural land is situated,

HARBANS LAL v. ATRA.

The area of the land is almost 100 bighas. These being the circumstances under which the small Brahmin community has been living, it is to be determined whether they have adopted and followed the agricultural customs of their agricultural neighbours, the Jats, who own and cultivate almost the entire village Kungiana.

The learned Judges of the Chief Court, in deciding the numerous cases reported in the several volumes of the Punjab Record, have tried to set out various criteria for the decision of questions of this kind and have applied them to the special facts of those cases. The most important of those criteria are :—(a) whether the particular community forms a compact agricultural community by itself ; (b) whether their source of livelihood is solely or almost solely agriculture ; (c) whether the members of the community had given up their old customs under the personal law and had adopted the customs of their agricultural neighbours in matters of alienation and succession. We refer only to some of the incidents, which are by no means exhaustive. Of course, the most important piece of evidence in a case would be the evidence of actual instances showing the exercise of rights according to the recognised custom of agriculturists.

In this case, however, this class of evidence is wholy wanting. From the evidence it appears that the Brahmins have been in the habit of making transfers by way of sales and mortgages, but no instance has been quoted in which a suit for setting aside an alienation was ever brought. There being no direct evidence of this kind, we have to decide the question in dispute with regard to circumstantial evidence establishing one or more of the criteria set out in the several reported cases. One single circumstance has been very strongly relied upon on behalf of the plaintiff in this case, namely, that the Brahmins of Kungiana have been earning their livelihood through agriculture and their patti has been recognised as a separate patti under the name of Brahmin Majra. There is no doubt that in the jamabandi of the village the patti is described as above; but it has not been proved that they have their own lambardars. According to the evidence the community is very small and the area cultivated by it is insignificant. Necessarily, therefore, they have continued to supplement their income from Brahmanic dues known as dirt received from their jajmans. They still wear the sacred thread called the janeo. In addition to this there is a statement made by the mother of plaintiff which goes to show that the father of the plaintiff was adopted by one Jhaban and in consequence of this adoption he did not get a share in his natural father's property. This is a very strong piece of evidence to show that the Brahmins have continued to be governed by their personal law (Dharam Shaster).

The Court of first instance, relying upon the decision in Nanak Chand v. Bisheshar Nath (1), decided the question in favour of the plaintiff. That was a very strong case, the facts of which were entirely different from those of the present case. We find no similarity between the two cases. In that case a mass of documentary evidence was filed showing that the Brahmins of Gurdaspur had actually adopted the agricultural custom. The learned Judges who decided the case went into the evidence thoroughly and came to the conclusion that independently of the reported authorities there was clear evidence that the Brahmins in that case had adopted and acted upon the agricultural custom of the other agricultural communities. At page 22 of the report, we find the following passage: "The facts and considerations set out above, when taken collectively, warrant the conclusion that Sarsut Brahmans of Gurdaspur must be treated as agriculturists, and that the onus which lies upon the plaintiffs of proving that in matters of inheritance they are governed not by Hindu Law but by custom is, under the circumstances of the case, comparatively light. It now remains to be seen whether the onus has beendischarged."

Having made this remark, the learned Judges proceeded to deal seriatim with the documentary evidence in the case and refer to the entries in the wajib-ul-arz of the Mauza, to the riwaj-i-am of the Tahsil prepared at the settlement, to the statement of custom as embodied in the English Abstract of the Customary Law of Gurdaspur, and finally to the specific instances of exclusion of daughters and their sons by collaterals in matters of succession.

This class of evidence unquestionably was very strong and the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had succeeded in discharging the burden which lay upon them. The plaintiff in this case has not produced any such evidence in support of his case. This ruling, therefore, has no application to this case. A large number of rulings have been quoted and discussed in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and we do not think it necessary to go over the ground in our judgment. We will, however, refer to two of the cases cited by the learned Counsel of the respondents, which in our opinion fully apply to the facts of this case. The facts of the case reported in Gangu v. Kanshi Ram (2) are thus stated at page 86*:—

"It is not denied that the plaintiffs' family owns only 152 kanals of the total village area, 4,158 kanals; that they are entered in the settlement record as malikan maqbuza, having no share in the shamilat, and that they are not entirely dependent upon agriculture, but that they derive part of their income from the offerings made at a Gurdwara in the village which is in charge of the plaintiffs' family."

It was urged by the appellants' Pleader in that case that the lands belonging to the Sodhi Khatris in the village were constituted into a separate patti known as Patti Sodhi, and that this showed that they formed a compact community of their own and must be presumed to have adopted the customs of the Sikh Jats among whom they had settled.
